fore, become a tenant from month to month. But in that event the terms of the lease could only be changed by giving the notice in the mode prescribed by the sixth section, for the time commencing after the expiration of the first month of the tenancy from month to month. The notice in this case was given before the holding over commenced, and, therefore, before there was any tenancy from month to month, and it was premature. Besides, the defendant did not hold over with the consent of the landlord. On the contrary, by giving the notice of change of terms before a tenancy from month to month commenced, and following it up by demand of rent, and immediately thereafter of possession, he repudiated the holding over on the original terms, and the claims of the respective parties were adverse, and actually hostile from the very moment of the expiration of the specific terms alleged, and there never was a tenancy from month to month upon the state of the facts alleged in the complaint.

Upon the facts alleged in the complaint, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover five hundred dollars per month rent after the expiration of the term stated. But the complaint states facts sufficient to justify a recovery of the possession of the premises, and consequently states a good cause of action for some relief, although insufficient to justify all the relief asked and obtained.

The evidence upon the question as to whether defendant was in fact a tenant at all of the plaintiff, is very much in conflict, and we think the finding justified. At all events, the case clearly falls within the rule which prohibits us from disturbing the finding of the referee on that issue.

The provision of the statute conferring jurisdiction upon County Courts in actions to recover the possession of premises held over by tenants against the consent of the landlord, are constitutional, for reasons given in Caulfield v. Stevens, 28 Cal. 118; see, also, Courtright v. Bear River Company, 30 Cal. 573.

Under the views expressed it is unnecessary now to decide the point, whether the provisions of the sixth section of the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act of 1863, providing for changing the terms of the lease by serving notice of such intention on the part of the landlord in the mode therein prescribed, are constitutional or not. For the purpose of this decision we assume them to be constitutional.

The judgment, as we have seen, gives relief to which the plaintiff is not entitled upon the facts alleged in the complaint, and the judgment must be reversed, unless the plaintiff will consent to a modification.

Judgment and order denying a new trial reversed, unless the plaintiff and respondent shall, within fifteen days, file in this court a stipulation, in writing, consenting that the judgment may be modified so as to reduce the judgment for damages to seventy-five dollars; but, upon filing stipulation as herein provided, the judgment will be modified in accordance therewith.

OLIVER IRWIN v. A. P. TOWNE AND SAMUEL H. TOWNE.

TITLE IN EJECTMENT.—In ejectment, where both parties claim under a common source of title, it is unnecessary for the court to investigate the question of title unless the plaintiff's deed includes the demanded premises.

BETTER TITLE IN EJECTMENT.—Where both parties in ejectment rely on paper title the possession of the defendant cannot be disturbed unless the plaintiff shows a better title.

DEED — DESCRIPTION BY RIGHT ANGLE.—A deed which contains a call describing a boundary as a line commencing one hundred yards below the mouth of a certain creek (naming it) and to run at right angles with the creek, there being nothing on the face of the deed to indicate that the creek does not run in a perfectly straight course, or that a straight line drawn along the thread of the stream would not intersect the beginning point of the contested line, is not void for uncertainty on its face in respect to such line. A perpendicular line drawn from this base would answer the call in the deed.

IDEM — BASE FOR RIGHT ANGLE, HOW ESTABLISHED.—In order to run a line at right angles to a tortuous stream a straight line must first be established as a base. This can be done only by ascertaining and reducing to a straight line either the general course of the stream, from its source to its mouth, or that portion of the stream which shall appear to have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time of the execution of the deed.

CONSTRUCTION OF DEED — LOCATION OF LINE.—A deed from J. to I. contained a call which referred to a creek "running from San Rafael to the Bay of San Francisco." It appeared that the stream above the Village of San Rafael was a running stream but a part of the year, and was not known by the same name as the part below; also, that below the village the stream is navigable a portion of the distance from its mouth. The stream is referred to in another portion of the deed as "the creek running from San Rafael to the Bay of San Francisco;" held, that the parties making the deed intended to refer to the portion of the stream below San Rafael only, and that a straight line drawn from the head of the stream to its mouth would establish a base line for a right angle called for in the deed.

Argument for Appellant.

IDEM — DESCRIPTION BY ANGLE AND BY DIRECTION.— I. claimed title under a deed which described a boundary line as "commencing on a line at a point one hundred yards below the mouth of the creek running from San Rafael to the Bay of San Francisco, on the easterly side of said creek; thence running at right angles to said creek to the highest ground on the ridge;" and T. claiming under another deed a line as commencing "at a point about one hundred yards below the mouth of San Rafael Creek, and running thence northwesterly, or at right angles with the said creek, to a point on the top of the main ridge." There being no visible monument called for at the end of the line in T.'s deed to fix its location; held, that the term northwesterly," used in his deed, is less definite than the call in I.'s deed to run at right angles.

LINE NAMED IN DEED.— The terms "northwesterly," "northerly," "northeasterly," etc., are only construed as "due north," "due northwesterly," etc., when such construction is necessary to prevent a failure of the deed for want of certainty, and must yield to another more definite description in the deed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Marin.

The parties owned adjoining tracts of land, and the controversy was as to the location of the boundary line between them.

The plaintiff's deed described the line thus: "Commencing on a line at a point one hundred yards below the mouth of the creek running from San Rafael to the Bay of San Francisco, on the easterly side of said creek; thence running at right angles to said creek to the highest ground on the ridge."

The description in the deed to the defendants was as follows: "Commencing at a point about one hundred yards below the mouth of San Rafael Creek, running thence northwesterly, or at right angles with the said creek, to a point on top of the main ridge."

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. McM. Shafter, for Appellant.

The fact is, the creek is east and west, i. e., its general course, and a right angle is north. The law of this description is: the natural boundary, a right angle to the general course of the creek, must be preferred. "The rectangular figure will be preferred in preference to any other in fixing localities." (Massie v. Watt, 6 Cranch, 148; Holmes v. Trout, 7 Pet. 171.) The term "at right angles" to a stream is not unfrequently used in conveyances, and is not regarded as uncertain. It is ordinarily construed to be a right angle to the course of the stream, so far as the same is directly under the eye and observation of the parties. (Winthrop v. Curtis, 3 Greenl. R. 103.) The Court state the question to be, whether a certain line is to be ascertained "by measuring at all points at right angles with the general course of the river;" and further say: "Probably meaning according to its direction from the place at which the admeasurement was made." If this word "place" is held to mean the very "point," then Towne would take next to no land at all.

The case cited was decided by taking right angles from every part to get the parallel. Our case requires this angle from the whole creek, that is, from its general course. (Keith v. Reynolds, 3 Green. R. 363.) At "right angles" to a crooked brook is spoken of by the Court as being appropriate and operative words in a deed, and no doubt are expressive as to the certainty of such descriptive call. (Craig v. Hawkins' Heirs, 1 Bibb. Ky. 53.) "Down stream one mile, and northwardly for quantity;" held, that the mile was a direct line, and that northwardly only fixed the side of the stream where the land lay; and that the side line should be at right angles to the base. And it is said that "the law, the rules of construction, will give figure to the survey without violating the natural import of the expression." Northward is only meant to mean north by necessity. (Calk v. Stribling, 1 Bibb. 123.) Same points; and "definite call at right angles not to yield to an indefinite call northwardly." There was a strong effort made to compel "right angles" to yield to "northwardly." Or, in other words,

Argument for Respondents.

"that the expression at right angles must be so taken as to render it consistent with the expression northwardly." But it certainly would be a singular construction to make a definite call yield to one which is indefinite. (Clarke v. Markham, 2 A. K. Marshall, 163.) San Rafael Creek had a well-known signification, and was right under the eyes of the parties when the deed was made.

B. S. Brooks, for Respondents.

It is not a fact that the creek is east and west, i. e., its general course, and that a right angle is north. The course of the creek itself is a matter of doubt, dependent upon the construction of the term. It will be different in each of the following cases: 1. Taking the stream at low water; 2. Taking it at ordinary high water; 3. Taking it at Spring tides, or what is the same thing, taking in the salt marsh through which it meanders; 4. Taking the creek from its head to the mouth; 5. Taking the creek from the head of tide water to the mouth; 6, 7. Taking a line from either to the point one hundred yards below the mouth of the creek; 8, 9. Running either of these lines to a point opposite the middle of the mouth of the creek, and the point from which the line is to run; 10, 11, 12. Taking as the creek that part of it only which is in sight from the point from which, etc., and either respectively at low tide, high tide, or Spring tide, and besides all this, it is impossible to run a line at right angles, of a thing it does not touch. There only remained to take the remaining call of the deed, which was to run "northwesterly," which was clear and certain.

There is no general rule that the rectangular figure will be preferred in preference to any other in fixing localities. That rule, and the authorities cited, apply exclusively to locations or State lands, by virtue of special State laws.

Argument for Respondents.

The term "at right angles to a stream" may do very well when the line touches or starts from the stream, and when there is no other call, and the course of the stream is reasonably near a straight line.

There was nothing in this case to show how far the course of the stream was directly under the eye and observation of the parties, nor where they were when they agreed upon the line, or whether they were upon the land at all, or used a map, which is quite as likely. The element which is called in to determine an uncertainty in the deed is itself quite as uncertain.

In Winthrop v. Curtis, cited by appellant, no such point was in question, and the only point decided was, "a grant of a tract of land extending the space of fifteen miles on each side of the Kennebeck River," is to be located in such a manner as that a point in the exterior line shall be exactly fifteen miles from the nearest point of the river." That is, instead of drawing lines parallel to the general course of the stream, they draw meandering lines, keeping fifteen miles from the stream.

The case of Keith v. Reynolds is to the same effect, and directly against the appellant. If a line parallel to a stream is a crooked line conforming to its meanders, and not a straight line parallel to its general course, it follows that a line at right angles to a stream is not to be drawn at right angles to its general course, but to the stream at the point where it touches.

The cases of Craig v. Hawkins' Heirs, Calk v. Stribling, and Clarke v. Markham, are all decisions in regard to locations made upon State lands by locators under and by virtue of the statute of that State; and even if they touched the point, which they do not, would be no authority.

Manifestly the call for a line at right angles to a crooked stream, which it does not touch, is on its face uncertain, and apparently impossible; while the call "northwest" is clear and certain, and prima facie, it must govern. If this certain call can be construed at all by parol evidence against the interest of the grantee — which I deny — the solution of it would depend upon the examination of a multitude of facts, of indefinite importance; and as to the truth of the evidence, in support of the facts, and as to the persuasive force of the facts themselves, the jury, or the Judge sitting as a jury, and having the advantage of a “view,” alone could judge.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The action was tried by the Court, and no written findings were filed. Judgment was entered for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Both parties claim under a common source of title, the conveyance under which defendants deraign title being prior in time. Each claims that his own deed embraces the premises in controversy, and that the deed of his adversary does not. The defendants being in possession it will be unnecessary to consider their title, unless it appears that the deed to the plaintiff includes the land in contest. He cannot disturb their possession, unless he shows the better title. The first descriptive call in the deed from Jacks and wife to the plaintiff is as follows: “Commencing on a line at a point one hundred yards below the mouth of the creek, running from San Rafael to the Bay of San Francisco, on the easterly side of said creek; thence running at right angles to said creek to the highest ground on the ridge.”

The defendants insist that a line commencing one hundred yards below the mouth of the creek, and to run at right angles with the creek, is incapable of being located with reasonable precision. But there is nothing on the face of the deed to indicate that the creek does not run in a perfectly straight course, or that a straight line drawn along the thread of the stream would not intersect the beginning point of the contested line. In that event a perpendicular line drawn from this base would answer the call in the deed, which is, therefore, not void for uncertainty on its face, in respect to this line. But the proof shows that the creek is exceedingly tortuous throughout its whole course from San Rafael to its mouth, and that, after an abrupt curve towards the north, it enters the bay nearly at a right angle. The tide ebbs and flows in it, and the land on either side is flat and marshy. It further appears that the creek from San Rafael to its mouth is navigable by small craft for a portion of the distance, whilst above San Rafael the stream does not run in the dry season, but during the Winter is supplied by springs rising in the mountains several miles distant. Below San Rafael the general course of the creek is nearly due east and west, whilst above the village the bed of the stream runs in a northwesterly course. The evidence tends to show that at the date of the deeds, under which the parties respectively claim, only that part of the stream which lies below the village was generally called and known as San Rafael Creek, whilst the same term was occasionally, though not generally, applied to that portion of the stream lying above the village.

These being the facts, it is our duty to ascertain, if practicable, what the parties to the deed meant by the phrase, "thence running at right angles to said creek." If we can ascertain the intention, by interpreting the deed in the light of the surrounding circumstances, it is our duty to give effect to it if possible. It is obviously impracticable to run a line at right angles to a tortuous stream, except by first establishing a straight line as a base for the right angle; and this can only be done by ascertaining, and reducing to a straight line, either the general course of the stream from its source to its mouth, or that portion of the stream which shall appear to have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time of the execution of the deed.

I am satisfied, from all the facts, that when these parties referred to the creek "running from San Rafael to the Bay of San Francisco," they intended only that portion of the stream which lies below the village, and had no reference to the stream above the village, which was not generally known or called by the same name, and which was, in fact, a running stream during only a portion of the year. This inference is strengthened by the fact that the stream is referred to in the deed as "the creek running from San Rafael to the Bay of San Francisco," which tends strongly to show that this portion of the creek only was in the minds of the parties. Assuming this to have been the fact, a straight line drawn from the head of the stream at San Rafael to its mouth would establish the general course of the creek; and this line, if protracted until a line drawn at right angles to it will pass through the beginning point of the survey, would establish the right angle called for in the deed, and determine the location of the first line of the survey. This method of locating a line called for in a deed is not free from objections, and it is not to be commended in practice. In some cases it would be impracticable, owing to the difficulty of ascertaining with precision the sources of the stream, or determining with accuracy its general course. But in this case no such difficulties will arise. The stream is short, running almost due east and west, and its head at San Rafael can be easily ascertained, whilst it empties into the bay through a narrow mouth which can be readily identified.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the base for the right angle, called for in the deed, can thus be established with reasonable precision. If the first line called for in the plaintiff's deed be located by this method, it will include a portion, and perhaps the whole, of the land in controversy. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to recover, unless the premises in dispute are included within the deed from the common grantor, under which the defendants claim.

The first descriptive call in that deed commences at the same point called for in the plaintiff's deed, to wit: "At a point about one hundred yards below the mouth of San Rafael Creek, and running thence northwesterly, or at right angles with the said creek, to a point on top of the main ridge." The only variance between this call and that of the plaintiff's deed, consists in the words "northwesterly or," which are added to the description in the defendants' deed. But there is no visible monument called for at the end of this line, to fix its location, and the term "northwesterly," employed in the deed, is less definite and certain than the call to run at right angles to the creek. It is true, that when the term "northerly," "northwesterly," "northeast-erly," etc., are employed to designate a line, if there be nothing else in the deed to fix its location, these terms will be construed as equivalent to a call to run due north, due northwest, or northeast, as the case may be. But this construction is only resorted to to prevent a failure of the deed for a want of certainty in the location of the lines; and such a call must always yield to visible monuments, or to any other description of a line which locates it with reasonable certainty. As we have already seen, a line running at right angles to a creek can be located with certainty and precision; and if it shall be found that a line running due northwest from the beginning point is variant from a line running at right angles to the general course of the creek, to be ascertained by the method already indicated, the latter must prevail, as the more certain of the two descriptions. I am therefore, of the opinion that a line running from the beginning point, at right angles to the general course of the creek from the Village of San Rafael to its mouth, to be determined in the manner above indicated, will be the proper dividing line between the lands of plaintiff and those of the defendants.

OBJECTION OF "EQUITABLE DEFENSE NOT FIRST DISPOSED OF" TO BE FIRST MADE BELOW.—An objection by a defendant that his equitable defense was not first disposed of cannot be made for the first time in the appellate Court.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, Contra Costa County.

This was an action of ejectment originally commenced in the District Court for the Seventh Judicial District, in and for Solano County, to recover a portion of the Suscol Rancho. It was afterwards dismissed as to the defendants Ellis, Cyrus Wilson, and John Wilson, and judgment was taken by consent against defendants Savory and Thompson. The defendant Pierce, in his answer, besides pleading the general issue and plaintiff Hickson's want of interest, referred to and included, by way of cross-complaint, a bill for equitable relief in reference to the same land, which he had previously filed in the Fifteenth District Court for the City and County of San Francisco.

While the case was in this position the Judge of the Seventh District Court caused an order to be entered to the effect that he was disqualified from acting in it, and changing the venue to the Fifteenth District Court for Contra Costa County, where it was tried, and the judgment for plaintiffs against defendants rendered, and motion for new trial denied, as stated in the opinion. Defendants appealed.

M. A. Wheaton, for Appellants.

No connection was made with the title by Hickson; in fact, no evidence at all with regard to him was taken in the case, and the plea of misjoinder of parties plaintiff was well taken by the defendants. (May v. Slade, 24 Texas, 208; Murray v. Webster, 5 N. H. 391; Gerry v. Gerry, 11 Gray, 381; Rhoads v. Booth, 14 Iowa, 575; Vinton v. Welsh, 9 Pick. 87; Grozier v. Atwood, 4 Pick. 234; 1 Chitty's Pl. 66; Worsley v. Worsley, Croke, Eliz. 473; Barrett v. Collins, 10 Moore, 446; Ainsworth v. Allen, Kirby, 145; Leavitt v. Sherman, 1 Root, 159; Jackson v. Richmond, 4 Johns. 483.)

It is true that, at the trial, plaintiffs made an extraordinary offer to dismiss as to the plaintiff Hickson. What was it they offered to dismiss? Not the suit, certainly, for from that he could not be dismissed without dismissing the entire suit. If he went out of court, the joint title, upon which the suit was based, went out of Court with him. Again, to whom was the offer to dismiss made? Was it to Hickson, to the Court, to the defendants, to some third disinterested party, or to the "man in the moon?" The answer is not material, however, because, notwithstanding the offer, he was not dismissed from the suit nor the suit from him.

The judgment was general against the defendants, and Savory and Thompson particularly object to this as a second judgment against them. And, again, no regard was paid to Pierce's equitable defense. It should have been disposed of before the trial upon the plaintiff's title was had. (Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 160; Weber v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 457.)

Wm. S. Wells, for Respondents.

There is no appeal on the part of any other defendant than Pierce, judgment against the others being taken by consent, and their attorney not joining in the appeal.

The record sustains the judgment against Pierce, even without evidence, for the matters set up in the cross-bill, admitted by default, establish as against him adverse possession and ouster, as well as no cause of action or equitable relief. (Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wallace, 187; Hutton v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 475.)

Defendant having taken no objection to any failure of proof as to Hickson, and not having availed himself of the offer on our part, equivalent to a judgment in his favor had he chosen to have taken it, is not entitled to raise the question on appeal. (Marshall v. Ferguson, 23 Cal. 65; Boyce v. Cal. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 473; Larco v. Casaneuava, 30 Cal. 560; Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483; Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 533.)

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

Tormey, Fagan, Lankershim, and Hickson sue Pierce and others in ejectment. Defendant Pierce answers, denying each and every allegation of the complaint, and further specially alleges a misjoinder of parties plaintiff; that plaintiffs Tormey, Fagan, and Lankershim have no joint interest in the premises sued for with plaintiff Hickson. On the trial, plaintiffs, to maintain the issues upon their part, introduced and read in evidence a patent from the United States to Tormey, Fagan, and Lankershim, and oral evidence tending to show that the demanded premises were included within the boundaries of the patent, and that defendant Pierce was in possession of the demanded premises when the suit was commenced. No evidence was offered or given tending to show that plaintiff Hickson ever had any interest in the demanded premises, or right of possession thereof, either jointly with the other plaintiffs or otherwise. Judgment was rendered in favor of all the plaintiffs against defendants Pierce, Savory, and Thompson. Defendant Pierce moved for a new trial upon the ground, among others, of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision and judgment, and specifies, in support of this ground, that the evidence failed to show any title or right of possession in plaintiff Hickson. The Court denied the motion for new trial, and defendant Pierce appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The judgment in favor of all the plaintiffs is not supported by the evidence, and is erroneous.

The point made by respondents that defendant Pierce, having failed to interpose objections to the patent at the time it was offered as evidence, on the ground that it did not tend to establish title or right of possession in all of the plaintiffs, thereby waived all objection to the judgment, on the ground that no evidence was offered or given tending to show any title or right of possession in one of the plaintiffs, is not well taken. Such objection to the patent as evidence, if taken by defendant, would have been invalid. The patent was pertinent and proper evidence to establish the title and right of possession of the three plaintiffs to whom it was issued, and defendant could not presume that this was the only evidence plaintiffs would introduce or offer tending to establish title or right of possession in each of the plaintiffs.

Appellant's objection that his equitable defense was not first disposed of seems to be first made in this Court, and comes too late. The record does not disclose the action of the Court below upon defendant's equitable defense, whatever it may have been, nor any objections to such action by defendant.

MINING LAW.—EXTENSION OF FLUME ON ONE'S OWN CLAIM NOT A NUISANCE.—Where defendants owned and possessed a hydraulic claim on Dutch Ravine, into which their flume emptied, and plaintiff, being the owner of a claim below, dug a ditch, commencing on defendants' claim but below their flume, for the purpose of appropriating the water discharged therefrom, and thereupon defendants extended their flume further down on their own claim but so as to prevent such appropriation by plaintiff: held, that defendants had a right to such extension, though there might be a question, as to whether it served any useful purpose or not, and that it could not be abated by plaintiff as a nuisance.

RIGHT OF OWNER TO EVERY PORTION OF MINING CLAIM.—Evidence that a portion of a mining claim is not valuable for mining purposes is not admissible, on general principles, to prove that the owner of the claim has no right to hold such portion.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

The plaintiff, in his complaint, claimed that the extension of the flume, referred to in the opinion, and which was near the Town of Newcastle, in Placer County, was constructed to annoy and injure him, and prayed that it might be abated as a nuisance and for damages. Defendants set up their ownership of the claim upon which their flume was extended, and plaintiff's unlawful interference therewith; denied that the extension was a nuisance, and averred that it was a proper and necessary means of working their claim. The cause was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for one hundred dollars damages. Judgment was entered for such damages, declaring the extension of the flume to be a nuisance, and directing it to be abated and removed by the Sheriff. Defendants appealed.

T. B. McFarland and E. I. Craig, for Appellants.

The possessor of public land, being the owner as against all the world, except the General Government, is, as such owner, entitled to the undisturbed enjoyment of it, no matter how valueless it may be; and he alone has the right to determine how he can most profitably use it. (Doran v. Central P. R. R. Co., 24 Cal. 257; Tartar v. Spring Creek Co., 5 Cal. 397; Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 320; McKeon v. Bisbee, 9 Cal. 141; *Merritt v. possession of land for agricultural or any other purpose. (English v. Johnson, 17 Cal. 107; Atwood v. Fricot, 17 Cal. 37; Esmond v. Chew, 15 Cal. 142.)

There was error in refusing defendants' instruction and in the charge given by the Court below, because said refusal and charge went upon the erroneous theory that although defendants were the owners and in the possession of the land, still the plaintiff might enter upon it, construct a ditch upon it, divert the water away from it, and compel defendants to take down their flume which they had erected upon their own land, if, in the opinion of the jury, defendants were not injured thereby. Such a doctrine is in direct conflict with the authorities, and destructive of the very idea of private property.

Again, the Court below decided that the flume of defendants, erected on their own land, was a nuisance, not because it injuriously affected the land of anybody else, but because it prevented plaintiff from coming upon defendant's land and using it as his own. This is a new definition of a nuisance.

Fellows & Norton, for Respondent.

The question involved in this case — and it is a very important one — is simply whether a person who at one time located a mining claim, and afterwards worked it out, has the right for all time to come, as against everybody except the Government, to prevent the ground so located for mining purposes to be used for other purposes by other parties, not in any way interfering with the proper working of the mining claim.

The doctrine invoked by appellant in reference to the rights of the owner of land to its undisturbed enjoyment, no matter how valueless it may be, may be very good in its place, but it has no application to this case, for the defendants do not claim to own the land. The instructions refused by the Court, as well as those given, all proceed upon the Opinion of the Court — Temple, J.

These rulings and instructions are assigned as error, upon an appeal from the judgment on the part of defendants.

Ordinarily, when one takes possession of land he is presumed to appropriate it for all purposes. Thus, when one takes possession of a tract for farming purposes, and incloses it, it would not be competent for another to show his right to dig for coal upon it by proving that he does not interfere with the possession necessary for farming purposes on the part of the farmer. Very frequently, however, possession is taken of land for purposes purely temporary, and under circumstances which do not indicate a claim of ownership. Of such a character, doubtless, is the claim of the locator of a mining claim. The possession itself is generally constructive as to a large portion of the mining ground, and is established by the rules and regulations of the district, or by the custom of miners.

The character of the possession necessary to work mining claims will vary with the nature of the mines, the mode adopted in working them, and, perhaps, with the character of the country. Mining claims are limited in extent; and it must be presumed that it was not intended that the first locator should prevent the working of contiguous claims further than is necessary. At the same time he ought not to be controlled in the mode he may wish to adopt in working his claim further than is necessary for the common good. The rights which the owner of one claim will require with reference to other claims differ with the locality and the character of the claims, and are usually regulated by mining rules or local mining customs. Some mining customs of a general nature, which have been repeatedly recognized by judicial decisions, may be said to have become a part of the common law of the land; but I know of no such general custom, upon the point involved in this case.

Upon general principles the fact that the possession of the defendants was a qualified possession, taken for a specific purpose, would not justify the intrusion of the plaintiff. The flume was extended for the avowed reason that it was necessary to enable the defendants to work their claims to advantage. In the absence of some custom which would restrict their right of possession, they ought not to be deprived of that right, because another may be able to convince a jury that such extension is really not beneficial to the working of their mine. If this could be done, another might deprive them of a portion which was still left, and they would not be able to work their claim according to their own judgment, but might be compelled to vary their operations to suit the whims of witnesses and jurors.

The evidence that the ground was not valuable for mining purposes could not be admissible, on general principles, to prove that defendants had no right to hold it. If the title to mining ground could be defeated by such evidence, no claim which was not paying could be considered secure. If parties are allowed by the mining regulations to include within their claims land outside of that which they expect to work, we must suppose, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that it is for the convenience of working the claims, and that its possession is necessary. The evidence was, therefore, improperly admitted, and the instructions given were erroneous.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

LOUIS BRUCK AND ISADORA B., HIS WIFE, v. REASON P. TUCKER ET AL.

TITLE AS DEFENSE, AFTER GENERAL ISSUE PLEADED.—Where, in an action of ejectment, the defendant pleads the general issue and then sets up title in himself, the plea of title amounts to nothing whatever, and may be omitted.

IMPROPER DEFENSE IN EJECTMENT.—B. sued T. in ejectment, claiming title under a devise of Bale; T. plead the general issue and interposed another defense setting out an alleged agreement by Bale, before his death, to convey the premises (as soon as a Government survey could be obtained to survey the land) to K., the grantor of T., provided K. would bind himself to reserve certain timber for Bale, not to keep wild cattle on the place, and to do all the work he could at Bale's sawmill at current wages. Held, first, that as a defense at law the pleading is not to be supported; second, that as a defense in equity it was insufficient, because it failed to show by direct and proper averment that the consideration Bale was to receive was adequate in amount, and not disproportionate to the value of the lands to be conveyed.

EQUITABLE DEFENSE IN AN ACTION AT LAW.—In setting up an equitable defense in an action at law the defendant becomes an actor and the defense interposed a pleading in equity, the sufficiency of which—in matters of substance, though not in point of mere form—is to be determined by the application of the rules of pleading observed in Courts of equity, when relief is sought there in cases of like character.

SUIT FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF AGREEMENT TO CONVEY LANDS.—In a suit for a specific performance of an agreement to convey lands, the agreement must be one which in all its features appeals to the judicial discretion as being fit to be enforced in specie, as having been obtained without any intermixture of unfairness.

CONSTRUCTION OF WILL A QUESTION OF LAW FOR THE COURT.—The construction of a devise, like that of a contract in writing, is always a matter of law, and is therefore never to be submitted to a jury.

DEVISE IN WILL CONSTRUED.—Where a deviser, having but one flour mill, made a devise in these words: "To my daughter, Lolita, the flour mill with the land appertaining thereto—a half league more or less:" held, that the language was sufficiently accurate in expression and certain in its application to the subject of the devise.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Napa County.

Statement of Facts.

Dr. E. T. Bale, who was a grantee from the Mexican Government of a rancho in Napa Valley, called Carne Humana, or Coljolwanoc, died in 1849, leaving a will in which there is this clause:

"Para mi hija Lolita [Isidora]. El molino de harina y todo el terreno, etc., que pertenece a dicho molino, media legua, mas o menos."

[To my daughter Lolita. The flour mill and all the land, etc., which pertains to said mill, a half league, more or less.]

The rancho contained four leagues of land, and stretched about fifteen miles up Napa Valley, the Napa River running through its whole length. At the upper end of the rancho was a tract sold to Fowler; next below that was a tract sold to Kilburn, bounded on its lower side by a creek; then came the tract of land in controversy; and below that a tract sold to Kellogg, bounded on the north by a creek. Below Kellogg was another tract, in which stood a sawmill, and this tract was given by the will to another daughter, Mrs. Krug. Below that was land sold to Hudson.

The two small tracts were bounded similarly, that is, by the exterior boundaries of the rancho, on two sides, and above and below by land which had been sold to other parties.

The whole tract upon which the flour mill stood, bounded on each side by the lateral limits of the rancho, and north by Kilburn and south by Kellogg, contained eleven hundred and sixty-nine acres, while a half league contains twenty-two hundred; that is, the entire tract does not contain the quantity which is called for by the will.

A portion of this tract, about two thirds of the land on the west side of the river, was at the date of the will and up to the time of his death, in controversy between Bale and Kilburn, on one side, and one Barnett on the other; and the defendant Stark was on the part on the east side of the river.

On a former trial the case was submitted to a jury, who were in effect charged that if they were in doubt as to the intent they should find for the defendants, which they did. On appeal, the judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court, and the cause remanded for a new trial. (See 32 Cal. 424.) At the new trial the plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appeal.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Hartson & Burnell and Thomas P. Stoney, for Appellants, argued that it was the intention of the testator to convey only the tract on the west side of the river, below the Barnett line, containing about two hundred acres; and that the question was one of fact — of boundaries — to be determined by the jury.

B. S. Brooks and W. W. Pendegast, for Respondents, argued that the testator intended, and that it is the true construction of the will, to convey the whole tract; also, that the question involved is one of law, of construction simply, to be determined by the Court.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The controversy in this case grows out of a devise contained in the will of Dr. Bale, made and published in 1849, in the following words: "To my daughter, Lolita, the flour mill, with the land pertaining thereto — a half league, more or less."

The complaint, not verified, is in the form usual in actions for the recovery of lands. The defendants pleaded the general issue, and, also, as a second defense, set up title in themselves — which second defense, it may be here remarked, in view of the general issue already pleaded, amounted to nothing (Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 176), and might, therefore, as well have been omitted.

The cause was before this Court upon a former appeal some four years since (32 Cal. 424), when the judgment the defendants had then obtained below was reversed here, and the cause remanded for a new trial. Upon its return to the Court below, the defendants added to their answer a third defense, as follows:

“ And for another and further answer, defendants allege that the premises described in the complaint are a portion of the Bale Rancho, formerly granted by the Mexican Government to Edward T. Bale, the father of Isadora B. Bruck (one of the plaintiffs), and under whom the plaintiffs claim title thereto; that on the 15th day of March, 1847, and while the said Bale was seized in fee, and possessed of the premises, he, the said Bale, and one R. L. Kilburn, entered into an agreement with one E. Barnett, for a valuable consideration by them received from said Barnett, for the conveyance to said Barnett of the premises in possession of the parties defendant in this suit, and also an adjoining tract of land then owned and possessed by the said R. L. Kilburn; which said agreement was in writing, in the words and figures following, to wit: ‘ Know all men by these presents, that we, Edward T. Bale and R. L. Kilburn, of Napa, California, are held and firmly bound unto E. Barnett, of the same, for the following, to wit: We oblige and bind ourselves, our heirs and assigns, for value received, to make and deliver to the said Barnett a good quitclaim deed for a certain tract or parcel of land, on which he now resides, as more particularly specified by the metes and bounds as admitted by us before John Conn and Peter Storm, as soon as Government surveyors can be obtained to survey said land, provided the said Barnett shall bind himself to conform to the following agreement: that all the timber, except fencing timber, and such other as shall be required for improvement on said land, be reserved for us; and that no wild mares or other wild cattle be kept on the place, or in the vicinity, by said Barnett or his assigns. The said Barnett, moreover, binds himself to do all the work he can at the sawmill at current wages. Given under our hands and seals this 15th day of March, 1847. (Signed) EDWARD T. BALE, R. L. KILBURN.' ”

“ That the said Barnett thence continued in possession of the premises described in the complaint, now in the possession of the defendants in this suit, until some time after the death of said E. T. Bale, and that the said Barnett duly performed all the covenants and conditions in said instrument provided to be performed by him, and became and was entitled to a conveyance of the tract so agreed to be conveyed, embracing the lands now in possession of defendants, before the death of said Bale; that said Barnett subsequently thereto, and before the commencement of this suit, conveyed to the grantor of the defendant, Reason P. Tucker, all his right, title, and interest in and to said instrument, as well as in and to the premises described therein, including the premises now in the defendant John S. Stark, as aforesaid. And defendants allege that the said Reason P. Tucker thereafter, for a valuable consideration, acquired title to the same, and as successor in interest of said Barnett, is entitled to the premises against the said Bale, or any person claiming the same under him. That the plaintiffs claim title to the premises under the will of said Bale, the father of the plaintiff, Isadora B. Bruck; and defendants allege that at the time of the making of said will the said Barnett was in possession of the premises, lawfully holding the same under the said instrument herein set forth, and that the said Bale was not seized of any estate in the premises which he could devise to his said daughter.”

The answer concluded with a prayer that the defendants might have separate trials and recover several judgments for costs. To this third defense a demurrer, interposed by the plaintiffs was sustained.

Before passing to the consideration of other points in the case, we will dispose of the one arising upon the action of the Court below had upon the demurrer to the third defense, and in so doing will consider that defense in two aspects: First, as a defense at law; second, as an equitable defense interposed in an action at law.

As a pure defense at law it cannot be supported upon any rule of pleading known to us. As merely challenging the alleged title of the plaintiffs, it, in view of the general issue already pleaded, amounted to nothing; not only alone for the reasons before assigned in reference to the second defense, but for others. It was a flagrant infringement of the fundamental rule that the facts are to be carefully distinguished, in pleading, from the mere evidence of the facts (Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 411); it was, therefore, to be demurred to, or even stricken out on mere motion. (Patterson v. The Keystone Mining Company, 30 Cal. 360.) It was probably interposed in this form because of the views of this Court expressed on the former appeal (in response to a petition for a rehearing), in the following language: "In the opinion delivered in this action we do not hold that any part of the mill tract passed to the devisee which the deviser conveyed, or contracted to convey, in his lifetime. The will, of course, operated only upon so much of the mill tract as legally and equitably belonged to Dr. Bale at the time of his death." The proposition of law maintained in this view was, that if it should be established on the new trial that Dr. Bale had parted with the equitable title to any portion of the lands which might otherwise be held to be included in the mill tract mentioned in the devise, then, as to such portion, the title of the plaintiffs claimed under the devise would be thereby, to that extent, defeated. The mere equity, if shown to be out of the testator, whether vested in the defendants themselves, or outstanding in a stranger to the action, would, under the views then expressed, here defeat the otherwise sufficient title of the plaintiffs under the devise, with like effect as if it had been shown that the testator had conveyed the legal title in his lifetime. The result was, that under the general issue pleaded, the defendants were already at liberty to prove that Dr. Bale had parted with the equitable title to the lands in controversy, or some part thereof, whether in favor of the defendants or of a stranger to the action, made no sort of difference, and there was, therefore, no excuse for the interposition of the third defense in that aspect.

Second — If we look upon that defense as the allegation by the defendants of an equity upon their part to be relieved against what must, in this aspect of the case, be regarded as the legal title of the plaintiffs, it is, obviously, lacking in numerous matters of substance indispensable to the sufficiency of such a pleading. Of these, however, we will select but one — that it fails to show by direct and proper averment that the consideration which Bale and Kilburn were to receive was adequate in amount, and not disproportioned to the value of the lands they were to convey.

Since the enunciation of the views of this Court in relation to the setting up of an equitable defense in an action at law in the cases of Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 272, Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 660, Blum v. Robertson, 24 Cal. 127, Downer v. Smith, 24 Cal. 114, etc., it must be considered as settled, that in interposing such a defense the defendant becomes actor, and the defense interposed a pleading in equity, the sufficiency of which — in matters of substance, though not in point of mere form — is to be determined by the application of the rules of pleading observed in Courts of equity when relief is sought there in cases of a like character. Though, as we have seen, the equitable defense, as here interposed, does not in form conclude with a prayer for affirmative relief touching the matters therein alleged, nor look to a decree, that the plaintiffs convey the legal title to the defendants, it nevertheless seeks to estop the plaintiffs by reason of the supposed equities of the defendants, as the beneficiaries of the Barnett bond therein set forth, from the further prosecution of their action at law, and so, in scope and substantial effect, it amounts to an application made to the Court, in the exercise of its equity powers, for a decree of specific performance of the executory contract to convey the lands mentioned in the bond.

It is well settled that an application made to a Court of equity to obtain relief of that character does not proceed ex debito justitiæ, as an action at law brought for the recovery of damages upon breach of such an agreement, but is addressed to the sound discretion of the Court, to be determined upon all the circumstances appearing. That the contract concerning which relief is sought is one sufficient in point of mere legal obligation — that it is supported by a valuable consideration paid, or agreed to be paid — that it is free from fraud or from such a degree of imposition or surprise upon the defendant as would support an application upon his part to set it aside entirely — these, and the like circumstances, though ordinarily indispensable, are yet far from sufficient, in themselves, as constituting a case invoking the relief — extraordinary in its character — sometimes administered by the Courts through the instrumentality of a decree for specific performance. The agreement alleged must be one which in all its features appeals to the judicial discretion as being fit to be enforced in specie — as having been obtained without any intermixture of unfairness. Hence, if it appear that the bargain, though obligatory in point of mere law, and one not to be set aside in equity, is, nevertheless, a hard bargain, the Court will not relieve. Of such a bargain Lord HARDWICKE said: "The constant rule of the Court is not to carry it into execution." (1 Atk. 134.) The same view was asserted by the Chancellor in Seymour v. Delancey, 6 Johns. Ch. R. 222, where the value, which the complainant was to pay, was, by the estimate of the Court, a little less than one-half that of the estate bargained for, and where the Chancellor, in dismissing the bill, said: "A Court of equity must be satisfied that the claim for a deed is fair and just and reasonable, and the contract equal in all its parts, and founded upon an adequate consideration, before it will interpose this extraordinary assistance."

The Court is to be satisfied that the contract is founded upon not merely a valuable but an adequate consideration. But how are we to be so satisfied here, where there is an absence of all averment upon that point? How are we to indulge the surmise that the defendant's case in this, or any respect, is better than they themselves have alleged it to be? "It is incumbent on every party who brings his case before a Court to state it with reasonable certainty * * * and this is peculiarly necessary upon a bill for a specific performance." (3 Rand. 228.)

The defense pleaded is to be construed contra proferentem. This is the general rule by which pleadings are construed in all cases. It is certain, however, that irrespective of this rule of construction, the defense, as it is pleaded here, wholly omits to aver the value of the lands bargained for, and the sum or value of the consideration therefor. There is nothing whatever disclosed by the defense, as pleaded, which would even afford a basis for a comparison of values or amounts. We leave out of view, of course, the recital contained in the bond, that it was for "value received," and the averment contained in the defense, that the agreement was made for "a valuable consideration" — they obviously amount to nothing in aid of the pleading upon the point considered.

A trial being had upon the return of the cause to the Court below, after its disposition here on the former appeal, the plaintiffs recovered judgment, and from that judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial the defendants bring the present appeal, and assign some eight supposed errors committed by the Court below, principally in the giving of some and the refusing of other instructions asked.

As we think, however, that the Court might have properly instructed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiffs, it will not be necessary to inquire to what extent the verdict, as rendered, can be supposed to have been influenced by giving, or refusing to give, particular instructions asked.

The title of the plaintiffs is derived wholly through the devise already recited, and the controversy—the questio ex qua—turns wholly upon the interpretation which that devise is to receive—the construction which the Court ought to place upon it, in order to arrive at a correct solution of its meaning, and thus reach the intention of the testator, not his intention (if he could, indeed, be supposed to have one), dehors the instrument itself, but his intention as embodied in, and, therefore, to be deduced from the language he has employed in disposing of his property.

The construction of a devise, like that of a contract in writing, is always a matter of law, and is, therefore, never to be submitted to a jury. This is true, whether such construction is to be reached ex visceribus merely, or after proof of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the instrument to be construed—for these latter are but aids and facilities to be availed of in searching for the true sense in which the language has been used, and by the light of which the Court may hope to discover the meaning intended, notwithstanding the obscurity of the expression in which it is couched.

The controversy is as to the subject of the devise — “the land pertaining” to the flour mill — “a half league more or less.” On the former appeal a construction was given to the devise, which, we think, virtually decided the cause in favor of the plaintiffs. The language which the testator used is not only accurate in expression, but is certain in its application to the subject of the devise. The subject of the devise is the flour mill, with “all the land pertaining thereto, a half league, more or less.” If there had been two flour mills, each with land pertaining thereto, and of such an area as might be fairly designated as “a half league, more or less,” then it might have been argued that there being two distinct subjects found, to each of which the entire description could be applied with an equal degree of accuracy, it would have resulted that the devise was ambiguous in the latent sense. But no such proposition can be asserted here, for no question is or could be made as to the flour mill referred to. The testator had but one. This being ascertained, we are next to seek for “the land which pertains to said mill.” This is land which bears some sort of relation to the mill. This relation may arise by reason of an inclosure separating a smaller tract upon which the mill is built from the general tract, or from the circumstance that a portion of the general tract, though uninclosed, has been in some way particularly devoted to the business or purposes of the mill; but it does not appear that there was any such inclosure, nor that any part of the general tract was especially used in connection with the mill. It is evident, therefore, under the circumstances appearing, that the testator used the word “pertains” (per-tenece) in the sense of surrounding and lying adjacent to the mill building. There can be but little doubt that the devise, even if considered in the light of these circumstances alone, would, by construction of law, extend to and include the outer limits of the general tract upon which the mill building stood; for, otherwise, we must either undertake to bound the land devised by the very walls of the mill itself or to fix its limits at some ascertained line intermediate the walls of the mill building and the exterior lines of the general tract; and this, in the absence of any fact or circumstance indicating the existence of such intermediate boundary. But, however this may be, there can be no hesitation, in view of the expression of quantity contained in the devise — “a half league, more or less” — in arriving at the conclusion that the tract intended to be devised was in extent approximating two thousand two hundred acres. It is evident that the testator himself estimated it as of about that quantity; and though the entire tract lying between Kilburn and Kellogg, and the lateral boundaries of the ranch, will fall short of that quantity by some eight hundred acres, it is to be remembered that the lateral lines of the ranch have been since located by the United States authorities, and that they may have excluded some lands which Dr. Bale supposed to be embraced within the land grant he had obtained. At all events, there is nothing appearing which would satisfy us that the testator was laboring under a delusion of such an extraordinary character as to mistake a tract of only one hundred and ninety-six acres for one of two thousand two hundred acres, or that he estimated the small tract lying west of the river and south of the Barnett line at more than ten times its actual area.

The Court below should, therefore, have construed the devise in the light of the circumstances thus appearing, as including the tract north of the Barnett line — so called — and east of the Napa River, to the eastern line of the ranch; and the necessary result of that construction must have been a verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs.

Statement of Facts.

The judgment and order denying new trial must, therefore, be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

EMELINE WOODS v. GEORGE E. WHITNEY AND AMOS WOODS.

BARGAIN AND SALE DEED TO MARRIED WOMAN MAY BE SHOWN TO BE GIFT.—If a husband, who is free from debt, purchase property with community funds and direct the conveyance to be made to his wife, with intent to make it her separate estate, the deed will take effect as a gift; and if the conveyance be on its face an ordinary deed of grant, bargain, and sale, reciting a valuable consideration, it is competent to show by parol the real facts, in order to rebut the presumption that it is common property.

FINDINGS — CONFLICT OF EVIDENCE.—A finding will not be disturbed as not justified by the evidence, if there be a substantial conflict in the evidence.

GIFT FROM HUSBAND TO WIFE — EVIDENCE OF INTENTION.—Where the point in issue in a case was whether a deed, directed by a husband to be made to his wife, inured as a gift to her or not: Held, that it was for the Court to decide upon the husband's intentions from his acts and conduct at the time; and that a question to him, as to what his intentions had been, was properly excluded as immaterial.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action to set aside a deed made by the defendant Woods, the husband of the plaintiff, to the defendant Whitney. The property mentioned is a lot of ground, with improvements, in San Francisco. It was purchased for nine hundred dollars of one L. W. Fisher, in June, 1853, and at the instance of the husband the deed was made directly to the plaintiff. It was in terms a bargain and sale deed, reciting the consideration paid.

The Court found that the money so paid was community property, but that the husband gave the property so purchased to his wife, and directed the conveyance to be made so as to consummate and perfect the gift and vest the title in her as her sole and separate estate. It further appeared that the husband, in January, 1867, made the deed complained of to the defendant Whitney, but the Court found that Whitney had full notice and knowledge of all the facts.

In the course of the trial, which was before the Court, the defendant Woods being under examination, counsel for defendants propounded to him the following question: "At the time of the execution and delivery of the deed from Fisher to Mrs. Woods, was it or not your intention by that deed to vest the title of that property in her as a gift in fee?" Counsel for plaintiff objected to the question on the grounds of immateriality, irrelevancy, and incompetency. The objection was sustained on the ground that it was for the Court to judge from the facts and not from the statement of the witness what he intended. Defendants excepted. Counsel for defendants then asked: "Did you in fact, at that time or any subsequent time, give that property to Mrs. Woods?" Objected to on the same grounds as above. Objection sustained on the ground that it was a question of law. Defendants excepted.

There having been a judgment for plaintiff, and a motion for new trial overruled, defendant Whitney appealed.

George E. Whitney, for Appellant.

Parol testimony will be admitted to vary the legal effect of a deed to a married woman only in cases which arise between the parties to such deeds, their privies in blood, and purchasers without value or with notice, and the only inquiries devolving upon a person dealing with the husband in relation to property prima facie belonging to the community, are as to the coverture, and whether the purchase money was community property, or the separate property of the wife. (See Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 37; Peck v. Brummagim, 31 Cal. 441; Ingersoll v. Truebody, 40 Cal. 603; Cook v. Bremond, 27 Tex. 457; Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 131; Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 254; McDonald v. Badger, 23 Cal. 398; Smith v. Smith, 12 Cal. 216; Kohner v. Ashenauer, 17 Cal. 580.)

There is no solid distinction between admitting parol testimony to vary the legal effect of a deed for property standing in the name of one spouse, which does not equally apply to the other. While, on the one hand, there can be no hardship in requiring a husband who would make a gift to his wife to evidence that intention to the world by his solemn deed, on the other hand, the adoption of such a rule would go far to close that door to fraud and perjury, which the Court pointed out in Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 254. (See, also, Higgins v. Johnson's Heirs, 20 Tex. 389; Peck v. Brummagim, 31 Cal. 441.)

H. E. Highton, for Respondent.

It was early and repeatedly held in this State that a grant, bargain, and sale deed made to the wife during coverture raised the presumption that the property was common, and might be conveyed by the husband alone. (Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 253; Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 131; Hart v. Robinson, 21 Cal. 348; Tustin v. Faught, 23 Cal. 241; Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 420.) In none of these cases, except the last, was anything said as to the inconclusiveness of the presumption; and, in one case, Mr. Justice FIELD intimated a doubt whether a husband could make to his wife a gift of common property. (Kohner v. Ashenauer, 17 Cal. 582.) But it was subsequently decided, after full argument and mature deliberation, that the presumption was only prima facie, and might be overcome by proof that the property was in fact purchased with the separate funds of the wife. (Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 42, 43.) And ultimately, carrying the doctrine of this case to its logical conclusion, this Court determined that the consideration of a deed was always a proper object of judicial investigation; that a husband might give common property to his wife; and that, where he purchased real estate and directed it to be conveyed to his wife as a gift, although the form of conveyance were that of grant, bargain, and sale, the title passed, and the property became separate. (Peck v. Brummagin, 31 Cal. 441; Dow v. Gould & Curry S. M. Co., 31 Cal. 653.) The last cases cited have been affirmed by the present Bench. (Ingersoll et als. v. Truebody, 40 Cal. 603.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

It is impossible to distinguish this case, in principle, from Peck v. Brummagin, 31 Cal. 441, since reaffirmed in Dow v. Gould & Curry S. M. Co., id. 653, and Ingersoll v. Truebody, 40 Cal. 603. In Peck v. Brummagin it was distinctly decided, after full argument, that it is competent for a husband, who is free from debt, to convey the common property, by way of gift, to his wife; and that if he purchase property which is paid for out of the funds of the community, and direct the conveyance to be made to the wife, with the intent that the property shall thereby become the separate estate of the wife, the deed will take effect as a gift, and vest a separate estate in the wife. And further, that if the conveyance be on its face an ordinary deed of grant, bargain, and sale, reciting a valuable consideration, it is competent to show by parol the real facts of the transaction, in order to rebut the presumption that it is common property.

The case at bar seems to be precisely of this character; and, as between the husband and wife, it was clearly competent for the latter to show, by parol, the facts of the transaction, and that the conveyance was intended to and did take effect as a gift. It is unnecessary to decide whether the defendant Whitney would have acquired a valid title if he had purchased from the husband in good faith, for a valuable consideration, without notice of the rights of the wife.

The Court finds that he purchased with full notice, and we cannot disturb the finding on the ground that it was not justified by the evidence. Viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to the defendant, the most that can be affirmed of it is that there was a substantial conflict in it. If the actual possession of the plaintiff, under a claim of title coupled with the collection of rents, and the exercise of other acts of dominion, was not constructive notice of her rights, there certainly was some evidence tending to show actual notice.

There was no error in excluding the questions propounded by the defendant to the Witness Amos Woods, in respect to his intentions at the time of the execution of the deed of the plaintiff. It was for the Court to decide upon his intentions from his acts and conduct at the time. His secret, undisclosed intentions would be unavailing as against his acts and declarations at the time of the transaction.

Judgment affirmed.

PAULA ROMERO DE GAZE v. S. J. LYNCH, JEROME PORTER, S. L. EAMES, WILLIAM H. PERRY, J. F. BURNS, JOHN KING, AND S. H. MOTT.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—RIGHT OF PARTIES TO BE HEARD.—Where, upon defendants' motion for new trial, the statement was settled (though not engrossed), and defendant gave notice of hearing, but nothing further was done until afterward, upon the overruling of a like motion in a similar case, plaintiff asked that this motion, also, should be overruled, to which defendants objected, and insisted upon being heard; afterward, the Court, without notice to either party, or any formal or actual submission of the motion, granted a new trial; held, that the order was prematurely and improvidently made.

GRANTING NEW TRIAL WITHOUT SUBMISSION OF MOTION, ERROR.—Where a motion for a new trial, made by defendant, was granted by the Court without any formal or actual submission of the motion, and without any notice, so as to give the plaintiff an opportunity to be heard; held, error.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventeenth Judicial District, Los Angeles County.

This was an action of ejectment for a lot in the City of Los Angeles, alleged to belong to the plaintiff, as of her separate property. It was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff. The facts bearing upon the points decided are stated in the opinion. Plaintiff appealed.

Glassell, Chapman & Smith, for Appellant.

The order granting defendants a new trial was improvidently and erroneously made.

1. Because there was no statement before the Judge that could be regarded as a statement on motion for new trial, or as a basis on which such an order could be grounded. Defendants' skeleton statement refers to exhibits which are not on file, and were not accessible to the Judge when said order was made. No engrossed statement was ever made, or in anywise certified as a correct statement, to be used on motion for new trial. (Cosgrove v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 509; Kimball v. Semple, 31 Cal. 657; Linn v. Twist, 3 Cal. 89; Baldwin v. Frere, 23 Cal. 461; Vilhac v. Biven, 28 Cal. 409; Marlow v. Marsh, 9 Cal. 259; Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 304.)

2. Because the said order was premature, for the reasons above referred to, and because it was made before the motion for new trial had been argued or submitted, or agreed to be submitted by any of the counsel in the case.

A. Brunson, for Respondents.

It is objected that the statement is a skeleton statement. That skeleton, however, shows errors which no stuffing can correct, and these errors justify the others appealed from. The object of a statement is simply to present so much of the case as will show the rulings and action of the Court claimed to be erroneous. (Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 107.) The omission of the exhibits might, probably, deprive respondents of the advantage of other fatal errors, and even weaken their chances of success on appeal; but one error shown in the statement is as effective to gain a new trial as a thousand.

The granting, or refusing to grant, a new trial, rests very much in the discretion of the Court below, and this Court will not interfere with its action, unless there be a clear abuse of such discretion. (Peters v. Foss, 16 Cal. 357; Hall v. Bark Emily Banning, 33 Cal. 523; Drake v. Palmer, 2 Cal. 177.)

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an order granting defendants' motion for a new trial, and also from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate and set aside such order granting a new trial.

The record presented by the transcript discloses substantially the following state of facts:

The action was ejectment, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendants. In due time three of the defendants gave notice of their intention to move for a new trial, and subsequently prepared and filed their statement on such motion, which statement was certified by the Judge, as settled by him and correct, on the 12th day of May, 1870. This statement, as settled and certified by the Judge, contains a very full specification of the grounds upon which the moving party will rely in support of the motion, among which is specified various errors of the Court in giving and refusing instructions to the jury, and in admitting certain oral evidence and various written documents against objections of defendants, as also, that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict, with particular specification upon this ground. But the statement, as settled and certified by the Judge, does not contain the instructions given or refused by the Court, to which exceptions were taken by defendants, nor any of the documentary evidence given on the trial against objections of defendants, which were essential and necessary to illustrate and explain the particular points specified in the statement as the grounds relied upon in support of the motion. Only a reference to such documentary evidence and instructions is contained in that statement, thus: "Deed from Foster, administrator of the estate of N. M. Pryor, to plaintiff. (Here insert Exhibit A.) (Here insert instructions of plaintiff)," etc.; and the Clerk of the Court, in his certificate to the transcript, certifies that the statement "is the only settled or authenticated statement on motion for a new trial" in the case. This statement appears to have been settled, and certified by the Judge as correct, on the 12th day of May, 1870. On the following day, thirteenth of May, defendants duly notified the plaintiff that upon his statement on file, and upon the files, papers, and records in the action, they will move the Court, at the Court-room thereof, on the 16th day of May, 1870, at the opening of the Court on that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel could be heard, for a new trial in said cause, so far as the same relates to defendants Mott, King, and Burns. The record discloses no further action upon the motion until the 2d day of June, 1870, when, in open Court, a motion for a new trial in another case was overruled by the Court, whereupon the counsel for plaintiff in this case called up the motion for a new trial therein, and stated that this motion was of similar character to that just decided; he supposed it would be useless to argue the same; but the counsel for the defendants objected to a submission of the motion without argument, "when the Court stated substantially, that it did not see how it could consistently grant a new trial in this case," whereupon counsel for defendants insisted upon being heard on the motion, to which the Court replied, that counsel could take their own course. No argument was, however, then had, and nothing further was done by either party to the motion, but the Court, without notice to either party, and without any formal or actual submission of the motion to the Court for decision, on the ninth day of June, made and caused to be entered his order granting a new trial, which fact was not brought to the knowledge of plaintiff until about six weeks thereafter; whereupon plaintiff's counsel, upon his own affidavit and certain minutes of the Court, moved the Court to set aside and vacate its order of June ninth, granting defendants' motion for a new trial, substantially on the ground that the motion for a new trial had never been submitted to the Court for its decision; that plaintiff had never had any notice of any such submission, and had not had an opportunity of being heard in opposition to the motion. Upon the hearing of this motion to set aside and vacate, on the fifth of August the Court denied the same.

From this exhibit of the record it is apparent that the order of the Court below granting defendant's motion for a new trial was prematurely and improvidently made.

The statement on motion for a new trial had not been engrossed. It was but a skeleton statement, with a simple reference to exhibits used in evidence on the trial, and instructions given and refused by the Court, which were deemed essential and necessary to illustrate the grounds of the motion specified in the statement. The motion for a new trial was never actually or by fair implication submitted to the Court for its decision. When the motion was called up by plaintiff, on the second day of June, and the Court had intimated that the same must be overruled, plaintiff manifested a willingness to submit it without argument, but defendants declined, and insisted upon being heard in support of the motion. No argument was then had, nor was the motion then submitted, and for the Court subsequently, on a change of its views in relation to the merits of the motion, to grant the same without notice to plaintiff, operated a surprise upon her, and practically denied her the privilege of being heard on the motion. (Morris v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 331.)

made by a mining partnership in its firm name through its Secretary, and it appeared that such contract had been authorized by a vote of a majority of the shares at a meeting of the company, and after being signed by the Secretary had been ratified and approved in the same manner, and it further appeared that though there were no written regulations or by-laws the company usually did business in this way: Acid, that the recognized and established usage on the part of the firm should be taken as a part of the contract of partnership.

WHAT MAY BE PLEADED IN BAR AT JUDGMENT IN FORMER ACTION.—A judgment in a former action is well pleaded as a bar in a second action, provided the cause of action is the same, though the form of action has been changed.

WHAT IS "SAME CAUSE OF ACTION."—A cause of action is said to be the same as that in a former suit where the same evidence will support both actions; and a judgment in such former action will be a bar, provided the evidence necessary to sustain a judgment for plaintiff in the second would have authorized a judgment for plaintiff in such former one.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District, Nevada County.

This was an action to recover the sum of three thousand dollars, the contract price for building a mill, alleged to be due from defendants as a mining partnership, doing business at Grass Valley, Nevada County, under the firm name and style of the New York Hill Mining Company. The defendants Castle and Seligman, in their answers, denied, among other things, that they or either of them were ever members of the partnership, or ever authorized or consented to the contract sued on, or were ever in any manner bound thereby; and they also set up, as a bar to the action, a judgment in their favor in a former action, brought by plaintiff against defendants for the same cause of action.

It appears that previous to the making of the contract for building the mill, the defendant Castle purchased the interest, being a one sixteenth, of P. H. Ford, one of the original partners of the New York Hill Mining Company, and afterwards sold one half of such sixteenth to the defendant Seligman. Neither Castle nor Seligman, however, attended the meetings of the partnership; and there was nothing to show that they ever personally approved or consented to the contract of the company with the plaintiff.

The former action, which was pleaded in bar, was a suit by the same plaintiff against the same defendants, to recover the sum of two thousand six hundred and fifty dollars, alleged to be due on an accounting between the parties for building the mill under the same contract set up in this action. In that case there was a judgment in favor of defendants Castle and Seligman for their costs, and it was ordered, on plaintiff's motion, that the cause should be dismissed as to the other defendants, without prejudice to plaintiff's right to a new action.

On the trial the defendants Castle and Seligman rested their defense upon their plea of former recovery, and introduced in evidence the judgment roll in the former action. The Court below decided against their plea, and the cause then proceeded and resulted in a judgment for plaintiff against all the defendants for three thousand two hundred and eighty-five dollars and eighty cents. The defendants Castle and Seligman moved for a new trial, which was overruled, and they then took this appeal.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Appellants.

The allegation of a partnership on the part of the defendants Castle and Seligman in the New York Hill Mining Company, was directly traversed by their answers. It was, therefore, incumbent upon the plaintiff to establish this fact, and, having failed to do so, it is apparent he made no case.

The judgment recovered in a former action was a complete bar. The issues, testimony, and proofs were the same in each; and it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the issues in the present case differed from those in the former. (Southgate v. Montgomery, 1 Paige, 41; Barkhead

v. Brown, 5 Sandf. 134; Miller v. Mourrice, 6 Hill, 114; Rice v. King, 7 Johns. 20; Holmes v. Benson, 7 Johns. 288; Baggs v. Clark, 37 Cal. 237.)

A. C. Niles and J. C. Deuel, for Respondent.

The allegations of partnership on the part of the defendants Castle and Seligman in the New York Hill Mining Company was sustained by the evidence. Upon the law as to mining partnerships, see Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 569; Dougherty v. Creary, 30 Cal. 290; Settembre v. Putnam, 30 Cal. 490; Skillman v. Lachman, 23 Cal. 198.

The judgment recovered in the former action was upon an account stated. The complaint in this case was founded upon an original contract, for a different sum of money, and requiring different and other testimony to support it. The issues were entirely different. The averment of contract in the complaint in the first action was merely matter of inducement and not the gist of the action. (See Carey v. P. & C. Petroleum Co., 33 Cal. 696; 1 Chitty on Pl. 358; Holmes v. DeCamp, 1 Johns. 34; 1 Greenleaf on Ev. Sec. 528 et seq.; Dutchess of Kingston's Case, 2 Smith's L. By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

It may be a matter of regret that our Courts have gone to the extent they have in excepting mining partnerships from the general law of partnerships. It is very well established now, however, that in such partnerships there is usually no delectus personarum, and from this difference many peculiarities arise, the principal of which is that the partnership is not dissolved by the death of a partner, nor as a consequence of a sale of an interest by a partner to a stranger. As, therefore, the sale of an interest to Seligman did not dissolve the partnership, I think by his purchase he presumptively became a partner, although he took no part in the management of the partnership affairs, and never held himself out to the world as a partner.

The action is brought upon a contract, by which the plaintiff bound himself to erect a mill for the defendants. The contract is in writing, and purports to have been made by the defendants by their firm name, through James K. Byrne, their Secretary. It was proven that the contract was authorized at a meeting of the company, and, after it had been signed by the Secretary, was ratified and approved in the same way. There were no written regulations or by-laws adopted for the government of the company, but it was shown that they usually did business in this way. A majority of the shares at a meeting of the company authorized contracts to be made, and the minority always acquiesced. I think this shows a recognized and established usage on the part of the firm which must be taken as a part of the contract of partnership.

The defendants Castle and Seligman pleaded a former recovery in bar, and, on the trial, introduced the judgment roll of a former action brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendants. In his complaint in the first suit the plaintiff recited the fact of the contract to erect a mill for crushing rock, the performance of the contract on his part, and the non-payment of the contract price, and then averred an account stated between plaintiff and defendant, the ascertainment of a balance due, which was less than the contract price, and the promise on the part of defendants to pay that sum.

The defendants, in their answer, denied specially each allegation of the complaint. Judgment was for the defendants, but it does not appear upon what grounds. No evidence upon the subject was offered by either party, save the judgment roll, and the admission that the contract sued upon in this action was put in evidence upon the former trial.

Unquestionably the judgment in the former action is well pleaded as a bar in this suit, provided the cause of action is the same, although the form of action has been changed. The cause of action is said to be the same where the same evidence will support both actions; or, rather, the judgment in the former action will be a bar, provided the evidence necessary to sustain a judgment for the plaintiff in the present action would have authorized a judgment for the plaintiff in the former. The present action could be maintained upon proof of the contract, and performance on the part of plaintiff, and non-payment by defendants. This proof would not have sustained the former action. That was founded on the account stated and the agreement to pay the balance ascertained, and not upon the original contract. (Carey v. P. & C. Petroleum Co., 33 Cal. 694.)

that the title originating under the elder lien, provided it had not been allowed to become dormant, and the foreclosure proceedings were sufficient, must prevail.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, County of Contra Costa.

This was an action of ejectment for three hundred and sixty acres of land, a portion of the San Pablo Rancho, in Contra Costa County. Both parties claimed under Joaquin G. Castro, in whose name the rancho was finally confirmed by the United States on February 24th, 1858, and final survey approved August 17th, 1864.

The plaintiff claimed as follows: On December 28th, 1854, Joaquin G. Castro executed a mortgage to Martina Perre of all his interest in the San Pablo Rancho, which was recorded on January 6th, 1855; on September 21st, 1855, suit of foreclosure was commenced upon the mortgage; on January 17th, 1856, there was a decree against defendant for nine thousand one hundred and fifty dollars, with interest at five per cent per month; on March 11th, 1856, there was a sale by the Sheriff to Martina Perre for five thousand dollars; on March 23d, 1857, Sheriff's deed to Martina Perre, recorded March 24th, 1857; and there were divers mesne conveyances carrying this title to plaintiff.

The defendant set up among other things, that John Currey recovered judgment against Joaquin G. Castro on October 23d, 1855, for three hundred dollars; docketed October 24th, 1855; execution on this judgment on October 26th, 1855; Sheriff's sale on November 29th, 1855, and Sheriff's deed on April 25th, 1863.

There having been a judgment for plaintiff, and motion for new trial denied, the defendant appealed.

J. M. Seawell, for Appellant.

B. S. Brooks, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The title formerly held by Castro is the true title to the premises in controversy. The plaintiff claims to have acquired it, and the defendant claims that it is outstanding in a third person, who is not a party to the controversy. The title of the plaintiff relates to January, 1855, when the mortgage, through the foreclosure of which it comes, was recorded and became a lien. The outstanding title to October, 1855, when the Currey judgment against Castro, through which that title comes, also became a lien upon the premises.

The lien in which the plaintiff's title originated being thus the elder in its origin, a title derived thereunder is prima facie superior to a title from a common source, purporting to be derived under a judgment lien junior in point of time; and in an action of ejectment, where, as here, the controversy must turn upon the mere legal title, and no equitable defense is pleaded, the title originating in the elder lien must prevail over that originating in the junior lien, provided the lien of the former had not been suffered, in the meantime, to become dormant, or the proceedings through which it was foreclosed were not insufficient, in point of jurisdiction, for that purpose.

In Rankin et al., plaintiffs in error, v. Scott, defendant in error, 12 Wheat. 177, each party claimed to have acquired the title of John Little to the premises through judgments and Sheriff's sales, etc., resulting in a Sheriff's deed to each. These judgments respectively became liens upon the premises at different periods of time, and the sale under the junior judgment preceded that under the other. It was held that the sale under the elder judgment and lien gave the better title, notwithstanding such sale was itself subsequent in point of time to that made under the junior judgment. In delivering the opinion of the Court in that case

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL said: "By that law (of Missouri) judgments are to be a lien on all the lands of the debtor. The lien commences with the judgment, and continues for five years. The principle is believed to be universal that a prior lien gives a prior claim, which is entitled to prior satisfaction out of the subject it binds, unless the lien be intrinsically defective, or be displaced by some act of the party holding it, which shall postpone him in a court of law or equity to a subsequent claimant. The single circumstance of not proceeding on it until a subsequent lien has been obtained and carried into execution, has never been considered as such an act."

Upon these views it results that the plaintiff's title was superior to the outstanding title set up by the defendant; and the judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action originally commenced July 5th, 1857, by Charles B. Polhemus and George W. P. Bissell, composing the firm of Alsop & Co., to foreclose a mortgage executed in 1854 on certain real estate in the City of San Francisco, by William M. Carpenter to Reuben Clark and James George, to secure the payment of a note for thirty thousand dollars, with interest at the rate of two and one half per cent per month, payable in six months, or in six or twelve months thereafter, at the option of the maker, to be signified in writing within five months. This note and mortgage were assigned by Clark and George to the firm of Alsop & Co.; and at the time of the commencement of the action there was allowed to be due upon it fifteen thousand dollars, with interest thereon from November 16th, 1855, at two and one half per cent per month.

The defendant Treadwell, who was the only one that answered, set up that the assignment to Alsop & Co. was made to defraud the creditors of Clark and George; that it was pretended to be made as a security for the repayment of twelve thousand six hundred and nineteen dollars and sixty-five cents borrowed of plaintiffs by Clark and George; that this sum and interest had long before been repaid; that on February 1st, 1855, Carpenter conveyed to Clark and George the mortgaged premises and other property, in full payment and satisfaction of the mortgage debt and interest; that after Clark and George so acquired the fee, Treadwell recovered a judgment against them for three thousand six hundred dollars, docketed March 26th, 1857, under which he subjected the mortgaged premises to sale, and bid them off for two thousand four hundred dollars, and received the Sheriff's deed October 30th, 1857; that after the conveyance by Carpenter to Clark and George plaintiffs entered into the receipt of the rents, and had received and converted to their own use all the rents subsequent to Treadwell's purchase at Sheriff's sale on April 28th, 1857, amounting at the time of answer to ten thousand dollars. Defendant prayed that the mortgage should be declared satisfied; that if anything should be found due plaintiffs, chargeable on the land, he should be let into possession upon paying it; that the rents received by plaintiffs since April 28th, 1857, should be ascertained, and they be decreed to pay them to him before a foreclosure, or out of the proceeds of a foreclosure sale; and for general relief.

The cause was referred to E. W. F. Sloan, who, on March 23d, 1859, reported a judgment that plaintiffs should pay Treadwell the sum of eight thousand one hundred and twenty dollars and fifty-seven cents, and turn over to him the possession of the mortgaged premises. From the judgment entered upon this report the plaintiffs appealed, and at the April Term, 1862, the judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered. In accordance with the intimations of the Supreme Court, contained in their opinion, Treadwell soon afterwards commenced a separate action against Polhemus, as survivor of the firm of Alsop & Co., and his tenants, to recover the premises and the value of their use and occupation from the time of his purchase, which then amounted, as alleged, to upwards of fifty thousand dollars. After the trial of this ejectment case had commenced, on July 29th, 1863, the parties entered into a stipulation, by the terms of which it was agreed that the ejectment suit should drop; that the present foreclosure suit should proceed to trial; that when tried an account should be taken of the rents received by plaintiffs after April 28th, 1857, certain disbursements agreed upon deducted, and interest cast on the residue of the rents, from the time received, at two per cent per month with annual rests, or, in other words, compounding annually; that the amount of rents and interest thus ascertained was to be deducted from the amount for which the plaintiffs might at the trial establish a lien on the mortgaged premises as against Treadwell, and the plaintiffs to have a decree of foreclosure only for such balance; but if the amount of plaintiffs' lien should prove less than the amount of rents and interest, it was to be deducted and Treadwell to have judgment for the residue, or for the whole amount of rents and interest if plaintiffs failed to establish any lien as against him. This stipulation was filed and made a rule of Court in this case.

Afterwards plaintiff, apparently finding the stipulation unfavorable, made several attempts to dismiss his action; and, among other proceedings, instituted two mandamus suits—one against the Clerk, and one against the Judge, to compel them to enter a dismissal. These actions will be found reported in 28 Cal. 166, and 29 Cal. 264. On account of them, the trial of the foreclosure suit was delayed until the latter end of 1867; and on January 2d, 1868, the Court below announced its decision, that judgment be entered for defendant, but without costs. The defendant, in the meanwhile, had requested written findings; and on February 14th, 1868, the following were filed:

"In this cause, the defendant Treadwell's counsel having requested findings by the Court in writing, I now file the same, as follows:

"FINDINGS OF FACTS.

"Under the pleadings and proof, and under the stipulation of the respective parties, dated July 29th, 1863, filed December 9th, 1853, and entered thereafter, as an order of Court in the cause, on the nineteenth day of this same month, I do not find any balance or amount for which the plaintiff has a lien on the mortgaged premises, in the complaint described, as against the defendant Treadwell, after deducting therefrom the rents received from said premises (less amounts paid for repairs, taxes, improvements, and fortifying the title), from and after April 28th, 1857, the date of the said Treadwell's purchase thereof at Sheriff's sale, together with interest on said items of rent, at the monthly rate, and with the annual rests in computing the same, provided for in said stipulation. Nor do I find the amount of said rents and interest thereon so to be deducted, or any part thereof, is not required to satisfy the amount which otherwise, and but for said stipulation, would have been a lien on said mortgaged premises.

"And as a conclusion of law therefrom, I find that neither the plaintiff is entitled to a decree of foreclosure against the lands in the complaint described, nor is the defendant Treadwell entitled to a judgment or decree for any amount whatever against the plaintiff. And it is ordered that neither party recover costs against the other."

The defendant excepted to the above as findings, and requested the defects in particulars pointed out by him to be corrected and remedied; all of which the Court below refused. Defendant afterwards filed and served his notice of, and statement on, motion for new trial, as stated in the opinion, which, being overruled, defendant Treadwell appealed from the order and the judgment.

J. P. Treadwell, for Appellant.

The findings are but evasive and nugatory generalities, not warranted; and they imply facts not warranted by the evidence; and the Court erred in overruling the defendant's exceptions for defects in the findings and refusing to make specific findings as requested by defendant. The defendant was, in any event, entitled to a decree for at least sixty-six thousand three hundred and seven dollars and fifty-nine cents. The amount of rents received by plaintiff after April 28th, 1857, less sums paid for repairs, taxes, improvements, and fortifying the title, with interest from the time received at two per cent per month, with annual rests as provided for in the stipulation, was computed to the day of trial, and on the day of the decision amounted to one hundred and forty-three thousand seven hundred and sixteen dollars and forty-one cents; while the plaintiff's whole claim on his own accounts, and adjusted in his own way, amounted to only seventy-seven thousand four hundred and eight dollars and eighty-two cents.

But there being substantially no findings of fact, and the defendant being in no default on this account, the case is open before this Court on the whole evidence; and it should proceed to determine the whole matter pursuant to the course of a Court of equity. The material facts are all either admitted or clearly proved, without there being any material conflict of evidence, except on one point, which occurs between witnesses whose depositions or written testimony only was before the Court below, and are before this Court. It is time, after thirteen years of delays, to end this suit by a final decree in it. This Court should direct the Court below for what sum to enter judgment, in favor of defendant against plaintiff.

C. T. Botts and Delos Lake, for Respondent.

The judgment in this case having been rendered on January 2d, 1868, and no notice of intention to move for a new trial having been served until February twenty-fourth following, the statement on such motion forms no part of the record; consequently, the case comes here on the judgment roll alone, which it is not pretended discloses any error.

But, if this be otherwise, it is plain that the issues in this case, as in every other, must be gathered from the pleadings. None of these issues are found in favor of defendant, nor would the evidence support such a finding. A stipulation cannot be substituted for the pleadings, nor can it, per se, alter, amend, or modify the pleadings. The particular stipulation in this case does not purport to amend the pleadings in any respect, except by striking out the defendant's counterclaim.

The counterclaim being stricken out, and the stipulation being inserted in its place, it shows no cause of action and no ground for affirmative relief; therefore, the appellant has no cause to complain of the judgment that denied him affirmative relief. If an accounting were to be had between the plaintiff and the defendant Treadwell, upon any basis even hinted at in the stipulation, there is nothing in the findings, or the evidence, to show that any balance would be due the defendant.

The objection that the Judge failed to find specially upon the innumerable points presented by the defendant is untenable, if for no other reason, because there are none of them upon which, in view of the pleadings and the evidence, the findings could, by any possibility, have been in favor of the defendant.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The first question for determination is, whether the defendant's notice of his intention to move for a new trial was served and filed in time. On the second of January the Court (which tried the cause without a jury) announced its decision, ordering a judgment to be entered for the defendant; and on the fourth of January the defendant was duly served with a notice of this decision. But when the cause was submitted, the defendant, in due form, requested written findings, which request was entered on the minutes. On the fourteenth of February the Court filed written findings, and within ten days thereafter the defendant filed and served a notice of his intention to move for a new trial. The statement in support of the motion was filed and served on the seventh of March, and within the time granted by the Court for that purpose.

On these facts, the plaintiff insists that the motion for a new trial came too late; that the ten days for serving and filing the notice commenced to run from the fourth of January, when the defendant was notified of the decision, and not from the fourteenth of February, when the written findings were filed.

Section one hundred and eighty of the code requires the Court to file written findings on the request of either party, entered in the minutes at the submission of the cause, and if the Court neglects or refuses to comply with the request, this will be ground of error, on an appeal from judgment, supported by a bill of exceptions or statement on appeal, embodying the necessary facts.

Section one hundred and ninety-five of the code provides that if the cause is tried by the Court without a jury, a party intending to move for a new trial shall file and serve a notice of his intention to do so within ten days after service of a notice of the filing of the findings, if any written findings be filed; and if there be no written findings, then within ten days after receiving a written notice of the decision of the Court.

There is nothing to prevent the Court from filing written findings, even though neither party requests the findings to be in writing; nor is there any provision defining or limiting the time within which written findings shall or may be filed. The question under consideration is not free from grave embarrassments, arising from the vague provisions of these two sections; and particularly from the omission of any limitation as to the time within which written findings shall be filed. It is quite plain, however, if there be no request for written findings, and none be filed when the decision is announced, the time within which a party intending to move for a new trial must file and serve a notice of his intention to do so will commence to run from the time when he is served with a written notice of the decision. The Court, it is true, may, at some future day, file written findings, but is under no obligations to do so, and non constat, that it ever will. In such a case, after receiving a notice of the decision, the party intending to move for a new trial would not be allowed to remain inactive for three or six months, speculating on the chance of the filing of written findings by the Court, and if such findings should, perchance, be filed, then proceed with his motion and excuse his delay on the ground that the statute allows him to proceed within ten days after notice of the filing of the written findings. If the statute should be so construed, the successful party would never know when the litigation was ended, as it would be wholly uncertain whether or not the Court would at any time file written findings. Such a practice, if tolerated, would lead to the greatest delay, vexation, and uncertainty in the administration of justice. The only proper and reasonable construction of the statute is, that when written findings are not requested, and none are filed at the time of the decision, the time within which a party intending to move for a new trial shall file and serve his notice, shall be held to commence running from the time of service of a written notice of the decision. If any inconvenience should arise from the practice here indicated, it is the fault of the statute, which, on any other construction of it, would lead to still greater embarrassment. It would, however, in a great measure, obviate the difficulty if the Court, when it intends to file written findings, would so state when its decision is announced, and cause them to be promptly filed.

But it remains to be considered whether a different rule prevails, when written findings were duly requested by the party intending to move for a new trial, and when such findings were in fact filed after the decision was announced, and after due service of a written notice of the decision.

Section one hundred and eighty, as it formerly stood, requires written findings to be filed in all causes tried by the Court without a jury, whether such findings were requested or not; and section one hundred and ninety-five, as it stood prior to 1861, required a party intending to move for a new trial to serve and file a notice of his intention to do so within two days "after the trial." Under these provisions it was held that the "trial" did not terminate until the written findings were filed, and, consequently, that the notice of a motion for a new trial was in time, if served and filed within two days after the findings were filed. The Court had no power to render an oral decision, and the trial, therefore, was not ended until written findings were filed.

But in 1866, both these sections were amended; and by section one hundred and eighty, as amended, the Court is relieved from the necessity of filing written findings, unless requested by one of the parties at the time of the submission to do so. But if such request be duly made and entered in the minutes, the duty of the Court to file written findings is as imperative now as if that section had not been amended.

If the Court refuses or neglects to perform this duty, the injured party may assign this as error on an appeal from the judgment, without a motion for a new trial. The same section, as amended, also provides that if the findings be defective, the injured party may except to them, and if the Court refuses to supply the defects, this also will be ground of error on appeal from the judgment.

Section one hundred and ninety-five, as amended, provides that in causes tried by the Court without a jury, a party intending to move for a new trial shall give notice thereof within ten days after receiving written notice of the filing of the findings, "when written findings are filed by the Court, or of the rendering of the decision of the Court when no findings are filed; provided the decision be rendered in open Court, and, if rendered at vacation, then within ten days after receiving written notice of the filing thereof." As we have seen, it is the imperative duty of the Court to file written findings, when requested to do so by either party; and it is a duty which this Court will compel the lower Court to perform, on a proper showing on an appeal from the judgment. A party requesting written findings is entitled to have them, as a basis of his motion for a new trial, in case the decision be adverse to him. He is entitled to know the precise facts found by the Court, and the conclusions of law deduced from them before proceeding with his motion for a new trial, in order that he may be enabled to point out with precision the errors of the Court in matters either of fact or law. This was the chief purpose to be subserved in requiring written findings to be filed on the request of a party; and this would be wholly defeated if he is compelled to proceed with his motion before the findings are filed. There could not well be a more striking illustration of this proposition, and of the embarrassments which may result to a party from the want of written findings, which he has requested, than this case afforded. The defendant, in his answer, prays for affirmative relief, and the action involves not only a long account, running through a series of years, but also some perplexing questions, both of law and fact. The oral decision of the Court was, that judgment be entered for the defendant without costs. There was nothing to inform the defendant whether he was to have any, and if any, what affirmative relief; or if such relief was denied, there was nothing to indicate on what theory of the facts, or by reason of what deductions of law the result was reached. If the defendant had not requested written findings, there would have been no obligation on the Court to file them; and on being notified of the oral decision, the defendant would have had no other resource than to proceed with his motion for a new trial upon the lights then before him, and would have had no cause of complaint on that ground, if the Court had never filed written findings. But having requested them, he was entitled to have them before being compelled to proceed with his motion. If the Court had refused to file them the defendant would have had a certain and sufficient remedy in an appeal from the judgment, without being put to the necessity of a motion for a new trial. But when the findings were filed it was competent for the defendant then to inaugurate his motion for a new trial within the statutory time. I am, therefore, of opinion that the motion was in time.

Within the proper time the defendant excepted to the findings as insufficient; but the Court refused to amend them, and this ruling is assigned as error. The findings are so manifestly defective as not to require comment. Instead of stating facts involved in the issues, they contain only general conclusions drawn from the facts. They afford no information whatever as to the particular facts which the Court considered as established in the cause. The defendant was clearly entitled to have more specific findings on the facts within the issues; and on this ground the judgment should be reversed and a new trial awarded. We are urged by the appellant to look into the accounts, and by ordering a final judgment to put an end to this protracted litigation. But there are several material facts on which the evidence is conflicting, and it is not the practice of this Court in such cases to adjudicate disputed facts. It is the province of the lower Court to pass upon the facts, and when there is a substantial conflict in the evidence we will not disturb its findings on the ground that they are against the weight of evidence.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

M. P. McCOURTNEY AND J. H. McCOURTNEY v.
H. W. FORTUNE, J. W. COLEMAN, AND EDWARD BROWN.

TIME TO APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT RUNS FROM ITS RENDITION.—Where a judgment for defendant, rendered (though not entered) on December 17th, 1869, was afterwards, on December 29th, 1869, vacated on motion of plaintiff, and a judgment rendered (though not entered) for plaintiff, and defendants' motion to set aside the last judgment was denied on July 9th, 1870, and judgment for plaintiff entered on July 12th, 1870, and defendant appealed from the judgment on March 27th, 1871; held, that the appeal, not having been taken within a year from the rendition of the judgment, was too late, and that, on motion, it should be dismissed.

APPEAL FROM SECOND JUDGMENT DOES NOT CARRY ORDER VACATING FORMER JUDGMENT.—Where a judgment was rendered for defendant, and afterwards, on motion of plaintiff, such judgment was ordered to be vacated and set aside, and judgment rendered for plaintiff; held, that alleged error in the order could not be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment for plaintiff—such order being a special order, made after final judgment and itself appealable.

APPEALABLE ORDER CANNOT BE REVIEWED ON APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT.—

Upon an appeal from final judgment, an order, which is itself made by statute the subject of a distinct appeal, cannot be reviewed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action of ejectment for a lot in the City and County of San Francisco. On December 17th, 1869, findings were filed and judgment ordered to be entered in favor of defendant Coleman. A few days afterwards, plaintiffs moved on the same findings for judgment the other way; and on December 29th, 1869, the former judgment was vacated and judgment for plaintiffs rendered. On July 9th, 1870, defendants' motion to vacate the latter judgment was vacated, and on July twelfth judgment for plaintiffs entered. The defendant Coleman appealed, and his appeal purports to be "from the judgment made and rendered against him on July 9th, 1870, and recorded July 12th, 1870."

Z. Montgomery, for Respondents.

The appeal in this case should be dismissed, for the reason that more than twelve months had elapsed between the making and entering of the order for judgment and the taking of this appeal. (See Genela v. Relyea, 32 Cal. 159; Casement v. Ringold, 28 Cal. 337; Gray v. Palmer, 28 Cal. 416; Peck v. Curtis, 31 Cal. 207.)

The order for judgment was made and entered on December 29th, 1869. The notice of appeal was dated March 29th, 1871.

B. S. Brooks and William M. Pierson, for Appellant.

The only ground for dismissing an appeal, under the statute, is the failure of the appellant to furnish the necessary papers. (Practice Act, Sec. 346.)

The right to have a cause heard in the Supreme Court is like the right to have the same cause heard in the District Court, constitutional, and cannot be taken away by a rule of Court, but only by the law.

The motion to dismiss an appeal is based upon an objection to any hearing of it. If the Court have to look into the transcript, then the case will come on in its regular order, and if the objection is well taken it will prevail, and the judgment will be affirmed. (Ricketson v. Compton, 23 Cal. 636; Day v. Walton, 2 Hill, 403; Rogers v. Hisack, 5 Hill, 521; Beecher v. Conrad, 11 How. Pr. 181.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

Findings were filed and judgment for the defendant rendered (though not recorded or entered in form by the Clerk) on the 17th day of December, 1869.

On the 29th day of December, 1869, upon motion of plaintiff, this judgment was vacated and set aside, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff (but not recorded or entered in form by the Clerk).

On the 9th day of July, 1870, a motion made by the defendant to set aside the judgment rendered on the twenty-ninth of December, coming on to be heard, was denied; and on July 12th, 1870, under the direction of the Court then given, judgment in favor of the plaintiff was formally recorded and entered against the defendant; and on March 27th, 1871, this appeal was taken from that judgment.

This judgment, as entered, was in pursuance of the order of December 29th, 1869; it recites that "on motion of plaintiff's attorney, made in open Court, which motion was based upon the findings of the Court, now on file herein, and upon the order of this Court duly made and entered on the 29th day of December, 1869, it is now ordered, adjudged," etc. It was therefore but the entry in form of the judgment rendered on the 29th day of December, 1869, and was in effect only a special direction to the Clerk to record in form the judgment which by the effect and operation of the order of December twenty-ninth he should have theretofore recorded in form.

The time limited for an appeal from the judgment, thus commenced to run from the 29th day of December, 1869, when the judgment was rendered. The appeal taken March 27th, 1871, was, therefore, too late, and the respondent's motion to dismiss it must, for that reason, be sustained.

But even if an appeal had been taken from the judgment within one year from the rendition (i. e., the order of December 29th, 1869), the supposed error of the order of that date could not have been reviewed upon such an appeal, for that order was one entered in the cause after the rendition of the judgment of December 17th, 1869, which it purported to set aside, and was itself, as being a special order made after final judgment, the subject of a distinct appeal (Practice Act, Sec. 347), to be taken in sixty days after the making of the order. Upon an appeal from a final judgment an order made in the cause which is itself, by statute, made the subject of a distinct appeal, cannot be reviewed.

The appeal must be dismissed; and it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice TEMPLE did not participate in the foregoing decision.

ship and dominion over it, operates in law as constructive notice to all the world of the claim of title under which the possessor holds.

EQUITABLE TITLE AS DEFENSE TO ACTION UNDER LEGAL TITLE.—Where the owner of land sold the same, and covenanted to execute a warranty deed therefor on payment of the purchase money, and the purchaser took and held actual possession, and afterwards paid the purchase money; held, that such purchaser's, or his grantee's, equitable title was a sufficient defense to an action of ejectment under the legal title, by the original owner, or any one holding under him, with notice.

REATTACHING OF EQUITIES ON REVESTING OF PROPERTY.—Where Sutter, Jr., having covenanted to convey land, with warranty, to Holman, conveyed to his father, who afterwards conveyed back to the son; held, that whether the father took with notice or not, the son, on receiving the reconveyance, took the land charged with Holman's equities.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action of ejectment for a lot on the southeast corner of Fifth and K streets, in the City of Sacramento. The facts of the claims of the respective parties are set forth in the opinion; but it may be added that the deed from Sutter Jr., by Burnett to Holman, was a bargain and sale deed of all right, title, and interest of the grantor, with a warranty against the claims of all persons whatsoever. There having been a judgment for defendants, and a motion for a new trial overruled, the plaintiff appealed.

Heard & McConnell and Haymond & Stratton, for Appellant.

The deed from Sutter, Sr., to Sutter, Jr., of October 14th, 1848, is a conveyance of a specific tract of land within certain defined boundaries, which do not include the property in controversy.

Again, the deed executed by Burnett, in the name of Sutter Jr., to Holman, was made when Sutter Jr., had no title and conveyed nothing. Being but a quitclaim deed, it did not pass the title subsequently acquired by Sutter, Jr. (Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 472; Kimball v. Semple, 25 Cal. 452; Morrison v. Wilson, 30 Cal. 348; Cadiz v. Majors, 33 Cal. 289; Rawle on Cov. for Title, 417, 419, note 1; 3 Wash. b. on R. P. 483, and note 1.)

Samuel Cross and Robert C. Clark, for Respondents.

The deed from Sutter, Sr., to Sutter, Jr., does include the premises, as this Court has already decided. (Mayo v. Marzeaux, 38 Cal. 442.)

The deed from Sutter, Jr., by Burnett to Holman, is not a quitclaim deed, but a deed with warranty of title, and does not come within the rule laid down in the cases cited by appellant. A covenant of warranty in a deed otherwise quitclaim carries with it an after-acquired title, if such is the intention. (Sweet v. Green, 1 Paige, 473; Gibbs v. Thayer, 6 Cushing, 30; Van Rensselaer v. Kenney, 11 How. 332.)

The plaintiff and his grantors are estopped by the deed and agreement from Sutter, Sr., to Burnett, to deny that defendants' grantors acquired title by virtue of the deed executed by Burnett in the name of Sutter, Jr. (Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 38.) But whether the last mentioned deed conveyed title or not, the judgment was correct, for the reason that defendants and their grantors purchased in good faith, paid the purchase money, and entered into and have held possession all the time under a bond from Sutter, Jr., for a warrantee deed.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

It is no longer an open question in this Court whether the deed of October 14th, 1848, from Sutter, Sr., to Sutter, Jr., includes the site of Sacramento City. In Mayo v. Marzeaux, 38 Cal. 442, we had this precise question under consideration, and held that the deed includes the site of said city. Nothing has since occurred to create a doubt as to the correctness of that decision. On the contrary, the argument of the present case has but strengthened our former views on this point.

The plaintiff's title to the demanded premises is de-raigned as follows: First — Through a grant to Sutter, Sr., made by the Mexican Government in 1841, and which has been finally confirmed and patented to him. Second — A deed from Sutter, Sr., to Sutter, Jr., dated May 7th, 1850. Third — A deed from Sutter, Jr., to Mesick, dated July 9th, 1855. Fourth — Through regular mesne conveyances from Mesick to the plaintiff. This established a prima facie title in the plaintiff.

To rebut this prima facie case the defendants set up: "First — A conveyance from Sutter, Sr., to Sutter, Jr., dated October 14th, 1848, and a written contract made subsequently, in the latter part of that year, between Sutter, Jr., and Burnett, by which the former agreed to place all his town property in the hands of the latter for sale, and to give him one fourth of the proceeds of the sale as a compensation for his services. Second — A power of attorney from Sutter, Jr., to Burnett, dated 18th January, 1849, empowering him to sell at his discretion any property of the former situate in Sacramento City, and to convey the premises so sold to the purchasers by good and sufficient deeds, with covenants of warranty. Third — A sale by Burnett, as attorney in fact for Sutter, Jr., of the premises in controversy in this action to one Holman, prior to the 26th of June, 1849, and a title bond from Sutter, Jr., to Holman, whereby he bound himself to convey the property, with warranty, on the payment of the purchase money. Fourth — A deed from Sutter, Jr., to Sutter, Sr., dated June 25th, 1849, whereby the former reconveyed to the latter all the property conveyed by the latter to the former by the deed of

October 14th, 1848, excepting, however, from the conveyance 'any and all lots of land lying and being within the afore-described boundaries which the said party of the first part may have granted and conveyed by deed or deeds bearing date anterior to that of these presents.' Fifth — An instrument in writing from Sutter, Sr., to Burnett, dated July 24th, 1849, which recites the fact of the conveyance of October 14th, 1848, from Sutter to his son, and the contract between the latter and Burnett, together with the power of attorney and the reconveyance of June 25th, 1849, and the further fact that sales had been made by Burnett for which deeds had not been executed, and then proceeds to authorize Burnett to 'go on and close up all sales made previous to the notification of said reconveyance, * * * and execute deeds for them under the power of attorney given by said John A. Sutter, Jr., the said John A. Sutter hereby confirming said conveyances.' Sixth — That Holman paid the purchase money for the premises in controversy, and on the 15th of January, 1850, Burnett, as attorney in fact of Sutter, Jr., conveyed them to him by deed. Seventh — That Holman, immediately after his purchase, went into possession of the premises, and he and his grantees have ever since continued in possession, and have erected thereon expensive and permanent improvements of great value. Eighth — That whatever title Holman acquired is vested in the defendants." It further appears in the case that, when Sutter, Jr., reconveyed the property to his father by the deed of June 25th, 1849, he also assigned and transferred to him all the purchase money remaining unpaid upon sales previously made by Burnett under the power of attorney from Sutter, Jr.

These being the facts, the first point for inquiry is, whether the plaintiff occupies any other or better position than Sutter, Jr., would have done if he had never conveyed to Mesick, or any one else, the title which he acquired from his father by the deed of May 7th, 1850, and if he had himself been the plaintiff in the action. If the present plaintiff occupies a more favorable position it can only be because he, or some one of his grantors through whom the title passed, was an innocent purchaser, in good faith, without notice of the defendants' equities. If Mesick and all the subsequent grantees, down to and including the plaintiff, had notice, either actual or constructive, of these equities, the plaintiff stands in no better position than Sutter, Jr., his grantor, would have occupied had he been the plaintiff, holding the title acquired from his father under the deed of May 7th, 1850.

The parties, plaintiff and defendant, claim under a common source of title; and as early as July, 1849, Holman was in possession of these premises under his purchase from Sutter, Jr., and he and his grantees have ever since been in the actual possession, and have erected expensive and valuable improvements thereon. That the actual possession of land, with the exercise of the usual acts of ownership and dominion over it, operate in law as constructive notice to all the world of the claim of title under which the possessor holds, is too well settled to merit discussion. When Mesick took his conveyance from Sutter, Jr., in 1855, Holman, or his grantee, was in the actual and exclusive possession, having fully paid the purchase money, and claiming title, not only under his original purchase, but under a recorded deed made in 1850 by Burnett, as attorney in fact for Sutter, Jr., under a duly recorded power of attorney. The possession of Holman and his grantees, under these circumstances, was constructive notice to Mesick; and all subsequent grantees claiming under him are likewise affected with notice by the continued exclusive possession of the defendants and their grantors holding under Holman. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff occupies no better position than Sutter, Jr., would have done had he been the plaintiff, holding the title conveyed to him by his father in May, 1850.

What relation, then, did Sutter, Jr., occupy towards the property when he received from his father the deed of May 7th, 1850? Could he have maintained ejectment against Holman, then in possession, who had purchased the property from him, and had paid the purchase money, and with whom he had entered into a covenant that, on the payment of the purchase money, he would convey the title, with a covenant of warranty? It is obvious, for several reasons, that he could not have maintained the action: First—If the legal title passed from him to his father by the deed of June 25th, 1849, his father took it with notice of Holman's equities. If he had not express notice of the sale to Holman, he had information enough to put him on inquiry, which is equivalent to express notice. But, if he had no notice, either actual or constructive, nevertheless, when he reconveyed the title to his son in May, 1850, there can be no doubt that the latter took it, charged with Holman's equities, as fully and to the same extent as if he had not made the conveyance to his father. He was still bound by his covenant to convey, with warranty, and if he had refused to perform his agreement a Court of equity would have compelled him. If he had made no written covenant to convey, nevertheless he had sold the land to Holman, who had paid the purchase money and was let into the possession, and this entitled the latter to a specific performance of the contract. Sutter, Jr., had the legal title in trust for Holman and his successors in interest; and, in a suit for specific performance, a Court of equity would have compelled him to convey in accordance with his contract. Holding the naked legal title, he would not have been allowed to disturb his vendee, who was rightfully in possession, holding the equitable title. (Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547.) This view of the case is decisive of it. Sutter, Jr., could not have maintained ejectment against the defendants, even though he had never parted with the legal title acquired through the deed of May 7th, 1850; and the present plaintiff, as has been already stated, is in no better position. He has no other or better status than Sutter, Jr., had, inasmuch as Mesick and all his successors in interest purchased with constructive notice of defendants' equities, and, therefore, were not purchasers in good faith.

Second—I have a grave doubt whether these premises were not excepted from the conveyance from Sutter, Jr., to Sutter, Sr., and whether the instrument from the latter to Burnett was not, in its legal effect, a power of attorney, authorizing the conveyance to Holman, and whether, in a Court of equity, the conveyance would not have been treated as the deed of Sutter, Sr. But it is unnecessary to decide these points, and I, therefore, express no opinion upon them.

The point as to the regularity of the term of the Court at which the cause was tried is not tenable. (Talbert v. Hopper, decided at the present term.)

THOMAS A. TALBERT v. WILLIAM HOPPER AND CHARLES HEINRICH.

JUDICIAL NOTICE OF TERMS OF DISTRICT COURTS.—The Supreme Court will take judicial notice of the regular terms of the District Courts as fixed by statute, and also of the fact that they are authorized by statute (Stats. 1863-4, p. 118), to adjourn any general term in one county within their districts to a day certain within the time prescribed for the commencement of the next term in the same county, provided such special term shall not interfere with any general term in such district.

ADJOURNED TERM OF DISTRICT COURT.—Where the general February Term of the Sixth District Court for Sacramento County must have commenced on February first and concluded prior to March fifteenth; and the general March Term of the same Court for Yolo County must have commenced on March fifteenth and concluded prior to April fifth; held, that under and by compliance with the Act of 1864, providing for adjourned terms (Stats. 1863-4, p. 118,) such Court could hold a legal session in Sacramento County, after March fifteenth, and up to April fifth.

PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF LEGALITY OF SESSIONS OF DISTRICT COURT.—

Where it appeared from a record on appeal from a District Court for a certain county that the trial took place on a day subsequent to the regular general term in such county; held, that as by compliance with the statute of 1864, relative to adjourned terms (Stat. 1863-4, p. 118), such Court could be legally held at such time, it would be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that it was legally held.

VESTING OF TITLE UNDER DEED UPON CONDITION PRECEDENT.—The instrument executed by John A. Sutter, Jr., to Brannan, Bruce, Graham, and Wetzlar, on June 20th, 1850, in reference to Sacramento and other property, was a deed upon condition precedent; and upon the performance of that condition, which was the payment of the purchase money, the title to the lands described vested in grantees.

EJECTMENT FOUNDED UPON TITLE.—Where a plaintiff relies upon title as the basis of his right to recover possession, and fails to establish his title, the judgment is properly rendered against him.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

Ejectment for three building lots in the City of Sacramento. The deed from John A. Sutter, Jr., to Samuel Brannan, Samuel C. Bruce, Julius Wetzlar, and James S. Graham, referred to in the opinion, was, in form, a grant, bargain, and sale deed, coupled with a full power of attorney to take possession of and in his name to sell, twenty-two hundred building lots in the City of Sacramento, and various other property, the consideration for which, one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars in all, was thereafter to be paid, one-fifth on July 1st, 1850, one-fifth on September 29th, 1850, and the balance on July 1st, 1851; and containing a provision and covenant that in case the said payments should be made as stipulated, " then this instrument is to take effect as a full and complete conveyance in fee of all and singular the lands, tenements, hereditaments, appurtenances, and real estate, in the State of California, belonging to or in which the said party of the first part, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns is or are in any way entitled or interested; and the said party of the first part, for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, doth further covenant to and with the said parties of the second part, their heirs and assigns, that in case the said party of the first part, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, in any way neglect or refuse to fulfill the above covenants made by the said party of the first part for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, then this instrument is to take effect immediately thereupon as a full and complete conveyance in fee of all and singular the lands, tenements, hereditaments, appurtenances, and real estate whatsoever and wheresoever in the State of California, belonging to or in which the said party of the first part, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns is or are in any way entitled or interested."

The cause was substantially the same as that of Talbert v. Singleton, reported ante, with which, and others, it was tried in the Court below, commencing on March 18th, 1869. There having been a judgment for defendants and motion for new trial overruled, plaintiff appealed.

Heard & McConnell and Haymond & Stratton, for Appellants.

Robert C. Clark and Samuel Cross, for Respondents.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

On the reopening of the original submission of this cause, appellant made and now urges the point that on the 18th day of March, 1869, and on the succeeding days, which by the record is shown to have been the time when the cause was tried, the Sixth Judicial District Court for the County of Sacramento could have had no legal existence, except upon special conditions, and that the record in the case failing to show affirmatively the existence of these prerequisite conditions the trial is a nullity. This Court will take judicial notice of the regular terms of the District Courts, as fixed by statute, and also of the fact that by statute the several District Courts of the State are authorized to adjourn any general term of their Court in one county composing their district to a day certain within the time prescribed by law for the commencement of the next term for such county; provided such special term shall not interfere with a general term in such district. (Stats. 1863-4, p. 118.) The general terms of the District Court for Sacramento County are fixed by law to commence on the first Mondays of February, April, June, August, October, and December of each year; and for Yolo County, the only other county composing the Sixth Judicial District, on the third Mondays of March, July, and November of each year. The general February Terms of the Sixth District Court for Sacramento County must, therefore, be held commencing on the first Monday of February, and concluded before the third Monday of March in each year; and for the year 1869 such general term must have commenced on the first day of February, and have concluded at some time prior to the fifteenth day of March; and the general March Term of said Court for Yolo County must have commenced on the fifteenth day of March, and have concluded at some time prior to the first Monday or fifth day of April, the day fixed by law for the commencement of the general April Term for Sacramento County.

By the Act of March 1st, 1864, above referred to, it is provided as follows: "It shall be lawful for the District Court sitting in any county of this State, by an order entered on its minutes, to adjourn the Court to a day certain within the time fixed by law for the commencement of the next term in such county, notwithstanding a term or terms for some other county within the same district may intervene; provided that such special term shall not interfere with any general term in said district."

It appears by the terms of this Act, it was possible and entirely competent for the Sixth Judicial District Court to have been in session as such Court for the County of Sacramento on the 18th day of March, 1869, and to have continued such session as a legally constituted District Court for Sacramento County up to and including the 3d day of April, 1869, by a compliance with the provisions of the statute of March 1st, 1864. The general March Term of said Court for Yolo County, in the year 1869, must have commenced on the fifteenth day of March, and may have been finally adjourned before the eighteenth day of March. There is nothing in the record before this Court tending to show that the terms and conditions of this Act of March 1st, 1864, had not been fully answered; and in the absence of such showing by the record it must be presumed that what was done by the Court below was properly and legally done; that the prerequisite steps and conditions necessary to constitute a legal District Court in the County of Sacramento on the 18th day of March, 1869, had been taken and existed. Error is not to be presumed, but when alleged it must be affirmatively shown.

The instrument executed by John A. Sutter, Jr., to Brannan, Bruce, Graham, and Wetzlar, dated June 20th, 1850, was unquestionably a deed upon condition precedent, and upon full performance of the precedent condition, to wit: the payment of the purchase price agreed upon by the grantees to the grantor, his title to the lands described therein vested in the grantees. The question of fact as to whether the purchase price was fully paid or settled by the grantees, to the satisfaction of and accepted by the grantor, prior to the 9th day of July, 1855, the date of the deed from the same grantor to William Mesick, through whom plaintiff claims title to the demanded premises, must have been found in the affirmative by the Court below. The record discloses no evidence upon this question, except the evidence of Julius Wetzlar, one of the grantees in the deed of June 20th, 1850; and I am not prepared to say that this evidence is insufficient to justify the finding. This deed of June 20th, 1850, included the premises in controversy; and the conditions thereof having been fully performed by the grantees named therein, to the satisfaction of the grantor, prior to the 9th day of July, 1855, the title vested absolutely in the grantees prior to that date; hence, on that date John A. Sutter, Jr., had no title in the demanded premises to convey to Mesick, through whom plaintiff claims. The plaintiff, therefore, having relied upon title as a basis of his right to recover the possession, and failed to establish his title, judgment was properly rendered against him.

Judgment affirmed.

THOMAS U. SWEENEY v. JAMES REILLY ET AL.

SERVICE OF NOTICE OF APPEAL.—The statute provides no time within which notice of appeal must be served, except that it must be served before the undertaking on appeal is filed.

ABANDONMENT — INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE.—S. sued R. in ejectment, and proved a prima facie prior possession; in order to show that S. had abandoned the premises for others, R. offered a preemption declaration by S. made under the Act of April 22d, 1852, and the evidence was admitted. Held, that the admission was erroneous.

PRESUMPTION OF INJURY.—Injury will be presumed from error, where the record fails to show that no error was done.

Statement of Facts.

ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTIONS — BETTER POSSESSION.— In an action of ejectment it is error to instruct the jury that the defendant, being in possession, plaintiff cannot recover unless he prove an earlier and better possession.

IDEM — ABANDONMENT.— In such a case it is not error to refuse to instruct the jury that after the entry of defendant no neglect or omission of plaintiff in taking or exercising possession of the land, can be considered as an indication of abandonment.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action of ejectment commenced in May, 1864. The trial was by the Court with a jury. The plaintiff introduced evidence tending to prove that he had moved upon the land in suit in 1854, had cultivated it, and exercised other acts of ownership over it, continuously, until 1863.

The following paper, duly subscribed and sworn to by the plaintiff, was offered in evidence by the defendant, and was admitted by the Court against the plaintiff's objection:

“Know all men by these presents, that I, Thomas U. Sweeney, of the County of San Francisco, in the State of California, upon my oath do hereby depose and declare that I am now in the occupation of the following described tract or parcel of land, situated in the said county, and bounded and described as follows, to wit: Commencing at a point about two rods northeast of a certain spring, emptying into the adjoining ranch of one ‘Schaat;’ thence running south seven and one quarter ($7\frac{1}{4}$) degrees, west 4 73-100 chains; thence south seven and one half ($7\frac{1}{2}$) degrees east, 10 89-100 chains; thence south nineteen and three quarters ($19\frac{3}{4}$) degrees, west 3 63-100 chains; thence south seventeen (17) degrees west, 7 45-100 chains; thence south twenty-two and one half ($22\frac{1}{2}$) degrees west, 3 33-100 chains; thence south 6 50-100 chains; thence north eighty and one half ($80\frac{1}{2}$) degrees west, 49 chains; thence north 24 16-100 chains; thence north eighty-nine (89) degrees east, 24 80-100 chains; thence north eighty-five (85) degrees east, 27 85-100 chains, to the place of beginning. Being the same parcel of land and premises occupied by me. And I further state and declare that the lines of my said claim do not embrace more than one hundred and sixty acres of land.

"That I am a citizen of the United States, and that I have taken no other claim under the Act of the Legislature hereinafter mentioned, to the best of my knowledge and belief, and that the said land is not claimed under any existing title to my knowledge.

"And I further state and declare that improvements partaking of the realty have been made by me upon the said land, and that the same are now existing thereon, to the value of two hundred dollars.

"And that this declaration is made by me pursuant to an Act of the Legislature of the State of California, entitled 'An Act prescribing the mode of maintaining and defending possessory actions on public lands,' approved on the 20th day of April, A. D. 1852.

"In witness of the foregoing, I have hereunto set my hand this 19th day of June, A. D. 1860."

The jury rendered a verdict for the defendants, and judgment was rendered accordingly. The plaintiff moved for a new trial. The motion was denied, and he appealed from the order denying the motion and from the judgment.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Jarboe & Harrison, for Appellants.

The land described in the paper offered in evidence by the defendants was not the land in suit; and in that instrument the plaintiff merely swore as he was required to swear by the Act under which he was proceeding—that he had taken no other claim under that Act. It was, therefore, clearly immaterial and irrelevant for any purpose in this action. The Court erred in admitting it, and it will be presumed that the plaintiff was injured by the error. (3 Graham & Waterman, New Trials, 708; Spanagel v. Dellinger, 38 Cal. 283; Boyle v. Coleman, 13 Barb. 43; Richardson v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 346; Attwood v. Fricot, 17 Cal. 37.) The Court erred in giving the jury the instruction as to better possession. The prior possession need not be a better one, but only an earlier one. The law allows a plaintiff to recover on proof of prior possession, because that possession is prima facie evidence of title, and a proof of possession, however short, will enable a plaintiff to recover. (Potter v. Knowles, 5 Cal. 87; Adams on Ejectment, 137; 4 Johnson, 210.)

The Court erred in refusing the instruction asked by the defendants, that after the entry of the defendants upon the premises no neglect or omission of the plaintiff in taking or exercising possession of the land could be considered by the jury as an indication of an abandonment of the land, for the reason that a party cannot abandon what he has not in his possession. (Stephens v. Mansfield, 11 Cal. 365; Partridge v. McKinney, 10 Cal. 183.)

G. F. & A. H. Sharp, for Respondent.

The appeal must be dismissed, as the notice of appeal was not served until two days after the filing. The preëmption claim was admissible, not only as tending to prove that fact, but also as corroborative of defendants' evidence. The evidence established that plaintiff declared he had abandoned these premises for others on the San Miguel; and we show by his sworn statement that about the same time he did preëempt the identical premises he said he had. It may have been accumulative, but it was certainly relevant. It was not offered to contradict plaintiff, but it would have been admissible for that purpose.

The portion of the charge complained of was without injury. The prior possession of plaintiff was conceded. The defendants relied on abandonment alone. The instruction asked for by the defendant was rightly refused. The testimony established that plaintiff left without the intention of returning, and that intention ipso facto proved an abandonment. (Keane v. Cannivan, 20 Cal. 305; Bell v. Red Rock Company, 36 Cal. 217; Moon v. Rollins, 36 Cal. 337.)

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

The fact that the notice of appeal was not served until two days after it had been filed, is not a valid objection to the appeal. The statute prescribes no time within which this service must be made, except, of course, that it must be served before the undertaking is filed, which must be within five days after the notice has been filed.

The action was ejectment, and one of the issues made was whether the plaintiff had abandoned the premises before the entry of the defendants. This defense admitted the plaintiff's prior possession for the purposes of the defense. On the trial the defendants offered a certified copy of a statement and an affidavit made by the plaintiff under the provisions of an Act of the Legislature passed April 20th, 1852, entitled "An Act prescribing the mode of maintaining and defending possessory actions on public lands." The sworn statement recited that the land described in it was occupied by the affiant, and that he had taken no other claim under that Act. This was offered to show abandonment, and was received in evidence against the exceptions of the plaintiff.

The admission of this evidence was certainly erroneous, for the instrument in question could have had no bearing whatever upon the issue of abandonment. It was undoubtedly proper to show the acts of the plaintiff in removing his improvements from the premises claimed to have been abandoned, and in locating upon and improving a different tract. This, however, would not be sufficient in itself to show abandonment, and it could not be material in any respect to show that he claimed under an Act of the Legislature which attempted to prescribe what should constitute possession in a particular class of cases. Nor can we see, from the record, that this error did not prejudice the plaintiff. No evidence which is wrongly admitted because of its irrelevance or immateriality, ought to have weight with a jury; but it is sometimes difficult to say that it has not had weight. The jury may have been led to think that plaintiff could not honestly make such an affidavit while he was laying claim to another tract. Injury will be presumed from error where we cannot see from the record that none has been done. (Spanagel v. Dellinger, 38 Cal. 278.)

It was also error to instruct the jury that the defendants, being in possession, plaintiff could not recover, unless he proved an earlier and better possession. The possession need not have been better, as implying a comparison between the acts constituting the prior possession of the plaintiff and the present possession of defendants. The word has no point, unless in reference to such comparison. It cannot be understood as implying that a prior possession would be a better possession; and if such were the intention of the Judge who presided at the trial, the language failed to express his meaning, and was calculated to mislead the jury.

The instruction asked for by the plaintiff, to the effect that after the entry of defendants no neglect or omission of plaintiff, in taking or exercising possession of the land, can be considered as an indication of an abandonment, was properly refused. It is very true that one cannot abandon land when he has not possession, and also that the mere neglect or omission to assert one's title to land from which he has been ousted for a period, within the Statute of Limitations, is not evidence of abandonment. The question of abandonment is to a great extent one of intention, which must be shown from the circumstances of each case; and if the evidence were that the plaintiff left the premises sued for, and removed his improvements to another tract in the vicinity, and afterwards knew of the entry of the defendants and their claim of title, it might have a bearing upon the intentions of plaintiff with reference to the premises, if he stood by and saw the defendants improving and occupying the land for a long period of years, and asserted no claim. It would not work an estoppel, or be of itself evidence of abandonment, but it may well be taken into consideration, in connection with other circumstances, to throw light upon the intentions of the plaintiff.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

SPRAGUE, J., concurring specially:

I concur in the judgment solely on the ground of the error in giving the instruction referred to in the opinion.

FREDERICK KAPP v. ARTHUR H. GRIFFITH AND HARRIET W. GRIFFITH.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS AS TO SEPARATE PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMAN.

— As a married woman, under section seven of the Practice Act, may maintain ejectment for her separate property, without joining her husband, her coverture does not create a disability so as to save the bar of the Statute of Limitations as to such property — the amendment of April 18th, 1863 (Stats. 1863, p. 325), having changed the rule of the statute of 1850 on this subject.

ADVERSE POSSESSION OF SEPARATE PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMAN.—

Adverse possession for five years of the separate property of a married woman creates a bar under the Limitation Act of April 18th, 1863 (Stats. 1863, p. 325), and is a good defense to an action of ejectment by her or her grantee.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Alameda County.

Argument for Respondents.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

R. B. Noyes and M. G. Cobb, for Appellant.

Title by adverse possession does not run against a married woman. (Michall v. Wyatt, 2 Ala. 318; McDonald v. McGuire, 8 Texas, 361; 27 Conn. 70.)

Our amendatory statute of 1863 gave her the privileges of disability for five years after the passage of the law; and the plaintiff took his title under the disability, and the statute only commenced to run from the date of his conveyance. The Statute of Limitations does not run against a woman who was married at the time when the cause of action accrued, and it runs against her assignee only from the date of her conveyance to him. (Drennen v. Walker, 21 Ark. 529.)

In the exceptional cases mentioned in section seven of the Practice Act, the statute is not obligatory on the wife to sue or defend alone; it confers only a privilege which in many cases it may be important for her to assert for the protection of her interests, and in the exercise of which the fullest liberty should be accorded her.

In the absence of the exercise of this privilege by her, she ought, in harmony with the marital relation, to be viewed as relying on it for protection and electing to consider her husband a "necessary party" in everything that affects her interest. (Calderwood v. Peyser, 31 Cal. 335; Martindale v. Tibbets, 16 Ind. 200.)

A. H. Griffith, for Respondents.

The plaintiff's right to recover is barred by the Statute of Limitations, which makes adverse possession for five years conclusive evidence of title. (Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 385; Cannon v. Stockman, 36 Cal. 542; Moon v. Rollins, 36 Cal. 333; Leroy v. Rogers, 30 Cal. 234; Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black. 599.)

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, J.

But it is said that Mrs. Toler was a married woman at the time she and her husband executed their deed to Edmonson, the grantor of the defendants, and that the land conveyed was her separate property; therefore, the statute did not run against her. By referring to the statute, the fact that it was her separate property is the reason why the statute ran against her. The disability of coverture exists only when the husband is a necessary party with her in the suit. The Practice Act, section seven, provides that when the action concerns a married woman's separate property she may sue alone. And as the Statute of Limitations now stands, it runs against a married woman in all those actions to which her husband is not a necessary party with her in commencing the action, the same as against other parties. (Wilson v. Wilson, 36 Cal. 450.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

This was an action of ejectment, in which the defendant relied upon the Statute of Limitations, and judgment having been rendered in his favor, this appeal is taken from the judgment and from an order denying the plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The title to the premises in controversy was vested in Mrs. Maria A. Toler, a married woman, by deed of gift to her from her father, made in 1854. In 1856 Edmonson, who claimed to have acquired her title, entered into the adverse possession of the premises, inclosed them with a fence, built a dwelling house, barn, and other buildings, and planted most of the land with fruit trees, and resided thereon, with his family, until the year 1865, when the defendant entered into possession under a deed obtained upon a foreclosure of a mortgage made by Edmonson, and has since occupied the premises adversely. The plaintiff obtained a deed of conveyance of the premises from Mrs. Toler and her husband on the 29th day of December, 1864, and commenced this action on the 13th day of December, 1869 — the premises having then been held adversely by the defendant and his grantors some thirteen years.

It is urged that the deed by which Mrs. Toler conveyed, or attempted to convey, the premises to Edmondson in 1856 was insufficient to pass the title, by reason of a defective acknowledgment, but the views we entertain, irrespective of the supposed insufficiency of the deed, upon the defense of the Statute of Limitations as a bar to the action, render it unnecessary to consider the sufficiency of her conveyance to Edmondson.

It is urged that the fact that Mrs. Toler was a married woman from the year 1854 until and at the time she conveyed the premises to the plaintiff, in December, 1864, saved her claim of title from the operation of the statute, and that the plaintiff, having commenced the action within five years after he received his conveyance, his title is not affected by the bar.

The statute of 1850, defining the time for the commencement of civil actions, provided that if the person entitled to commence an action for the recovery of real property were a married woman, the time during which the coverture should continue should not be deemed a portion of the time limited for the commencement of the action; and, had not this provision of the statute been subsequently amended, it is clear that an action might have been brought by the plaintiff at any time within five years after the delivery to him of the deed under which he claims title. But on April 18th, 1863, the Act was amended in this respect, and by the amended Act the fact of coverture was declared not to create a disability, so as to save the bar of the statute in favor of the femme covert, except in those cases in which the husband was a necessary party to be joined with her in commencing the action. (Acts 1863, p. 325.) But the premises being the separate property of the wife here, the husband need not have been joined with her as a plaintiff in an action brought for their recovery. (Pr. Act, Sec. 7, Subd. 1.) And the theretofore existing disability by reason of coverture having been thus removed from Mrs. Toler, her title would become barred, under the sixth section of the amendatory Act of 1863, by the lapse of five years from the 18th day of April, 1863 — which period had fully run in April, 1868 — nearly two years before the commencement of the action.

The judgment and order denying a new trial must, therefore, be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice SPRAGUE did not participate in the foregoing decision.

L. L. BATCHELDER v. JOHN K. MOORE.

CONTEMPT OF COURT—POWER TO PUNISH.—The power of a Court to punish for an alleged contempt of its authority, though undoubted, is in its nature arbitrary, and its exercise is not to be upheld, except under the circumstances, and in the manner prescribed by law.

JURISDICTION IN CASES OF CONTEMPT.—It is essential to the validity of proceedings in contempt, subjecting a party to fine and imprisonment, that they show a case in point of jurisdiction within the provisions of the law by which such proceedings are authorized, for mere presumptions and intendments are not to be indulged in their support.

CONTEMPT NOT COMMITTED IN PRESENCE OF THE COURT.—When the alleged contempt is not committed in the presence of the Court an affidavit of the facts constituting the contempt must be presented, in order to set the power of the Court in motion. If the affidavit be defective in stating the facts, it is equivalent to the utter absence of an affidavit.

CONTEMPT UNDER THE ACT OF 1862.—Under the Act of 1862, for the punishment of contempts and trespasses, it is essential that the person accused be one who has been ejected or dispossessed, as provided in the Act.

CERTIORARI to the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

Upon an original application to the Supreme Court a writ of certiorari was granted, upon which the record of the proceedings of the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco in this case was brought up for review.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Joseph M. Kinley, for Petitioner.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

Upon certiorari to the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

Batchelder having recovered judgment against Moore only, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, instituted in the County Court, the latter was removed from the possession of the premises under a writ issuing upon that judgment.

Subsequently Batchelder filed an affidavit in the County Court, in which, after reciting the fact of his recovery against Moore, he alleged that Moore was ejected under the writ, and the affiant placed in possession; that thereafter one Clark intruded into the premises, and took possession thereof; that, on the same day that Clark entered, one Hickey brought an action in the District Court of the Twelfth District against Clark, to recover the premises from the latter, and that, by consent, a judgment in favor of Hickey and against Clark was immediately rendered, and on the next day Clark was removed, and Hickey placed in possession, under a habere facias issued upon that judgment; that the possession taken by Clark, and the action brought against him by Hickey, were induced and procured by Moore and one David Calderwood, the petitioner here.

The affidavit of Batchelder further alleged, that "Calderwood never had any right to, or claim to, or possession of, said lots of land, or any part thereof;" that at the time of the trial of the action of Batchelder v. Moore, "Calderwood pretended to be in possession of said lots of land, or to have some right thereto under said Moore, or as the principal of said Moore, and not otherwise;" and that the entry of Moore in the first instance was as an agent of Calderwood as well as in his own right, and that the possession taken by Clark, and the action brought against the latter by Hickey, were really procured by Moore and Calderwood, to evade and defeat the judgment and writ in the case of Batchelder v. Moore, and, therefore, amounted to contempt of the process of the County Court.

Upon presentation of this affidavit, the County Court directed Moore and Calderwood to show cause before it why they should not be punished for contempt in the premises. The parties appeared, and upon hearing the proceeding was dismissed as to Moore, but Calderwood was adjudged guilty of the contempt alleged against him, in the willful violation of the writ of restitution issued in the case of Batchelder v. Moore, through the instrumentality of the possession taken by Clark, and the recovery against the latter by Hickey; and for his contempt in that behalf it was adjudged that he be imprisoned in the common jail of the City and County of San Francisco for the space of five days, and pay a fine of five hundred dollars, and that he be imprisoned until the fine be paid, etc.

The power of a Court to punish for an alleged contempt of its authority, though undoubted, is in its nature arbitrary, and its exercise is not to be upheld, except under the circumstances and in the manner prescribed by law. It is essential to the validity of proceedings in contempt, subjecting a party to fine and imprisonment, that they show a case in point of jurisdiction within the provisions of the law by which such proceedings are authorized, for mere presumptions and intendments are not to be indulged in their support.

The statute of this State, regulating contempts and their punishments, provides, that when the alleged contempt is not committed in the presence of the Court an affidavit of the facts constituting the contempt shall be presented. (Prac. Act, Sec. 481.) If there be no affidavit presented there is nothing to set the power of the Court in motion, and if the affidavit, as presented, be one, which, upon its face, fails to state the substantive facts, which in point of law do, or might, constitute a contempt on the part of the accused, the same result must follow—for there is no distinction in such a case between the utter absence of an affidavit and the presentation of one which is defective in substance, in stating the facts constituting the alleged contempt.

In the case here the proceeding is based wholly upon the statute of 1862 (p. 115), "An Act for the punishment of contempts and trespasses." That statute provides that "every person who shall have been, or shall be hereafter, dispossessed or ejected from" premises under the judgment of a Court, and who shall himself reënter, or procure some one else to reënter, etc., shall be deemed guilty of a contempt, etc. It is essential that the person accused should be one who has been ejected or dispossessed, as provided in the Act; and unless he be such person the Act has no application whatever, and he cannot be guilty of the contempt therein denounced. In the affidavit of Batchelder there is a total omission to allege that Calderwood was such a person, and the omission is obviously jurisdictional in its consequences.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the order of the County Court is void for want of jurisdiction to enter it.

The order is reversed.

N. H. THOMASSON v. A. WOOD AND W. B. LONG.

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE STAMPS — DUFFY v. HOBSON, 40 CAL. 240, AFFIRMED.— On the point that the omission of a United States internal revenue stamp cannot be set up as a defense in a State Court to an action on contract.

RELIANCE UPON AUTHORITY AFTERWARDS OVERRULED — OPPORTUNITY TO MAKE OTHER POINTS.— Where a single defense was interposed to an action, and such defense was supported by a decision of the Supreme Court, which, however, was afterwards reversed; held, that judgment should not be rendered on the record, but the cause remanded for further proceedings.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Second Judicial District, Lassen County.

This was an action on a promissory note, dated September 12th, 1864, for six hundred and thirty-one dollars and ninety-one cents. There was a United States revenue stamp to the value of fifteen cents on it, duly canceled. The defendants set up the want of a sufficient stamp as a defense; and there was a judgment in their favor. The plaintiff appealed.

Hyndley & Martin, for Appellant.

The omission of a United States revenue stamp can in no case be set up as a defense in the Courts of this State to an action upon a contract. This was fully determined in the case of Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240. The Court there says:

“Congress has no constitutional authority to legislate concerning the rules of evidence administered in the Courts of this State, nor to affix conditions or limitations upon which those rules are to be applied and enforced, nor can it rightfully convert those Courts into tax gatherers for the benefit of the Federal Government, nor charge them with the duty of inquiring whether or not the revenue laws of the United States have been observed, or of investigating into the motives of parties in omitting to affix revenue stamps to contracts they have made. The case of Halleck v. Jandin, 34 Cal. 172, in so far as it intimates that the omission of a revenue stamp may, under certain circumstances, be set up as a defense in a State Court to an action upon a contract, is overruled."

John S. Ward and Burt & Sexton, for Respondents.

This case was decided upon the authority of Halleck v. Jandin. While the case of Duffy v. Hobson reverses the former adjudication, it is impossible to tell how far the fraud of the payee of a note will vitiate it or prevent it being used in evidence in an action for its collection. Unless the rule announced in Duffy v. Hobson is so absolute that even the fraud of a payee can not be shown for the purpose of defeating an action on the note, the judgment here should be sustained; because there is no finding or showing as to who was guilty of fraud against the Government, and the presumptions are all in favor of the correct action of the Court below.

But to whatever extent Halleck v. Jandin is overruled, it would be wrong for this Court to render a judgment which would prevent the defendants from having an opportunity for a new trial. The want of a sufficient stamp was, under that decision, an absolute and certain defense, and it was unnecessary to set up any other. But it is impossible to know what separate or different defenses the defendants may set up upon a new trial.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The judgment in this case is reversed on the authority of Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240. But when the answer was filed and the cause tried, the defendants may have been induced by the intimation of this Court in Halleck v. Jandin, 34 Cal. 172, to rest their defense solely on the ground that the note was not sufficiently or properly stamped with internal revenue stamps. Upon the intimations in that case they may well have concluded that this was a sufficient defense, and have therefore omitted to make other defenses which they might have set up.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

GILBERT PALACHE v. PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY.

REQUISITION ON INSURANCE COMPANY TO REPAIR CAPITAL STOCK.—The Insurance Commissioner may, under the Act of March 26th, 1868, creating his office (Stats. 1867-8, p. 336), legally require an insurance company, ascertained by him to be insolvent, as therein provided, to repair its capital stock without revoking its certificate.

STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION — GENERAL TENOR AND SCOPE OF LEGISLATIVE SCHEME.—In the construction of statutes for the purpose of ascertaining the legislative intent, regard is to be had not so much to the exact phraseology in which that intent has been expressed as to the general tenor and scope of the entire legislative scheme embodied in the statute.

INSURANCE COMMISSIONER'S POWERS — REQUISITION TO REPAIR STOCK WITHOUT REVOCATION OF CERTIFICATE.—The Act relating to the office, powers, and duties of Insurance Commissioner (Stats. 1867-8, p. 336) plainly distinguishes between the effect of a revocation of a certificate by such Commissioner and a requisition by him to repair capital stock; and it does not oblige him to make a revocation before he can require a repair.

DUTIES OF INSURANCE COMMISSIONER — DISCRETION.—The duties imposed upon the Insurance Commissioner, though generally defined by the Act creating his office (Stats. 1867-8, p. 336), are in their nature largely discretionary, and depend for their efficient performance in a great degree upon the exercise of an enlightened and careful discrimination with reference to the circumstances of the particular case with which he has to deal.

NO LIMIT TO ASSESSMENTS BY INSURANCE COMPANIES WHEN REQUIRED TO REPAIR CAPITAL STOCK.—The limitation of five per cent. in the imposition of assessments upon the capital stock of corporations, as provided by the Act of March 26th, 1866 (Stats. 1865-6, p. 458), has no application to assessments made by an insurance company, in response to a requisition of the Insurance Commissioner, under the Act of March 26th, 1868 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 336), for the repair of its capital stock.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

W. H. Rhodes, for Appellant.

The assessment of seventy-five per cent upon the capital stock of the Pacific Insurance Company was illegally levied, because:

1. The power to levy assessments upon the stock of corporations is limited by the statute of March 26th, 1866, to five per cent.

2. The antecedent requirements of the Act creating the office of Insurance Commissioner were not complied with before the requisition was served upon the company.

Section eight of the Act, after stating the particular circumstances under which the power of the Commissioner can be exercised by revoking the certificate of a company, provides that "in such cases he may require a repair of the capital stock." The "such cases" evidently alludes to those mentioned in the preceding clauses; and as the circumstances here do not present such a case, the Commissioner exceeded his powers, and the assessment is void.

S. M. Wilson, for Respondent.

The neglect of the Commissioner to revoke the certificate, or to publish, if obligatory on him, cannot impair the effect of his requisition. It was his duty to make the requisition, and he did it. On the requisition it was the duty of the company to levy the assessment, and they did it. The validity of the assessment can in no way depend on the revocation of the authority to do business. The revocation refers to the future merely; the requisition is to repair past losses. The assessment is to pay losses already accrued; and those losses must be paid whether any further business be done or not. The two matters are not dependent on each other.

The spirit and object of the whole Act relating to this subject must be considered. In construing it, force and effect should be given, if possible, to each of its provisions. (French v. Teschemacher, 24 Cal. 639.) Viewed in this light, the words "such cases" mean cases of insolvency, and not cases of revocation of authority and newspaper notice. Taking the whole section together, it would seem that the validity of the assessment depends on the requisition, and the requisition depends on the ascertainment by the Commissioner of the insolvency under the artificial standard established. In fact, it would not be unreasonable to hold that where the Commissioner has power to compel an assessment a company may voluntarily levy it.

The limit of assessments to five per cent, under the Act of 1866, does not apply to cases like the present. The five per cent assessment is "for the purpose of paying the proper and legal expenses of such corporation." The assessment under the insurance laws, is to repair the capital where it has been impaired twenty per cent.; and, consequently, such assessment is only limited by the amount necessary to make up the deficiency.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The appeal in this case was taken from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant in the Court below, upon the following case agreed:

"1. On the 14th of July, 1863, the Pacific Insurance Company became a body politic and corporate, under the Act of the Legislature of this State entitled 'An Act concerning corporations,' approved April 22d, 1850, and the several Acts amendatory thereto up to said 14th of July, 1863, and duly organized immediately thereafter, and has ever since continued in business as a corporation; the objects for which the company was formed are stated in the certificate of incorporation to be to form an insurance company and to make contracts of indemnity, grant policies of insurance, and transact all other business which a corporation so formed may lawfully do.

" 2. On the 11th of July, 1866, the said company, by due proceedings taken under the Act of the Legislature of this State entitled 'An Act relating to fire and marine insurance companies,' approved April 2d, 1866, adopted the provisions of the said Act.

" 3. On the 11th day of February, 1867, by due proceedings had under the statutes in such cases made and provided, the said company increased its capital stock from seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars to one million dollars.

" 4. On the 4th of June, 1868, W. Ashburner became the owner of ten shares in the capital stock of said company, and received therefor a certificate in form prescribed by the Directors and the by-laws of the company; the certificate was in the words and figures following, viz.:

" 'Incorporated July, 1863.

" 'Pacific Insurance Company.

" 'Capital, $1,000,000.

10,000 shares, $100 each.

" 'SAN FRANCISCO, June 4th, 1868.

" 'This certifies that W. Ashburner is entitled to ten shares of the capital stock of the Pacific Insurance Company. Transferable on the books of the company only in compliance with the conditions printed on the back of this certificate.

" 'J. HUNT, President.

" 'A. J. RALSTON, Secretary.'

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

“‘No transfer of stock shall be made upon the books of the company until after the payment of all assessments imposed thereon, and of all the indebtedness due to the company by the person in whose name the stock stands on the books of the company, except with the consent of the Finance Committee; nor shall any transfer be made without the indorsement and surrender of this certificate.

“‘For value received I, or we, do hereby sell and assign unto ——— ten shares of the capital stock of the Pacific Insurance Company, as per this certificate; and I, or we, constitute and appoint ——— my, or our, true and lawful attorney, for me or us, and in my, or our, name and stead, to transfer the above number of shares and to sign and execute all necessary papers to that end, hereby ratifying all lawful acts of my, or our, said attorney done by virtue hereof.

“‘San Francisco, ———.

“‘Witness: ———.’

“5. On the 30th of October, 1871, the said Ashburner sold his said ten shares of stock to Gilbert Palache, and made an assignment thereof on the back of the certificate by filling in the name of said Palache in the blank places left therefor in the said printed form of assignment, and by signing his name at the foot of said assignment, and delivering the same to said Palache.

“6. Afterwards, and on the same day, said Palache presented himself at the office of said company with the said certificate of stock so indorsed and signed by said Ashburner, and offered to surrender said certificate for cancellation, and requested the officers of said company to enter the said transfer on the books of said corporation, and that a new certificate be issued to him for the same.

"7. The officers of said company refused to receive and cancel said certificate, and refused to enter such transfer on the books of the corporation, upon the grounds that an assessment of seventy-five per cent had been duly levied upon said capital stock on the 20th of October, 1871, and remained unpaid. The said Ashburner and Palache each refused to pay said assessment, on the ground that the same was not legal and binding.

"8. The by-laws of the company at the time aforesaid, and now in force, provide, among other things, as follows, viz.:

" "TRANSFER OF STOCK.

" "SEC. 13. The stock of the company shall be transferable in such manner as is provided by section twelve of an Act concerning corporations, passed April 22d, 1850, as the same was amended April 8th, 1862; but no transfer of stock shall be made upon the books of the company until after the payment of all assessments imposed thereon, and of all indebtedness due to the company by the person in whose name the stock stands on the books of the company, excepting with the consent of the Finance Committee; nor shall any transfer be made without the surrender of the certificate, and upon such surrender the word "canceled" shall be written across the face of the certificate by the Secretary, and the signatures of the officers shall be erased, and such certificate so canceled shall be preserved by pasting the same to the stub from which it was torn in the Certificate Book; provided, however, that the original corporators may, by their instrument in writing, duly assign to the persons who have signed the Subscription Book the amount of stock by each respectively subscribed. And the restrictions upon the transfer of stock expressed in this section shall be printed upon the back of each certificate of stock.'

"9. The assessment above referred to was made under the following circumstances and in the following mode — that is to say:

“ On the 20th of October, 1871, the Hon. George W. Mowe, the Insurance Commissioner of the State of California, made an examination of the business and affairs of said Pacific Insurance Company, induced thereto by reason of the late disastrous fire at the City of Chicago, Illinois, and, upon said examination, ascertained and declared that the condition of said company was as is shown in the requisition herein below set forth.

“ 10. The Insurance Commissioner immediately thereafter, and upon the said 20th of October, 1871, gave notice to said company, and made his requisitions in the words and figures following, viz.:

“ ‘ OFFICE OF INSURANCE COMMISSIONER,
“ ‘ SAN FRANCISCO, October 20th, 1871. } ”

“ ‘ To the Pacific Insurance Company, its President, Vice President, and Directors:

“ ‘ You will please take notice that, after inspecting and examining the affairs of your company, with a view to ascertain its condition and ability to fulfill its engagements, which examination was made because of the recent disastrous fire at the City of Chicago, Illinois, and at the request of your officers, I have ascertained and declared that the liability of said company for losses reported, for expenses, taxes, and re-insurance of all outstanding risks, estimated at fifty per cent of the premiums received on fire risks and marine time risks, and at the entire premium on all marine risks, would and do impair the capital stock of said company already paid in to an extent exceeding twenty per cent.

“ ‘ And I do, therefore, pursuant to the statute of this State in such cases made and provided, require the said

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

Pacific Insurance Company to repair its capital on or before the 30th of December, A. D. 1871.

“(Signed)

GEORGE W. MOWE,

“ ‘Insurance Commissioner.’

[Seal of Insurance Commissioner.]

“11. The said Insurance Commissioner did not, on ascertaining the condition of said company to be as set forth in his said notice and requisition, nor before making his said requisition, nor has he at any time since revoked the certificate of authority which he had previously granted said company to do business, and under which it had been doing business, at the time of said examination and requisition, and did not give or publish any notice of revocation of such certificate of authority; but said Commissioner gave, on said 20th of October, 1871, the notice and requisition herein above set forth.

“12. After receiving from said Insurance Commissioner the notice and requisition aforesaid, and upon the same day, the Board of Directors of said company, duly assembled, did forthwith call upon its stockholders, by assessment, for the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, being the amount necessary to make its capital equal to the amount required by the statute in such cases made and provided—that is to say, said Board of Directors passed the following resolution and made the following order, viz.:

“ ‘WHEREAS, This company has, on this 20th day of October, 1871, been notified by the Hon. George W. Mowe, Insurance Commissioner of the State of California, that, upon an examination of the business and affairs of this company, he has ascertained that the liabilities of this company, for losses reported, for expenses, taxes, and re-insurance of outstanding risks, estimated at the rate fixed by the statute in such cases made and provided, would impair the capital stock of this company already paid in, to an extent exceeding twenty per cent, and

“ ‘ WHEREAS, Said Commissioner has, also, made his requisition upon this company, requiring it to repair its capital on or before the 30th of December, 1871, and

“ ‘ WHEREAS, Pursuant to said requisition of said Insurance Commissioner, it is necessary to call upon the stockholders, by assessments, for such amount as will repair its capital, according to the statute in such cases made and provided — that is to say, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or seventy-five per cent of the capital stock ; therefore

“ ‘ Resolved, That an assessment of seventy-five dollars per share be, and the same is hereby, levied upon the capital stock of this company, payable on and after the twenty-first day of October, instant, to the President and Vice President of this company, at the office of the company, No. 422 California street, in the City and County of San Francisco, California ; and that any stock upon which said assessments shall remain unpaid on the 1st day of December, 1871, shall be deemed delinquent, and shall be duly advertised for sale at public auction, and, unless payment be made before, shall be sold on the 18th day of December, 1871, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.’

“ 13. Upon the making of said order last aforesaid, the Secretary of said company caused to be published immediately, and daily thereafter, in two daily newspapers, published in the City and County of San Francisco, California, which is the principal place of business and office of said company, a notice, of which the following is a copy, viz. :

“ ‘ NOTICE TO STOCKHOLDERS PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY,

Having its location and principal place of business at the City and County of San Francisco, California—Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Directors of said company held on the 20th day of October, 1871, an assessment of seventy-five dollars per share was levied upon the capital stock of said company, payable on and after the 21st day of October, 1871, to the President and Vice President of this company, at the office of the company, No. 422 California street, in the City and County of San Francisco, California.

“Any stock upon which said assessment shall remain unpaid on the 1st day of December, 1871, shall be deemed delinquent, and will be duly advertised for sale at public auction, and, unless payment shall be made before, will be sold on the 18th day of December, 1871, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with cost of advertising and expenses of sale.

“No. 422 California street, San Francisco, California, October 20th, 1871.”

Upon the foregoing facts it is contended by the plaintiff, Palache, that the said assessment is not a legal and valid assessment, but that the same is null and void, and affords no legal impediment to the transfer of said ten shares of stock of said company on its books, and that said officers are bound by law to cause the said transfer and assignment to be entered on the said books. The said company contends that said assessment is valid, legal, and binding, and that, until paid, it is not bound under its by-laws and the form of the said certificate, so delivered to said Ashburner, to enter said transfer and assignment in its books, or otherwise recognize said assignment.

The question, therefore, presented to the Court for its decision, is, whether the said assessment, so levied, is legal, valid, and binding, and to render judgment accordingly. If judgment be against the said Palache, it shall be that he take nothing by said proceedings as against said Pacific Insurance Company, but shall pay the costs of this proceeding.

If judgment be against the said company, it shall be for the sum of three hundred dollars, the agreed value of said ten shares of stock, with costs of this proceeding.

Upon the oral argument the judgment was affirmed from the bench, but the importance of the points involved renders it proper that a statement be made of the views upon which the judgment proceeded.

The statute upon which the controversy arose is the Act of March 26th, 1868, creating the office of Insurance Commissioner (Acts of 1867-8, p. 336); so far as it is material to the points made in argument, it is as follows:

“Sec. 7. Whenever the liabilities of any person engaged in the insurance business, for losses reported, for expenses, taxes, and re-insurance of all outstanding risks, estimated at fifty per cent of the premiums received on fire risks and marine time risks, and at the entire premiums on all other marine risks, and at such rates for life, accidental, and other kinds of insurance as shall be generally accepted by the actuaries of the States of New York and Massachusetts, would impair his capital stock already paid in to an extent exceeding twenty per cent, such person is hereby declared to be insolvent.

“Sec. 8. Whenever it shall be ascertained by the Commissioner that any person engaged in the insurance business in this State is insolvent, within the true intent and meaning of this Act, he shall, and is hereby empowered to revoke the certificate granted in behalf of such person, and shall send by mail to such person, addressed to him at his principal place of business, or deliver to him personally, notice of such revocation, and shall cause notice of such revocation to be filed in his office, and also to be published in some public newspaper published in the City of San Francisco, for at least four weeks; and such person is required, after receiving notice of said revocation, or after the first publication thereof, to discontinue the issuing of any new policies and the renewal of any previously issued; and in such cases the Commissioner shall require the said person, or his manager or agent, to repair its capital within such period as he may designate in such requisition. Any company, corporation, or association receiving the aforesaid requisition from the Commissioner, shall forthwith call upon its stockholders, by assessments, for such amounts as will make its capital equal to the amount of its paid-up capital, exclusive of assets needed to pay all ascertained liabilities for losses reported, for expenses and taxes, and exclusive of the entire premiums received for outstanding risks; and in case any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay the amount so called for, it shall be lawful for said company, corporation, or association, to enforce such assessment by such notice and sale as are provided for by the Act entitled an Act concerning assessments upon the stock of corporations, approved March 26th, 1866. In case any person, upon the requisition of the Commissioner as aforesaid, shall fail to make up the deficiency of his capital in accordance with the requirements aforesaid, or to comply in all respects with the insurance laws of this State, the Commissioner shall communicate the facts to the Attorney General, whose duty it shall then become to commence an action in the name of the people of this State, in the District Court of the judicial district where the person in question is located or has his principal office, against such person, and apply for an order requiring him to show cause why his business should not be closed; and the Court shall thereupon proceed to hear the allegations and proofs of the respective parties as in other cases; and in case it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Court that such person is insolvent, as aforesaid, or that the interests of the public so require, the Court shall decree a dissolution of such company, corporation, association, or firm, and a winding up of its affairs and a distribution of the effects of such person. But otherwise, the Court shall enter a decree annulling the act of the Commissioner in the premises, and authorizing such person to resume business. But the Commissioner shall not be held liable for damages in the attempted performance of his duty herein, if he has acted in good faith. In the event of any additional losses occurring upon new risks taken after the expiration of the period limited by the Commissioner in the requisition, and before the deficiency shall have been filled up, the Directors of any company, corporation, or association shall be individually liable to the extent thereof."

1. It was objected in argument upon the part of the appellant, that the requisition of the Commissioner, by which he required the company to repair their capital stock, and in assumed obedience to which the company levied the assessment complained of, was itself invalid and unauthorized by the provisions of the statute already referred to, because the Commissioner did not then, or at any time, revoke the certificate of authority which he had previously, under section four of the statute, granted to the company, authorizing it to transact insurance business. It was argued, in this connection, that the phrase "in such cases," occurring in section eight, and defining the cases in which such a requisition is authorized, embraces only those cases in which the Commissioner had not only ascertained the fact of insolvency, but had also revoked the certificate itself. It was said that the language employed in the statute (section eight) is mandatory upon the Commissioner, that whenever he shall ascertain the fact of insolvency, he shall, and is hereby empowered to revoke "the certificate granted," etc. It is well settled that in the construction of statutes, for the purpose of ascertaining the legislative intent, regard is to be had not so much to the exact phraseology in which that intent has been expressed, as to the general tenor and scope of the entire legislative scheme embodied in the Act.

Mere philology often sticks in the bark, and so becomes an obstruction rather than an aid to a correct exposition of the meaning of the statute. The Act under consideration plainly distinguishes between the effect of a revocation notified and a requisition received. In the former case it declares that the company shall absolutely discontinue the taking of new risks, the issuing of new policies, and the renewal of old ones. (Sec. 8.) Such revocation deprives the company of the certificate of authority which (under section nine) it must possess before it can be lawful to transact insurance business at all, "and all policies issued or renewed, and all insurances taken before the issuance of such certificate shall be null and void for all purposes whatsoever." (Sec. 9.) But the consequences of a requisition for the repair of capital stock upon insurance business transacted intermediate the receipt of the requisition and the expiration of the time therein limited are widely different from those which ensue upon a revocation notified. The company may, of course, at once and without delay, supply the deficiency in its capital stock, and in that event the transaction of its business is wholly unaffected by the requisition made. Otherwise it may, at its option, suspend the taking of insurances and the issuance of new policies during the time limited in the requisition; or, if it prefer, it may take such new risks, even before the deficiency in its capital stock be supplied, the Directors being in that case, however, personally liable for any loss which may occur upon such new risks thus taken. But if we are to hold that in every case where a requisition to repair capital stock is received a revocation must first be notified, it is obvious that the revocation must operate to utterly destroy the privilege plainly acceded to the company intermediate the receipt of the mere requisition and the expiration of the time therein limited for making the required repair of the capital stock. A construction involving such results would be in plain conflict with the apparent intent had in view by the statute. There are other considerations, too, which present themselves, if attention be had to the general scope of the Act and the purpose in which it originated, and which confirm us in the view we have expressed upon this point.

The duties imposed upon the Commissioner of Insurance, though defined in a general way, are in their nature largely discretionary, and depend for their efficient performance in a great degree upon the exercise by him of an enlightened and careful discrimination with reference to the circumstances surrounding each particular case with which he is expected to deal. He is generally to do and perform with justice and impartiality the duties of his office in connection with the laws regulating the business of insurance in this State, and to enforce the execution of such laws according to the true intent and meaning thereof. (Sec. 4.) With this view he is clothed with important powers, to be exercised to a greater or less extent according as the particular circumstances appearing may in his judgment require. It may be, for instance, that an insurance company is ascertained by him to be insolvent in fact and in a commercial sense, and the risks to be taken by such a company therefore absolutely worthless to the assured. In such a case it may, and doubtless would be, his duty to exert the high authority devolved upon him by law, to revoke its certificate at once, as the only means by which the interests of the public could be preserved. Such a case would, however, be clearly and easily distinguishable from another, in which there was found to be only the technical insolvency defined by the provisions of the statute itself.

For it will be observed that section seven of the Act establishes a test of solvency and insolvency of a merely arbitrary character, and under the operation of which an insurance company may, within the intent and for the purposes of the statute, be held insolvent, and at the same time be not only really and actually solvent in a business sense, but justly so regarded in the commercial world. Thus, in order to ascertain the present condition of the company as being one of solvency or insolvency, for the mere purposes of the statute, the Commissioner must assume, against the condition of solvency, that certain losses, though yet in fact only reported, are already established and ascertained; that in relation to outstanding risks, not yet heard from even by report, all of those of one and half of those of another designated class will eventually prove to be losses; and the probable losses thereafter to be sustained upon outstanding risks of yet another general character are to be arrived at by applying the rules of calculation in such cases adopted by the actuaries in the States of New York and Massachusetts.

If under the provisions of the Statute the Commissioner should determine, upon a proper investigation had, that the company, though insolvent within the intent of the Act, was, nevertheless, solvent in a business point of view, we should be surprised to find, and we do not find, upon examination of the Act, that he had no discretion to stop with the delivery of the requisition, but must, of mere legal necessity, resort to the harsher measure of an absolute revocation of the company's certificate. We would, we think, greatly misapprehend the scope and purpose of the Act should we hold that, under its provisions, the Commissioner is to exercise no discretion in this most important respect, but that, being once put in motion, he must in all cases, nolens volens, proceed to the same and a uniform extremity against all companies with whose financial condition he is called upon to deal, and that he cannot legally require a company to merely repair its capital, even in a case where such repair is all that is needed, but must first revoke its certificate, suspend, and, perhaps, thereby nearly destroy its business, and certainly injure its general credit in advance by an official promulgation of his judgment, that the company is wholly unfit to transact business at all, and that only after that step has been taken, and notice thereof "published in some public newspaper published in the City of San Francisco for at least four weeks," is he to call upon the company to repair its capital—if it can.

We think that such an interpretation of the statute would, in its inevitable consequences, involve the absolute destruction of the business of insurance, instead of regulating its transactions.

2. It is claimed in the second place that even if the requisition to repair the capital stock is to be considered as valid, it will not authorize the assessment, as here made, that by the Act of March 26th, 1866 (Stats. 1865-6, p. 458), it is provided that no one assessment shall exceed five per cent. of the stated amount of the capital stock of the corporation. But the Act of 1868, which we have been considering, expressly provides that, upon receiving the requisition from the Commissioner, the company "shall forthwith call upon its stockholders, by assessments, for such amounts as will make its capital equal to the amount of its paid-up capital," etc., and enacts that such assessments shall be enforced by such notice and sale as are provided for by the Act of March 26th, 1866.

It results that the limitation of five per cent in the imposition of assessments has no application to assessments made in response to the requisition of the Commissioner, under the Act of 1868, for the repair of the company's capital.

MARY SHAW v. CHARLES CROCKER.

RIGHT OF CITY TO RAISE GRADE OF STREET — DAMAGES.— A city has the right to raise the grade of a street; and if the contractor performs the work with proper care and skill, he is not responsible for any damage which may result to the contiguous property.

LIABILITY OF STREET CONTRACTOR FOR DAMAGES — BURDEN OF PROOF.— In a suit against a contractor for damages occasioned to contiguous property by raising the grade of a street under a city contract, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the work was performed in an improper or negligent manner, or that the damage resulted from a want of care or skill on the part of the contractor or his servants.

NEGLECT OR UNSKILLFULNESS NOT PRESUMED.— Negligence or want of skill in the grading of a street by a contractor, under a city contract, will not be presumed, nor inferred from the mere fact of damage, but must be proved.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

The plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below for one thousand dollars. Defendant moved for a new trial, which being refused, he took this appeal from the judgment and order.

S. W. Sanderson, for Appellant.

The testimony showed conclusively that defendant was performing a lawful contract with the City of Sacramento; that he did the work according to the survey and directions of the proper officers of the city; that he did it in the usual and proper mode and with ordinary care and skill; and that the demolition of the plaintiff's shanties was the natural consequence of the grading, and was in no respect due to any negligence or want of ordinary care on the part of the defendant. Such being the case, the demolition of the plaintiff's shanties was damnum absque injuria. (Stats. 1863, p. 416, Sec. 2, Sub. 5, and Secs. 3 and 4; *Governor, etc., of Cast Plate Manufacturers v. J. H. McKune, for Respondent.

It did not require authorities to support the proposition relied on by appellant, that the plaintiff could not recover without showing "negligence or want of ordinary care." Plaintiff relied upon carelessness and negligence on the part of defendant. The contract was to grade the roadway thirty-four feet in width; but the defendant filled the roadway to the extreme eastern boundary of the street. The slope was made one and a half to one. The contract provided for that slope wherever necessary; and there was no evidence tending to show such necessity at that place. Here clearly was not only negligence, but an utter disregard of the rights of plaintiff in so adjusting the slope of the embankment as to push the buildings of plaintiff over, and into a pond of water.

That the defendant deposited earth on the land of plaintiff, and thereby damaged plaintiff, is undisputed, and a right of action thereupon accrued to plaintiff against defendant for such damage (Himmelmann v. Spanghel), and plaintiff would be entitled to recover without further negligence. (21 Barb. 68.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The plaintiff was the owner of several lots situate in the City of Sacramento, fronting on First street, and of several frame buildings erected thereon. The substance of the complaint is that the defendant and his servants wrongfully entered upon said lots, and "unlawfully, willfully, carelessly, and negligently threw, deposited, and forced stones, gravel, earth, and other solid and weighty substances upon and against such buildings, and upon and against the timbers supporting the same," whereby the timbers were forced from their places, and the buildings were thrown down and destroyed.

Among other defenses, the answer sets up that the defendant was employed by the City of Sacramento to raise the grade of First street in front of the plaintiff's premises, and that he performed the work in accordance with the contract, under the orders and directions of the Trustees of the city and its officers authorized by law to superintend the same, that the work was performed in a proper, discreet, and careful manner, doing no more damage than was necessary; that the plaintiff's buildings were located on or near the street, and that the plaintiff had due notice of the grading of the street, and might, by the exercise of reasonable care, have protected the buildings from damage, but negligently omitted to do so, whereby the buildings fell down and were destroyed without any fault of the defendant.

At the trial the plaintiff proved the value of the buildings, and that they were thrown down and destroyed by the pressure of the earth and other materials deposited in the street by the defendant in raising the grade under his contract. The plaintiff then rested, and the defendant moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that there was no evidence tending to show that the work was performed in a careless or improper manner, or that the damage was owing to any carelessness or negligence on the part of the defendant, his agents, or servants. The motion was denied, and the defendant excepted and assigns this ruling as error.

After a careful examination of the evidence in chief for the plaintiff, I discover none which tended, in the slightest degree, to prove that the work of grading the street was performed in an improper, careless, or negligent manner, or that the damage to the plaintiff's property resulted, in any degree, from a want of proper care or skill on the part of the defendant or his servants. It was proved that the plaintiff had notice of the grading of the street; and some days before the buildings were damaged, sent a carpenter to examine them, who reported to her that they could be protected from injury by the erection of a bulkhead; but she made no effort to erect it, so far as the proof shows. The city had the right to raise the grade of the street; and if the contractor performed the work with proper care and skill, he is not responsible for any damage which may have resulted to the contiguous property. This is settled by an overwhelming weight of authority, and is apparently conceded to be the law by the plaintiff's counsel. (4 Dumpf. & East, 794; 1 Denio, 595; 9 Watts, 382; 1 Pick. 418; 12 Mass. 220; 6 Wheat. 593; 12 Mo. 414; 1 Const. 195, 203.)

Negligence or want of skill in the work will not be presumed, but must be proved. As already stated, there was no such proof on the part of the plaintiff, before she rested her case, and the nonsuit ought, therefore, to have been granted. Nor, so far as I can discover, was the omission supplied at any subsequent stage of the case.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY AFTER CLOSE IN CHIEF — DISCRETION.—Where a defective power of attorney, offered by plaintiff, was admitted under objection, and after plaintiff's evidence in chief was closed, the Court allowed him to produce a sufficient power; held, that its admission at that time was matter of discretion, not to be disturbed in the absence of a showing of abuse.

RECITALS IN JUDGMENT — PRESUMPTIONS OF THEIR CORRECTNESS.—Where a decree recited that defendants consented to the entry thereof; held, that it would be presumed, against collateral attack, that such consent was so presented as to give the Court jurisdiction of their persons at the date of the decree.

from Roland Gelston, by his attorney in fact, Joseph Clough, to James C. Zabriskie. It was the power of attorney under which Clough acted that first engages the attention of the Court in the following opinion. From Zabriskie, the title passed to P. B. Cornwall, and from him to David B. Milne. Milne mortgaged to William S. Mesick, and Mesick, in 1862, commenced a foreclosure suit against Milne, and soon after its commencement, on leave of the Court first obtained, amended the complaint by making James C. Zabriskie and wife also parties defendant, and alleging that Milne had conveyed to them after the execution of the mortgage to Mesick.

As the plaintiff claimed under the decree and sale in Mesick v. Milne, defendant attacked the proceedings in that case. It seems that Milne was in the then Territory of Nevada, at the commencement of that suit. An affidavit for publication of the summons was accordingly presented, and an order obtained; and soon afterwards a personal service upon him was made in Carson City, Nevada. At the time of such service, March 15th, 1862, an attorney named G. D. Hall, wrote and transmitted to Mr. Cadwalader, Mesick's attorney, a document, as follows:

"State of California, Sacramento County, District Court, Sixth Judicial District.

"WILLIAM S. MESICK, Plaintiff,

"DAVID B. MILNE, Defendant.

"GEORGE CADWALADER, Esq.: I hereby acknowledge service of the summons and complaint in the above entitled action, and authorize a decree therein pursuant to the prayer of the plaintiff against D. B. Milne.

Statement of Facts.

Shortly afterwards, and after the complaint had been amended as mentioned above, the following other document was signed and acknowledged in San Francisco, and placed in the hands of the plaintiff's attorney in that suit:

"In the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District for the County of Sacramento.

"W. S. MESICK, Plaintiff,

"v.

"D. B. MILNE, et als., Defendants. }

"We hereby acknowledge service of a copy of the complaint and summons herein, and waive the time allowed by law for answering, and consent that the decree herein prayed for by plaintiff be entered.

"JAMES C. ZABRISKIE.

"MARY M. ZABRISKIE.

"June 14th, 1862."

On July 2d, 1862, both the forgoing documents were filed, and Mesick took a decree for the foreclosure of the mortgage against Milne. The decree recited that the cause had been submitted, and that it appeared to the satisfaction of the Court that the defendants therein had duly consented to the plaintiff having the relief prayed for by him.

The defendant, in the case at bar, objected to the introduction of the decree referred to, on the ground that at the time of its entry the service upon Milne was not complete, and that there being therefore no jurisdiction in the Court, the decree was void; also, because there was nothing in the record to show that the amended complaint was ever served upon Zabriskie or his wife. The objections were overruled, and defendant excepted.

After both parties had rested, and defendant had moved to strike out the power of attorney from Gelston to Clough, on account of its defective acknowledgment, plaintiff asked and obtained leave of the Court, against defendants' objection, to introduce the power of attorney in evidence over again, it appearing that it had been reacknowledged and re-recorded, and its previous defects, if any, entirely remedied.

There having been a judgment for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial upon the two grounds of: 1st. Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision of the Court, and that it was against law; 2d. Errors in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by defendant at the time. The motion being denied, defendant appealed.

Henry Starr, for Appellant.

Beatty & Denson, for Respondent.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The objection to the power of attorney from Gelston to Clough as evidence, on the ground of defective acknowledgment, was cured by subsequent evidence of a power properly acknowledged, admitted by the Court without other objection than that the evidence came too late — the plaintiff having closed his evidence in chief. The Court, notwithstanding this objection, admitted the evidence, which, in the exercise of a sound discretion, he could properly do; and I think in this there was no abuse of this discretion. (Mowry v. Starbuck, 4 Cal. 274; Priest v. Union Canal Co., 6 id. 170; Lisman v. Early, 5 id. 199.)

The objections to the judgment roll in the case of Mesick v. Milne et al. as evidence are not well taken. It appears from said judgment roll that the action was originally commenced for the foreclosure of a mortgage upon certain real estate, given by Milne March 9th, 1859. The original complaint was filed March 1st, 1862; summons issued thereon against Milne alone. Subsequently, on the 19th of May, 1862, upon discovery that Milne, after the execution of the mortgage, had conveyed the mortgaged premises to Zabriskie and wife, plaintiff, by leave of the Court, filed a supplemental complaint, alleging the fact, and making Zabriskie and wife defendants.

Defendant Milne was personally served with the summons on the 15th March, 1862, in Nevada Territory. On the 2d day of July, 1862, the consent of Milne, by his attorney, G. D. Hall, that a decree be taken against him in the case, pursuant to the prayer of the complaint, was filed. This consent is in writing, signed by Hall as Milne's attorney, and is dated 15th March, 1862, the day on which service of summons was made on Milne. On the 14th day of June, 1862, the defendants Zabriskie and wife duly acknowledged service of summons and copy of the complaint, and consented that decree be entered against them as prayed for, which consent was in writing, duly signed and acknowledged by Zabriskie and wife. The decree was entered on the 2d day of July, 1862, and recites that it appeared to the satisfaction of the Court that the defendants duly consented thereto.

I think that the written consent of defendants, as filed, sufficiently shows a voluntary appearance of defendants, and that the Court had jurisdiction of their persons. But even if this evidence of voluntary appearance were not deemed sufficient—from the recital of the decree that it appeared to the satisfaction of the Court that the defendants have duly consented that decree be entered against them—it must be presumed, against collateral attack of the decree, that the consent of the defendants was presented to the Court in such a manner and form as to give the Court jurisdiction of their persons at the date of the rendition of the decree.

The fourth and fifth points urged by appellant are not well taken. The deed or writing from John A. Sutter, Jr., purpose. The defendant has never interfered with the plaintiff in the disposition of the moneys earned by her, and, as these were sufficient for her support, the action must fail. (Washburn v. Washburn, 9 Cal. 477.) If this were otherwise, we could not consider the sufficiency of the evidence on the appeal from the judgment.

In declaring the amount to be paid, the Legislature did not assume the exercise of judicial powers. (Brewster v. City of Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 116; Thomas v. Leland, 24 Wend. 65; *Morris v. Nor did the provision in the contract, that in no case should the city be liable for the contract price of the work, affect the right of the Legislature to make the city liable. (Stocking v. Hunt, 3 Denio, 274.)

J. M. Nougues, for Respondent.

The Legislature, in directing the Board of Supervisors to order paid a specific sum of money, and interest thereon, to Patrick Creighton, assumed and exercised judicial powers. (Const. Arts. III and IV, Sec. 1; People v. Hawes, 37 Barb. 454; Denny v. Mattoon, 2 Allen, 361.)

The special relief act, upon which the petitioner bases his right of action, is repugnant to the United States Constitution and to the State Constitution. (U. S. Const. Art. I, Sec. 10; State Const. Art. I, Secs. 3, 8, 16, and Art. IV, Sec. 37; Baldwin v. Mayor, etc., 42 Barb. 553; Bank of Columbia v. Oakley, 4 Wheat. 235; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140; Rockwell v. Neaning, 35 N. Y. 302; Westervelt v. Gregg, 13 N. Y. 209.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

It appears by the petition here, praying a writ of mandamus against the Board of Supervisors, that Creighton, in April, 1861, entered into certain contracts, in writing, with the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways of the City and County of San Francisco, for the time being, to grade Union street, from Taylor to Larkin, and to grade the crossing of Union and Jones streets, according to specifications, in the usual form in which such contracts were accustomed to be made, under the provisions of the statute in that behalf; and thereafter, in due time and manner, he fully performed the contract upon his part, and the assessment roll and warrants were thereupon delivered by said Superintendent to the petitioner, who collected something less than twenty thousand dollars assessments thereon, leaving a balance of upwards of thirteen thousand dollars of said assessments still unpaid. He attempted to enforce the payment of this aggregate balance by actions brought against the persons severally assessed, for their respective portions thereof. These actions failed, however, because the resolution of intention to do the work had not been "presented to the President of the Board for approval, according to the requirements of section sixty-eight of the Consolidation Act." (Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 629.)

The petition further sets forth that he thereupon made application to the Legislature of the State for relief in the premises, and that that body having made a careful and complete examination of all and singular the terms and conditions of said contracts, and of all the facts in connection therewith, thereupon passed an Act for his relief. This statute is set out in the petition (Chap. 210, p. 309, Acts 1869-70), and it enacts that the Board of Supervisors are thereby "authorized and directed to order paid to Patrick Creighton the sum of thirteen thousand five hundred and six dollars, with legal interest on the said amount from July, A. D. 1862, until paid, in United States gold coin, which said amount of principal remains due and unpaid to the said Patrick Creighton on the contract for grading Union street, from Taylor to Larkin, including the crossing thereof, in the City and County of San Francisco, as per assessment on record in Volume VIII of Street Assessments, in the office of the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways in the said City and County of San Francisco." In a subsequent section of the Act, the Auditor of the city and county is directed to audit this sum, with interest thereon, and to issue his warrant therefor to Creighton, and the Treasurer of the city and county is directed, upon presentation of such warrant, to pay the same, "as other indebtedness of the said City and County of San Francisco, in United States gold coin, to the above said Patrick Creighton," etc.

The Board of Supervisors, upon application made to them by Creighton for an order directing payment to be made to him, as provided in the Act, refused and still refuse to order the payment.

To this petition of Creighton, stating substantially the foregoing facts, the Board of Supervisors have filed a demurrer and an answer.

The ground of demurrer is, that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The answer alleges that the Act of the Legislature was passed against the will and consent of the City and County of San Francisco; that the sum of money by the Act directed to be paid to Creighton never was at any time a claim against the city and county, nor obligatory upon it, either legally or morally. The answer further sets up in defense of the action that, in and by the terms of the contracts for street grading, alleged in the petition as having been entered into by Creighton with the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways, it was, in fact, expressly stipulated that the said city and county should not be liable for any portion of the expense of the work nor for any delinquency of the persons or property assessed.

The power of the Legislature to appropriate the moneys of municipal corporations in payment of claims ascertained by it to be equitably due to individuals, though such claims be not enforceable in the Courts, has been uniformly upheld ever since the case of Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 351, in which this Court said: "The power of appropriation which the Legislature can exercise over the revenues of the State, for any purpose which it may regard as calculated to promote the public good, it can exercise over the revenues of a county, city, or town, for any purpose connected with their past or present condition, except as such revenues may, by the law creating them, be devoted to special purposes."

The sovereign power of appropriation of the public funds already in the Treasury or to be raised by taxation, in favor of individuals, is one, the exercise of which must depend largely upon the legislative conscience, and like most of the great powers of government, can not be interfered with by us, unless in exceptional cases. The most usual cases in which this power has been exercised are those, like the one under consideration now, where an individual, having no legal claim in the sense of being capable of enforcement by judicial proceedings against a municipal government, has, nevertheless, in equity and justice, in the larger sense of those terms, a right to indemnity and compensation out of the public Treasury. As was said by DENIO, J., 8 Kern. 149: "The Legislature is not confined in its appropriation of the public moneys, or of the sums to be raised by taxation, in favor of individuals, to cases in which a legal demand exists against the State. It can thus recognize claims founded in equity and justice, in the largest sense of these terms, or in gratitude, or charity. Independently of express constitutional restrictions, it can make appropriations of money whenever the public well being requires or will be promoted by it, and it is the judge of what is for the public good."

The admitted fact here that Creighton had performed labor in the improvement of the public street, and of which the municipal government and people of San Francisco had the benefit, and that he had been unable to obtain compensation therefor, only because the principal officer of the municipal government had neglected to observe the statute requiring him to sign his name to the resolution under which the work was done, presented a case fully as persuasive in its circumstances as most of those which have been the subject of legislative relief in this State or elsewhere.

There is nothing in the circumstance that the contract under which the work was done contained a stipulation by which it was provided that the City of San Francisco should, in no event, be liable for any portion of the expense thereof. The Legislature, in passing the statute, have proceeded upon the equity of Creighton to be relieved by reason of matters occurring subsequently to the making of the contract, and not contemplated by it or anticipated when it was entered into. Besides, it would be difficult to show that these parties, by the stipulations of that contract, had, in terms or by fair construction, limited or taken away the constitutional power of the Legislature to extend relief to the public creditors, or those it considers to be such, as it may see fit; and the existence of such a power is all that we have to inquire into here.

The writ must issue, as prayed for, and it is so ordered.

The questions involved in this case are not distinguishable in principle from those decided since the last term in the case of Sinton v. Ashbury. On the authority of that case I concur in the opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to the writ as prayed for.

pears to have been run and surveyed, and should have been described in courses and distances, as follows: Beginning at a post marked "B. No. 1," in the center of the Coyote Creek, from which a sycamore tree, three feet in diameter, bears north $63^{\circ} 15'$ west, one chain distant, and running thence south $89^{\circ} 45'$ west 59.40 chains to a post marked "B. No. 2." The mistake consisted in leaving out the words and figures, "north $63^{\circ} 15'$ " and "south $89^{\circ} 45'$." The result was the cutting off of about three acres of Boots' land, which constituted the property in controversy. A judgment of ejectment having been rendered for plaintiff, the defendant appealed.

F. E. Spencer, for Appellant.

The partition agreement refers to the conveyance from Rafael Alviso to William Boots, and in effect adopts the description therein contained. (Vaver v. Fore, 24 Cal. 435; Allen v. Bates, 6 Pick. 460.) That description is an artificial landmark, clearly identified, that is to say, a fence. The other description is by courses and distances; and the two differing, the former will govern. (Colton v. Leary, 22 Cal. 496.) But even if this were doubtful, the fact that defendant has occupied up to the fence is presumptive evidence of the true place of the line. (French v. Pearce, 8 Conn. 439.)

It was clearly the intention of all the parties in interest that Boots and Fogarty should have in severalty the land described in the deeds to them; and such being their intention, as expressed in their written contract, if a mistake has occurred, it is the duty of the Court to correct it, and carry out the intention of the parties. As between Boots and Fogarty on the one side and the other tenants in common on the other, the transaction was not a partition, but simply an act recognizing and validating the conveyance of one of their co-tenants. It partook of the character of a partition only as between the others. (1 Story Eq. Jur. Secs. 140;

D. M. Delmas, for Respondent.

There is nothing in the transcript to show that the Court below erred in dismissing the cross complaint. All the tenants in common, including the defendant, joined in the conveyance to Wright, in which they agreed that "said land shall be partitioned and divided among them, and they shall henceforth have and hold in severalty the parcels hereinafter described as the parcels to be set apart to each of them;" and, also, that Wright was to convey to said parties in severalty these several parcels of the said premises "which are hereinbefore described as the respective parcels which shall be held by the said parties respectively in severalty." Wright followed those descriptions. The legal ownership of the whole tract was vested in him, and he afterward conveyed to defendant a part of that tract. The question in the action at law is: Does the defendant, by virtue of that conveyance, own any more of that tract than was conveyed to him? I submit that to this question there can be but one answer.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The plaintiff recovered in the Court below, on the trial of the action, a small tract of land which is included in the southerly half of the Rancho "Rincon de los Esteros," in Santa Clara County, of which southerly half she and others (among whom was Rafael Alviso), were formerly owners and tenants in common.

The defendant, Boots, had purchased of said Alviso, a defined portion of the lands of the estate in common, and entered into possession of the tract so purchased, occupying it according to its boundaries, as set forth in the conveyance made to him by Alviso, which was a conveyance in fee, and which described the tract as bounded on its southerly side by a fence dividing it from another tract called the "Bloomfield Claim." Under this condition of things, Boots, and all the tenants in common, agreed with each other that three named persons, chosen as Commissioners, should make partition of the premises, between the tenants common, according to their respective interests, and that Boots should hold, in severalty, the specified parcel purchased by him from said Rafael Alviso. The Commissioners proceeded to make the partition, and, also, as they supposed, to set off to Boots the tract of land which the agreement had already determined to be his. In so doing, however, they undertook to define each of the several tracts by calls and distances, and by a mistaken call they ran the southern boundary line of the land of Boots to the north of the fence, which was its true southern line, as laid down in the Alviso deed and confirmed by the agreement under which the Commissioners acted. These descriptions, by calls and distances, having been reported by the Commissioners, and no mistake being discovered or suspected, the parties in interest, among them the plaintiff and the defendant, Boots, in order to effect the partition intended, conveyed the premises (being the entire southern half of the rancho) to one Wright, reciting in the deed to him that they had "agreed that the said Boots and Fogarty (who had also purchased a several tract from said Rafael Alviso) shall hold in severalty the said parcels so purchased by them as aforesaid, from said Alviso." The deed to Wright was upon the trust therein expressed, that he should convey to each of the grantors the tract of land to which such grantors would be entitled according to the report of the Commissioners. These conveyances the trustee, Wright, subsequently made, and in so doing he followed the calls, and distances reported by the Commissioners, and which were set forth in the deed to him defining the particular tract thereafter to be conveyed by him to each. The result was, that the conveyance, as made by the trustee to Boots, did not include in its description all of the land which he had purchased from Alviso, but only a part, though by far the larger part of, and that a portion of it was included in the deed made by the trustee to the plaintiff, to whom the tract next adjoining the Boots tract on the south had been assigned by the Commissioners. It is this small tract, lying between the fence and the mistaken line of the Commissioners to the northward of the fence, which the plaintiff, relying upon her legal title, recovered in the court below. The defendant set up the foregoing facts as an equitable defense and as a cross complaint, upon which he prayed that the plaintiff should be directed to convey the premises in controversy to him. The learned Judge of the Court below denied this; or any relief to the defendant, and to review the determination in that respect this appeal is brought.

If respect be had to the agreement made between all the parties in interest — including the plaintiff and the defendant, Boots — it is obvious that the pretensions of the plaintiff in the premises cannot be maintained. For it is distinctly provided by the terms of that agreement, that the defendant, Boots, is to hold in severalty the land which he had purchased of Alviso, and of which he was already in the possession. I am unable to see how this agreement subsequently became inoperative between the parties to it. The selection of the Commissioners — their steps taken to effect a partition — their report to the parties in interest, describing, as they supposed, and as all parties supposed correctly describing, the tract already set off to Boots by the agreement itself; the adoption of that report by all parties, in the belief that it did accord with the agreement in the particular in question here; the conveyance thereupon made to Wright in trust, and his subsequent conveyance in turn, made to Boots, of the tract, as was supposed, already designated by the agreement, were but steps taken to carry the agreement itself into effect, and were not intended to modify its terms, or substitute a new one in its stead. Had the mistake in the call of the southern line of the Boots tract been discovered before Wright executed the deed, by which the erroneous line was fixed between the plaintiff and Boots, it might, according to the view of the Court below, have been corrected, but not after then; because, as is said, at that point "the proceedings became a finality." If Boots had known of the mistake and had failed to make timely objection to the erroneous line, but had knowingly permitted it to be carried into the Wright deed, it might have been too late for him to object after that; but here the mistake was not discovered by any one then; the possession of Boots was always in accordance with his true boundary, and the plaintiff cannot be permitted to disturb him, in the face of her agreement that he should have the land according to the lines of the Alviso deed as made to him.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to set aside the order dismissing the cross complaint, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

A. B. MCCREEERY AND JOHN SULLIVAN v. GEORGE BROWN, WM. PERRY, AND EDWARD EWALD.

DISCRETION AS TO DISSOLVING INJUNCTION, THOUGH EQUITIES OF BILL DENIED BY ANSWER.—Though an injunction should in general be dissolved when all the equities of the bill are denied by the answer, yet there may be circumstances disclosed by the pleadings under which the Court will, in the exercise of a sound discretion, be justified in continuing it till the hearing on the merits.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Statement of Facts.

This was an action to restrain the defendant Brown from prosecuting a forcible entry case against the defendants Perry and Ewald, in the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco. That suit, as appears, was originally commenced in 1860, before a Justice of the Peace. Being there decided in favor of the defendants therein, it was appealed to the County Court, where it was again decided in favor of the same parties. Brown subsequently took an appeal to the Supreme Court, where the cause remained unmoved from 1861 till 1869, when certain defects in the appeal papers were remedied upon an affidavit made by one A. Williams, to the effect that he had made certain clerical errors in the indorsements of the admission of service of the notice of appeal; and, the cause being then brought on for hearing before the Supreme Court, the judgment of the County Court was reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

In the meanwhile, the plaintiffs McCreery and Sullivan purchased the ground in controversy, consisting of about twenty-five acres of land in the City and County of San Francisco, from Perry to Ewald. In their complaint they allege that their grantors were in the actual possession of the land and transferred it to them; that Brown never had any right, title, interest, or possession; that he had no record title whatever; that his claim was fraudulent, and made to extort money; that as a matter of fact, he had abandoned his forcible entry case, and claim to the premises, immediately after taking the appeal to the Supreme Court; that plaintiffs, though previous to their purchase they had had the title of the land searched, were ignorant of any claim by Brown; that the papers on appeal in said suit were insufficient to sustain the appeal taken; that afterwards, as the land became valuable, the defendants Brown and Perry confederated and combined together to defraud plaintiffs, and, in pursuance of their plans, induced Williams to make the affidavit before referred to, and caused the record to be altered so that the appeal might be heard; that the record was thereby falsified and made to state what was not the truth; that the Court was imposed upon by said affidavit and alterations, all of which were done without any notice to or any knowledge of the plaintiffs; that the appeal in the Supreme Court, not being opposed, but fraudulently connived at by Perry, resulted in a reversal of the judgment and a sending of it back for the new trial, which they prayed to restrain. They further alleged that Brown was irresponsible; that Perry and Ewald would not defend said action; and that if it should be allowed to go to judgment, and Brown thereby and by means of his frauds obtain possession of the premises, it would require tedious and expensive proceedings to evict him.

Upon the complaint being filed, and on motion of plaintiffs, an injunction was issued and served with the summons, requiring the defendant Brown, until further order, to desist from further prosecuting the forcible entry suit in the County Court. Afterwards Brown filed his answer, specifically denying each and every material allegation of the complaint, and then moved to dissolve the injunction, supporting his motion by affidavits of A. Williams, his former attorney, and M. A. Wheaton, his then attorney, in the forcible entry case, in addition to his own sworn answer.

On a hearing, the motion to dissolve the injunction was denied; and the defendant Brown appealed from the order.

M. A. Wheaton, for Appellant.

As the answer denied all the equities of the complaint, the injunction should have been dissolved. (Gardner v. Perkins, 9 Cal. 558; Burnett v. Whitesides, 13 Cal. 156; Curtis v. Sutter, 15 Cal. 259; Johnson v. Wide West M. Co., 22 Cal. 479; Real del Monte M. Co. v. Pond Co., 23 Cal. 82.)

There are no equities stated in the complaint sufficient to sustain the injunction, for the reason that it does not show that Brown has not a good cause of action in his forcible entry suit, but it rather affirmatively shows that he has a good cause of action therein. It further shows that the Supreme Court has decided that the judgment in the County Court against Brown was erroneous, and reversed it as such. All the facts as to the time when the appeal was taken and the time that it had lain dormant, and the correction of the record, were before the Supreme Court; and it is not for a District Court to undertake to say that the Supreme Court acted wrongfully, or that its judgment was a nullity.

The case shows simply this state of facts: Brown was in possession of the twenty-five acres. Perry and Ewald forcibly ousted him in such a manner that he had a remedy to recover possession under the Forcible Entry Act. While he is pursuing that remedy the plaintiffs herein bought out Perry and Ewald's interest in the premises, and now attempt to deprive Brown of his remedy under the Forcible Entry Act by transferring the case to the District Court, on the sole and only ground of a plea of title in themselves—putting this action in such a shape, too, that even when Brown defeats them on their plea of title he will still be left out of possession and the plaintiffs in possession. All this is contrary to the forcible entry law and the decisions. (McCaughey v. Weller, 12 Cal. 500; Hodgkins v. Jordan, 29 Cal. 578; Owen v. Doty, 28 Cal. 505; Davis v. Perly, 80 Cal. 632.)

Barnes & Bowie, for Respondents.

It is not denied that Brown is pecuniarily irresponsible, and without property or means, and that he could be made to respond to plaintiffs for detention of their property, or costs, and that all of plaintiffs' expenditures in the matter would be a total and irrevocable loss. These allegations of the complaint are, therefore, to be taken as true, so far as this proceeding is concerned. (Croniss v. Clark, 4 Md. Ch.

Dec., 403.) This being a material allegation, and undenied, the Court properly refused to dissolve the injunction. (Rich. v. Thomas, 4 Jones Eq. 71; Nelson v. Robinson, 1 Hempstead, 464; Furlong v. Edwards, 3 Md. 113; Real del Monte M. Co. v. Pond Co. 23 Cal. 82; Powell v. Brown, 22 Geo. 275; Parkinson v. Trousdale, 3 Scam. 367; Buckner v. Biernes, 9 S. & M. 804; Hilliard on Inj. 94, 96, 100.)

The defendant would not have been necessarily entitled to a dissolution of the injunction even had his answer denied the equity of the bill. It still rested in the discretion of the Court to deny the motion. (Hilliard on Inj. 90, 100; Adams' Eq. 196; Roberts v. Anderson, 2 Johns. Ch. 204; Crutchfield v. Danilly, 16 Geo. 432; Nelson v. Robinson, 1 Hempst. 464; Poor v. Carleton, 3 Sumn. 25; Linton v. Denham, 6 Florida, 533; Monroe v. McIntyre, 6 Ired. Eq. 65.)

The proceedings of Brown, as detailed in the complaint and confirmed by the answer, were fruitful of suspicions; and the Court held, and we submit rightfully and within the limits of a reasonable judicial judgment, that a forcible entry and detainer suit which had been wrapped in a sleep of death for eight years might slumber yet a little longer, until the facts could be fairly, fully, and judicially investigated.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The material allegations of the complaint constituting the gravamen of plaintiff's claim to equitable relief are specifically denied by the answer, and the special denials of collusion and fraud are supported by the affidavits of Williams and Wheaton, filed with the answer. Under the general rule that "when all the equities of the bill are denied by the answer the injunction should be dissolved," the injunction should have been dissolved, unless the circumstances of the case, as disclosed by the pleadings, be such as to justify the Court in the exercise of a sound discretion in continuing the injunction until the hearing upon the merits.

There are circumstances disclosed by the pleadings in this case, independent of the direct issues made thereby, which might well have influenced the Judge, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to continue the restraining order until the hearing upon the merits of the case. (Godey v. Godey, 39 Cal. 166, 167.)

A. B. CHAPMAN v. D. A. HOLLISTER AND ALBERT

VACANCY IN ADMINISTRATION—GRANTEE OF DEVISEE NOT ENTITLED TO POSSESSION.—Where a widow, who was both devisee and executrix, married, and she and her husband then deeded the land devised; held, that though the marriage may have operated as a revocation of the letters testamentary, yet there was an unclosed administration, and the grantee was not entitled to possession.

HEIR OR DEVISEE CANNOT MAINTAIN EJECTMENT WHILE ADMINISTRATION UNCLOSED.—If letters be regularly granted, and the Probate Court acquire jurisdiction over an estate, though a vacancy occurs in the office of executor or administrator, the heir or devisee can not maintain ejectment during such vacancy as long as the administration remains unclosed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventeenth Judicial District, County of San Diego.

This was an action of ejectment for a lot known as the Pear Garden of Lorenzo Soto, in the old City of San Diego. Defendant Hollister disclaimed any interest. Defendant Wallace filed a general denial, and set up the Statute of Limitations. There was a judgment for defendant Wallace; and a motion for new trial having been overruled, plaintiff appealed.

Glassell, Chapman & Smith, for Appellant.

I. Hartman, for Respondents.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The first point for consideration is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the demanded premises on his own theory of the facts. Both parties claim through the will of Lorenzo Soto, deceased, which was duly probated, and of which the widow of Soto was appointed and duly qualified as executrix. Whilst acting as executrix, the widow contracted a second marriage, and subsequently, by the joint deed of herself and husband, conveyed said premises to the plaintiff, who insists that the property was devised to the widow by Soto's will, and that her authority as executrix having ceased when she contracted a second marriage, the administration of the estate became vacant, and, so far the evidence shows, yet remains so. Assuming these to be the facts, he insists that he is entitled to possession, there being no executor or administrator of the estate. If it be conceded that, if there be no existing administration upon an estate, the heir or devisee can maintain ejectment for the real estate; and if it be further admitted that the marriage of the executrix operated, ipso facto, as a revocation of her letters, without any action of the Probate Court declaring the revocation, it by no means follows that the heir or devisee is entitled to the possession, whilst there is a pending and unclosed administration temporarily vacant. On the death of the ancestor his title to real estate passes to the heir or devisee, subject, however, to the right of possession of the executor or administrator for the payment of debts. (Probate Act, Secs. 114, 194; Becket v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215; Meeks v. Hahn, 20 Cal. 627; Matter of Estate of Woodworth, 31 Cal. 604.) And, when there is no administration upon the estate, the heir or devisee may maintain ejectment for the real estate of the testator or intestate. (Updegraff v. Trask, 18 Cal. 458.) But if the Probate Court has regularly granted letters testamentary or of administration, and has acquired jurisdiction over the administration of the estate, and if a temporary vacancy occurs in the office of executor or administrator pending the administration, and whilst it is yet unclosed, the heir or devisee cannot maintain ejectment during the vacancy. It would lead to great perplexity in the settlement of estates, if, during a temporary vacancy in the administration, the heir or devisee should be held to be entitled to the possession of the estate, and to receive the rents and issues. On the appointment of a new executor or administrator he would be entitled to the possession and to all the rents and profits which had accrued during the vacancy, his right in this respect taking effect by relation as of the date when the vacancy occurred. A different ruling on this point would only tend to promote litigation and embarrass the administration of estates, without increasing the security of creditors and heirs. The Probate Court has ample power to protect the estate during the vacancy in the administration, by the appointment of a special administrator, whose proceedings would be subject to its control and supervision. But to permit the heirs and devisees, or their grantees, to intervene and take possession of the estate during the temporary vacancy in a pending administration of an unsettled estate, would tend only to unnecessary confusion, delay, and embarrassment in the administration.

This view of the case renders it unnecessary to notice the other points discussed in the briefs.

Judgment affirmed.

GEORGE BARSTOW v. THE CITY RAILROAD COMPANY.

IMPLIED PROMISE OF CORPORATION — CIRCUMSTANCES AND RELATION OF PARTIES AS EVIDENCE.— In an action against a corporation to recover on a quantum meruit for services performed, the situation of the parties at the time, and the relation, if any, in which they stood, of a business character or otherwise, are relevant and material circumstances; and the exclusion of competent testimony, tending to show such circumstances, is error.

SERVICES TO CORPORATION BY DIRECTOR — BY-LAWS AS EVIDENCE.— In an action by Barstow against the City Railroad Company, to recover on an implied promise for alleged services performed by him, while a Director, in going to New York and negotiating a construction contract for the company, where it appeared that the President told him, previous to going, that he should be compensated; held, that a by-law of the company, to the effect that Directors should receive no compensation for services as Directors, though traveling expenses might be audited and paid, was relevant testimony for defendant, and its exclusion was error.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This action was tried by the Court below without a jury, and resulted in a judgment for plaintiff for two thousand five hundred dollars, as prayed in his complaint. A motion for a new trial having been overruled, defendant appealed from the judgment and order.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

E. J. & J. H. Moore, for Appellant.

Barstow, Stetson & Houghton, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The plaintiff was a Director of the corporation defendant, and alleges that he was employed by defendant, while holding that position, to go to New York and there engage in certain negotiations then pending there between the defendant and one Randall, concerning the execution or modification of a proposed contract between defendant and Randall for the construction of the defendant's projected railroad. It is alleged in the complaint that the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff "for his services and expenditures, including traveling expenses, whatever the same should be reasonably worth, and promised to pay him in gold coin of the United States," etc. The defendant denied the allegations of the complaint.

It was not pretended at the trial that the defendant had, by proceedings at any corporate meetings, directly employed the plaintiff as its agent to proceed to New York upon this business; but it appeared that the plaintiff and one Gladding had already agreed with each other to go to New York from California, in the prosecution of a joint enterprise of their own, into which they had entered for the sale of certain mines and mining interests in the New York market, and that it was in contemplation to sell one of these mines to Randall, the same person who was about to contract to build the defendant's road. Under these circumstances, Barstow had a conversation with the President of the defendant, Dr. Rowell, in which he remarked that he thought of going to New York; that he had some "contingent business" there. Rowell replied: "Then you must go for the City Railroad Company and complete the contract with Randall, or get somebody else to build this road," adding that Barstow should be compensated for his services and expenses. This was in October, 1865, and on the eighteenth day of that month Barstow left San Francisco by the steamer, and arrived in the City of New York on the eighth day of November following. On the twenty-eighth of November — twenty days after Barstow had arrived in New York — a corporate resolution was passed by the defendant, authorizing Barstow and Gladding (then also in the Eastern States) to close the construction contract with Randall, etc., which resolution, or a copy of it, was forwarded to them from California. Negotiations had there with Randall, up to the time of Barstow's return to California, in March, 1866, resulted in nothing. In the mean time, other persons, not then interested in the stock of the corporation, have become stockholders, and Barstow now claims that the corporation is indebted to him in the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars, for these alleged services at the East in 1865-6.

It is claimed that the circumstances are such as that the law would imply a promise upon the part of the corporation to pay him his claim. It was held in Pixley v. W. P. R. R. Co., 33 Cal. 83, that a quantum meruit would lie against a corporation for services rendered, and would be supported by proof of circumstances from which a promise to pay might ordinarily be inferred against a natural person.

Even if the cause of action set forth in the complaint here is to be considered to be in this respect altogether of the same character as was that in the case just referred to (a point upon which I am not to be understood to be expressing an opinion now), it is clear enough that the defendant was entitled at the trial to put in evidence all the facts, which could be reasonably supposed to throw light upon the question as to whether the plaintiff had really been employed as alleged by him. It was supposed that the conversation already referred to, had between the plaintiff and the president of the defendant, previous to the departure of the former from California in October, 1865, coupled with the corporate resolution of November twenty-eighth following, were circumstances tending to prove the employment alleged—and they were admitted in evidence upon that view. It is evident, however, that the weight and value of such circumstances, when proven, must be affected by a consideration of other and co-existent facts surrounding the transaction. For instance, it appears in this case that the plaintiff was himself, at the time, a Director of the defendant. That fact in itself tended, and I must consider that the Court below regarded it as tending, in some degree to weaken the presumption of a promise to pay by the corporation defendant. The situation of the parties at the time — the relation, if any, in which they stood of a business character, or otherwise, are important to be known and considered, in order to arrive at a correct solution of the ultimate question involved. In Murdock v. Murdock, 7 Cal. 511, we said that where the right of the plaintiff to recover rests upon an alleged implied contract, all the circumstances of the case must be considered to ascertain what were the expectations of both the parties as to compensation, etc. In that case the plaintiff sought to recover the value of services rendered the defendants, in the family of the latter, upon an implied contract to pay her therefor. The fact, however, that the plaintiff bore the relation of a step-mother to the defendants at the time the services were rendered was held to be of great import, as tending to overthrow any implication of a promise to pay her for her services. In this view, the fact that the plaintiff was at the time a Director of the corporation was important to be considered, as I have said already. And upon the same principle the Court should have considered if there were any existing general rule or regulation of business in force between the parties, in reference to which they might be supposed to have dealt in the particular instance under consideration. Such a regulation may go far to determine the intention and mutual expectation of the parties at the time of the supposed employment. Upon the trial of this cause the defendant offered in evidence a by-law of the corporation, which provided that no Director should receive any compensation for his services as Director, but that the traveling expenses of the officers and Directors, while actually engaged in the business of the company, might be audited and paid. This was excluded as being irrelevant. In this there was error. It was not irrelevant. It tended, in a degree at least, to aid in the determination of the main point in controversy — the alleged employment and promise to pay. We cannot, of course, know what other circumstances the defendant might have shown in connection with this by-law, had it been received in evidence, nor how far it might of itself have influenced the decision of the cause; but it was a fact upon which the defendant had a right to rely, as tending in a measure to defeat the claim asserted by the plaintiff. The conversation, which, it is claimed, resulted in an employment of the plaintiff, was had between Dr. Rowell and the plaintiff — they being respectively President and Director of the corporation. The by-law which was excluded cannot be said to have been irrelevant in an investigation as to how the parties may have understood each other.

I think that the judgment should be reversed, and a new trial had; and it is so ordered.

ANDREW CRAWFORD (DOING BUSINESS UNDER THE FIRM NAME OF A. CRAWFORD & Co.) v. THE BARK "CAROLINE REED," HER TACKLE, APPAREL, AND FURNITURE.

JURISDICTION AS TO MARITIME CONTRACT.—Where materials and supplies are furnished a domestic vessel at her home port, under a contract with the master of the vessel, the United States Courts have exclusive original jurisdiction of proceedings in rem to enforce a lien against the vessel for the same.

STATE LEGISLATION ON ADMIRALTY PROCEEDINGS.—The statute of this State, so far as it attempts to authorize proceedings in rem for causes of action cognisable in the admiralty, is unconstitutional.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

McAllister & Bergin, for Appellant.

The question involved is the constitutionality of the provisions of the Practice Act, under which the proceedings were instituted.

The presumption of law is, that every statute is constitutional and valid, and its invalidity can only be declared in cases free from all doubt. (Bourland v. Hildreth, 26 Cal. 227.)

This Court has decided that the statute in question was constitutional and valid, and the State Courts exercised lawful jurisdiction thereunder. (Warner v. Uncle Sam, 9 Cal. 647; Ord v. Uncle Sam, 13 Cal. 369; Sheldon v. Uncle Sam, 18 Cal. 562.)

The power of the Legislature over the forms of procedure and measure of the remedy is plenary. (The People v. Steamer America, 34 Cal. 680; Keating v. Spink, 3 Ohio St. 105; Trevor v. Ad. Hine, 17 Iowa, 350.)

The Federal Courts have repeatedly affirmed the constitutionality of similar statutes by administering and enforcing them. (The General Smith, 4 Wheat. 438; The Robert Fulton, 1 Paine, 620; Peyroux v. Howard, 7 Pet. 340; People's Ferry Company v. Beers, 20 How. 395; The Ship Harriet, Olcott Rep. 231; Roach v. Chapman, 22 How. 129; 1 Pars. on Mar. Law, 498.)

The New York cases are opposed to the decisions of this Court already referred to, the following cases in Illinois, Missouri, and Indiana, as well as to the various decisions of the United States District, Circuit, and Supreme Courts, enforcing these State laws. (Wyatt v. Stuckley, 29 Ired. 279; Cavender v. Fanny Barker, 40 Mo. 235; Boylan v. St. Bt. Victory, id. 245.)

Argument for Respondent.

Horne & Rosenbaum, for Respondent, cited The Moses Taylor, 4 Wallace, U. S., 411; The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wallace, U. S., 555; The Belfast, 7 Wallace, U. S., 624; The Josephine, 39 N. Y. 19; Jackson v. The Propeller Kinnie, 8 Am. Law Reg., N. S., 470; Ferran & Lowndes v. Hosford & Goodrich, 54 Barb. 200.)

Is the jurisdiction of the United States Court in actions against vessels by name, exclusive or concurrent? If we examine the Constitution and the several Acts of Congress under it, but one conclusion can be arrived at, namely: that the jurisdiction is exclusive.

Article five of the Constitution of the United States extends the jurisdiction of the Federal Court "to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." It will be observed that in said article the word "all" is used in some cases, and in others omitted. It must be presumed that the framers of that instrument had an object in making that distinction. Justice STORY says, that where the word "all" is used in that instrument, it means exclusive; and where omitted, concurrent. (1 Wheaton, 334.)

Act of Congress, 24th September, 1789, gives to the District Court exclusive original cognizance in all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Now if this Act of Congress giving to this District Court exclusive jurisdiction is constitutional, the Act of the State Legislature giving to State Courts concurrent jurisdiction must be unconstitutional. Whatever may have been the opinion of jurists heretofore, the case of The Moses Taylor, followed by that of The Hine v. Trevor; The Belfast, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States; the case of steamer Josephine, decided by the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, as well as that of the propeller Kinnie (in which case the Court, in speaking of The Josephine case, expressed its satisfaction that State Courts agree with Federal Courts in denying jurisdiction in such action to State Courts), fully settles it in favor of the exclusive jurisdiction.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

This is an action brought under section three hundred and seventeen of the Practice Act, to enforce a lien for materials for the equipment and repair, and supplies for the use of the bark Caroline Reed. The vessel is a domestic vessel, and San Francisco, where the cause of action arose, is her home port. Whether the vessel was engaged entirely in commerce between different ports of this State, or between ports of this State and places not within the State, does not appear from the averments of the complaint. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained on the ground that the statute under which the suit was brought is unconstitutional; and this appeal is from the judgment entered sustaining the demurrer.

The materials and supplies furnished are alleged to have been furnished under a contract with the master of the vessel, and I do not understand that it is denied that the contract was of a maritime nature, upon which suit might have been brought against the owners or against the master in personam in the Courts of admiralty.

The case of The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, was a case under this very statute, to enforce a lien arising upon the breach of a contract to convey the complainant from New York to San Francisco. The decision in this case, as I understand it, does not go to the extent of holding that the language of the Constitution itself, ex vi termini, vests in the Courts of the United States exclusive jurisdiction of all civil causes of maritime and admiralty jurisdiction, but holds that in all cases to which the judicial power of the United States extends, Congress may rightfully vest exclusive jurisdiction in the Federal Courts, "and that the Judiciary Act of 1789 vests in the District Courts exclusive jurisdiction of causes of action of this character." It is also held that the saving clause in the ninth section of the Judiciary Act is not a saving of a concurrent remedy in a common law Court, but the saving of a common law remedy. A proceeding in rem is not a common law remedy, and the statute of this State, as far as it attempts to authorize proceedings in rem for causes of action cognizable in the admiralty, is unconstitutional and void.

The case of Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 555, decided at the same term, is to the same effect. It is there held that the grant to the District Courts of the United States of original admiralty jurisdiction is exclusive, not only of all other Federal Courts, but of the State Courts; and therefore State statutes which attempt to confer upon State Courts power to enforce a remedy by proceedings in rem for marine torts or contracts, are void. Both of these, however, were cases in which a maritime lien existed which could only be enforced in Courts of admiralty. The Legislatures of the States in which the actions were brought had attempted to create a statutory lien which should, in effect, take the place of the maritime lien previously existing. If this could be done, it would necessarily deprive the District Courts of much of the jurisdiction conferred upon them by the Judiciary Act, or, at least, would give the State Courts concurrent jurisdiction with them.

It is contended, however, that in the case at bar—there being no lien, by maritime law, for materials and supplies furnished at the home port—the statute does not trench at all upon the jurisdiction of the District Courts of the United States. The lien created is not a substitute for the lien existing by maritime law, but is made to meet a case where no such lien existed before. The Federal Courts can not enforce this lien, for it is not a maritime lien.

Opinion of the Court — Temple, J.

This argument, it seems to me, overlooks the fact that the cause of action is not to enforce a lien, but to recover for materials and supplies upon a maritime contract. The Admiralty Courts undoubtedly have jurisdiction to enforce this contract. The language of the Judiciary Act is not that the District Courts shall have exclusive, original cognizance of actions to enforce maritime liens, but of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. The cause of action is the breach of the contract. For this an action lies in admiralty. It is the fact that it is a maritime contract which gives that Court jurisdiction, and not the fact that a maritime lien is to be enforced.

It being admitted that the cause of action in the case at bar is one of which the Courts of admiralty have jurisdiction, it must follow that their jurisdiction is exclusive, except so far as the State Courts are permitted to take jurisdiction by the saving clause in the ninth section of the Judiciary Act. It is remarked in each of the cases cited from 4 Wallace that this saving is not of a remedy in the common law Courts, but of a common law remedy. It must follow from this that whenever Courts of admiralty have jurisdiction of a cause of action, whether it affords a remedy in rem, or in personam merely, that jurisdiction is exclusive, except as to the common law remedy reserved by that Act.

This action is brought to obtain relief for the breach of a maritime contract, and the remedy given by the statute is not a common law remedy. This seems to me conclusive against the statute.

I see no reason to doubt the constitutionality of the statute, so far as it may be made applicable to causes of action which are not cognizable in Courts of admiralty. There is no objection to the law merely because it authorizes a suit against the vessel itself, except so far as the suit is upon a marine contract.

Judgment affirmed.

P. H. RUSSELL v. GEORGE H. MIXER, MELISSA MIXER, AND JANE P. MORRILL.MISTAKE IN SATISFYING INSTEAD OF ASSIGNING A MORTGAGE.—RELIEF.—

Where the owner of a mortgage agreed to assign it to a third person, and at his request entered a satisfaction of record, both supposing that would carry out their intentions; held, upon a proper complaint by the intended assignee against the mortgagor, setting up the facts, that equity would relieve against the mistake and decree a foreclosure of the mortgage.

CURING MISTAKES OF PARTIES OWN IGNORANCE OR INATTENTION.—Equity will grant relief against a mistake by which parties, through their own ignorance or inattention, fail to select or prepare a proper kind of instrument to effectuate their agreement and intention, the same as if such mistake were made by a scrivener.

DEFECTIVE COMPLAINT.—When a complaint is defective in manner rather than in matter, if no objection is taken by demurrer, it will be held sufficient to support a judgment.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

J. H. McKune, for Appellants.

The original complaint made no attempt whatever to present a case for relief on the ground of mistake; and the amended complaint is equally barren of facts stated tending to make a case for relief on that ground. The plaintiff mistook no question of fact. He deliberately, of his own motion, with full knowledge of all the facts and of the law, without fraud on the part of anybody, released his mortgage. He avers that it was by mistake, but what that mistake was is only hinted at by an averment that he was surprised at its effect. That surprise which will avoid a deed must be produced by or accompanied with fraud or circumlocution. (Tiffany & Bullard on Trustees, 185; Story's Eq. Secs. 251, 111, 112; Gould v. Gould, 5 Met. 274; Kenyon v. Welty, 20 Cal. 637; Mastick v. Thorpe, 29 Cal. 444; 1 Johns. Ch. 512; 6 Johns. Ch. 166; 9 Barb. 532.)

The satisfaction of the mortgage operated as a deed of release, and such release is binding, operative, effectual, and irrevocable without consideration. (Frink v. Green, 5 Barb. 459; Stat. of Conveyances, Sec. 37; Romley v. Stoddard, 7 Johns. 207; People v. Chisholm, 8 Cal. 30; Pratt v. Crocker, 16 John. 270.)

Beatty & Denson and John Heard, for Respondent.

The mistake complained of and sought to be corrected, not occurring in the agreement of the parties, which is to assign and transfer the mortgage from Miller to Russell, but in the instrument which was executed by them with the intention and for the sole purpose of carrying into execution their agreement, ought to be so corrected in a Court of equity as to make the instrument conform to the agreement. (Hunt v. Rousmanier, Admin., 1 Peters, 13; 1 Story on Eq. Juris. Secs. 115, 119, 120; Key v. Simpson, 6 Iredell Eq. 462.)

The cases of mistake in law as to the effect of the contract itself rests upon totally different principles. The mistake here is the same as if the parties should go to a scrivener, state their contract, and request him to reduce it to writing. He draws up a writing, but expressing a contract entirely different from that which he was directed to frame. The parties, relying on his judgment as to the proper reading of the contract, sign it. There is no question but that on a proper bill and proof, equity would reform the contract.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

This case was recently here upon a former appeal (39 Cal. 504), and, upon its return below, an amended complaint was filed, averring in substance that, after the assignment of the five hundred dollar note by Miller to Russell, an agreement was made between them (to which the mortgagors, Mixer and wife, were not parties, and of which they had no knowledge), to the effect that Miller should assign the one thousand five hundred dollar mortgage to Russell, in order to enable the latter to more effectually control it; that, with this view, Russell and Miller proceeded together to the Recorder's office; that, when they arrived there, Miller, at the suggestion of Russell, entered a satisfaction of the mortgage upon the record — both he and Russell supposing that the previous agreement to assign it would be effectuated thereby, and both being surprised when they afterwards learned that they had, thereby, wholly discharged the lien of the mortgage, instead of keeping it on foot in the hands of Russell, the plaintiff, as they intended to do.

There is no controversy between Miller and the plaintiff, but the mortgagors, Mixer and wife, insist that the mortgage lien, which was removed by the entry of satisfaction, should not be restored nor the satisfaction canceled.

The Court below having entered a decree against them, they bring this appeal, and the only question presented, is whether or not, upon the facts stated in the amended complaint, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief he obtained.

We think that there can be no doubt that he is. The agreement between Miller and himself was for an assignment and transfer of the mortgage — the mistake occurred wholly in the selection of the means by which this agreement was to be effectuated.

There is no appreciable distinction between this case and that where a scrivener, through ignorance or inattention, fails to select or prepare such an instrument as effectuates the previous agreement of parties, and relief is always decreed in that case. (1 Story Eq. Jur. Sec. 115.) Had the Recorder here, upon being informed by the parties that the agreement between them was that the mortgage in question should be more effectually transferred to Russell, prepared a release, instead of an assignment, whether he did so through mere inattention to what he was doing, or through a misapprehension of its legal effect in the premises, there would be no doubt that equity would relieve against the mistake. The rule must be the same in a case where the parties have made the mistake for themselves, and without the aid of either scrivener or Recorder.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Chief Justice RHODES dissented.

Mr. Justice TEMPLE did not participate in the foregoing decision.

Afterwards a petition for rehearing having been filed by defendants, the following decision was rendered:

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

In the original complaint before us on the first appeal (39 Cal. 504), there was not a sufficient, nor any, averment of a mistake having occurred in the entry of satisfaction of the mortgage in question. There was no allegation that there had been an agreement between Russell and Miller for a transfer of the mortgage by the latter to the former, and that the mistake occurred in the attempted carrying this agreement into effect. In the amended complaint, however, it is averred, that Russell applied to Miller to obtain an assignment of the mortgage; that Miller consented to give him the assignment, and that the two proceeded together to the Recorder's office "for the express purpose of making such transfer to this plaintiff." The case, as thus presented in the amended complaint, is essentially different from that appearing in the original complaint in the respect indicated. It is true that even in the amended complaint it is not alleged with commendable certainty and precision, that Miller did agree to transfer the mortgage to Russell, and had an objection been taken below to the sufficiency of the amended complaint on that ground, the plaintiff must have been driven to a further amendment; but no such objection was interposed there, and it can not be maintained, that for these defects in manner, rather than in matter, of averment, the complaint is radically insufficient to sustain the judgment.

The rehearing must, therefore, be denied, and it is so ordered.

Neither Mr. Chief Justice RHODES nor Mr. Justice TEMPLE took any part in the decision on rehearing.

STEPHEN SPENCER AND HARTWELL PRATT v.
JOHN WINSELMAN AND JOHN R. CLOW.

TITLE TO POSSESSION OF MINING GROUND NOT A SUBJECT FOR ARBITRATION.—The subject matter of an action for the recovery of mining ground on public land, is regarded in this State as "a question of title to real property in fee," and therefore cannot, under section three hundred and eighty of the Practice Act, be submitted to arbitration; and if so submitted, an award and judgment thereon will, on motion, be vacated and set aside.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Tenth Judicial District, Yuba County.

The mining ground in controversy is situated at Young's Hill, in Yuba County. The award and judgment in favor of plaintiffs was for the possession of the ground and one thousand six hundred dollars damages, for gold extracted and taken away by defendants. The motion to vacate and set aside the award and judgment was made upon various grounds; but the only one urged upon argument in the Court below was, that the arbitrators had refused, or improperly emitted, to consider a part of the matters submitted to them; and it was upon this ground that the award and judgment were set aside.

Upon this appeal all the grounds raised by the motion were taken up by counsel and discussed at great length. Their points on the fundamental question involved were as follows.

W. C. Belcher, J. O. Goodwin, and George May, for Appellants.

The title to real property in fee, or for life, was not involved. Our statute provides that "all lands in this State shall be deemed and regarded as public lands until the legal title is shown to have passed from the Government to private parties." (Hittell Dig. 6,800.) Neither party here had, or pretended to have, any higher or better claim or title to the premises than is acquired by occupation for mining purposes under the mining rules and regulations of the district. The presumption is, that the fee to all the mineral lands of this State is in the United States, and that presumption can only be overcome by direct proof that private parties have acquired that fee.

The Acts of Congress of February 27th, 1865, May 5th, 1866, and July 26th, 1866, show the intent of the Government in regard to the fee of the mineral lands; and it is plain from them that the occupant can not acquire other than a possessory claim. In reference to gravel beds, more particularly, the right of the miner to occupy and mine is a valuable right; but it is not an estate in fee, or for life, or a tenancy for years even, but simply a right to occupy, which may be terminated at the pleasure of the Government.

Estates in fee, and estates for life, are legal terms well understood, and import naked legal titles. These being specially excepted by the statute concerning arbitrations, no other or different estate in or claim or title to real property is excepted. All controversies with reference to other titles, and claims to lands may be referred to arbitration. (See Blair v. Wallace, 21 Cal. 321; Cox v. Jagger, 2 Cow. 649; Blanchard v. Murray, 15 Vt. 551.)

Hatch & Ashford and J. L. Lockwood, for Respondents.

A mining claim, or the possessory right to a given piece of the public domain, whether it be a quarter section of agricultural land or a hundred feet square of mining ground, is real estate for all purposes, as far as the rights of litigants in our Courts are concerned. A person thus having the possession, is, as to all the world, except the Government, the owner of the soil, having a vested right of property, founded upon his possession. He has the highest estate known to the law, it being an estate of inheritance. It is such a right, property, interest, and estate in lands as will pass, by operation of law, to the heirs of the intestate holder or owner. (See Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 302; Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 64; Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 505.)

At common law any mere dispute respecting land, but not involving title, such, for instance, as arise concerning boundaries, or concerning the sale or transfer of land, might be arbitrated; the general rule being, that when the parties might, by their own act, transfer real property, or exercise any acts of ownership with respect to it, they might refer any dispute concerning it to the decision of arbitrators, who could award the same act to be done which the parties themselves might do by their own agreement. But no right or title to land, or to an interest or estate in land, could pass in virtue of an award of arbitrators. And this, we take it, is the general rule in this country and in this State. If we are correct in this, it follows that the submission to arbitration in this case was void; and if the submission was void, in whole or in part, the award, of course, was to the same extent void.

P. Van Clief, also for Respondents.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

Spencer and another brought an action against Winselman and others for the recovery of certain mining grounds, alleging themselves to be owners and entitled to the possession of the premises sued for. The defendants answered, denying the ownership of the plaintiffs, and alleging themselves to be the owners, and entitled to the possession of the premises. While the cause was pending upon these issues, the parties stipulated in writing to submit the cause to arbitration, and the stipulation was entered as an order of Court pursuant to the statute. (Practice Act, Sec. 382.)

An award having subsequently been made, and judgment entered in the judgment book pursuant to the statute, the defendants moved to vacate it upon several grounds, and, among others, upon the ground "that the matters, issues, and questions submitted to arbitration by said agreement, and actually submitted to said arbitrators by the parties, involved questions of title to real property in fee and for life," etc. The motion having been sustained, this appeal is taken.

The statute (Pr. Act, Sec. 380) provides, in substance, that any controversy which might be the subject of a civil action, may be submitted to arbitration, "except a question of title to real property in fee or for life."

In Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 61, the question was before this Court as to the nature of the tenure by which mineral lands in this State were held. It was urged, in argument, that the occupant of a mining claim is not thereby the owner of a freehold estate in the premises, and not being such owner had, consequently, no right to the fixtures there in controversy, but that the Federal Government is the owner of the soil. But the Court said: "From an early period of our State jurisprudence we have regarded these claims to public mineral lands as titles. They are so practically. * * * Our Courts have given them the recognition of legal estates of freehold; and so, to all practicable purposes, if we except some doctrine of abandonment, not, perhaps, applicable to such estates, unquestionably they are; and we think it would not be in harmony with the general judicial system to deny to them the incidents of freehold estates in respect to this matter."

In Hughes v. Devlin, 28 Cal. 501, the question again came before this Court in an action for a partition, and, in speaking of the tenure by which such property is held in this State, the Court said: "Although the ultimate fee in our public mineral lands is vested in the United States, yet, as between individuals, all transactions, and all rights, interests, and estates in the mines are treated as being an estate in fee, and as a distinct and vested right of property in the claimant or claimants thereof, founded upon their possession or appropriation of the land containing the mine. They are treated, as between themselves and all persons but the United States, as the owners of the land and the mines therein," etc.

The case of Blair v. Wallace, 21 Cal. 318, relied upon by the appellant, is not in conflict with these views. The controversy there grew out of a contract between the parties, and did not involve a question of title in the sense of the statute prohibiting its submission to arbitration. It is not doubted that a party who is the admitted owner of a title in fee to real estate may contract to convey it to another, and that a controversy concerning the alleged performance or non-performance of such a contract may be the subject of arbitration under the statute; and this seems to have been the nature of the controversy submitted to arbitration in the case of Blair v. Wallace.

APPEARANCE FOR INFANT DEFENDANTS BY GENERAL GUARDIAN.—Where, in a suit against infants, there was no personal service upon them, but their general guardian appeared and defended for them; held, that such appearance gave the Court jurisdiction of their persons.

DOCTRINE OF STARE DECISIS.—When a rule, by which the title to real property is to be determined, has become established by positive law or by deliberate judicial decision, its inherent correctness or incorrectness, its justice or injustice, in the abstract, are of far less importance than that it should, itself, be constant and invariable.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

There having been a judgment in the Court below in favor of defendants, the plaintiffs appealed.

R. C. Clark and James L. English, for Appellants.

Under the provisions of the Practice Act, a defendant may appear and answer without the service of a summons; and a voluntary appearance of the defendant shall be equivalent to service of summons; but it is the defendant who must appear, and not a guardian for him. It is true section sixteen of the Guardian Act provides that the guardian "shall appear for and represent his ward in all legal suits and proceedings, unless when another person is appointed for that purpose as guardian or next friend;" but this gives him no power to bring his ward into Court, or to give a Court jurisdiction by voluntary appearance; for the voluntary appearance which will give jurisdiction of the person must be the voluntas of the defendant, and not of some other person. A guardian cannot bind the ward by his appearance. (Fox v. Minor, 32 Cal. 117.) Compare, also, Practice Act of 1850 with Practice Act of 1851, from which it will be seen that the law was expressly amended in 1851 so as to require in all cases personal service upon the infant before the Court could acquire jurisdiction of the person of an infant. "The provision of the statute requiring personal service upon the minor and also upon the guardian, is not the result of a misprint or a clerical mistake, but the deliberate will of the Legislature—as such it is our duty to carry it out." (Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 638.)

J. W. Winans and J. K. Alexander, for Respondents.

The appearance of the infant defendants, in the case of Smith v. Smith et al., by their guardian, was sufficient, and fully protected the defendant McDonald in his purchase of the property under the decree of the Court. Even if there were no other defense in this case, we submit that the decision of this Court in Gronfier v. Puymiol, 19 Cal. 629, settles the question in favor of respondents, and sustaining the decision of the Court below. (See, also, Hitt. Dig. 3362, 3368, 3377; Stuart v. Allen, 18 Cal. 475; Seale v. McLaughlin, 28 Cal. 669; Taylor v. Atwood, 2 Peere William, 643; Beverly v. Miller, 6 Munford, Va. 99; Wells v. Dennis, 3 Johns. Ch. 368; Booth v. Rich, 1 Vernon, 295; Evertson v. Tappan, 5 Johns. Ch. 497; Wilkinson v. Oliver, 4 Hening & Munf. 450; Meriwether v. Hites, 2 A. K. Marsh, 182; Christman v. Wright, 3 Tredell's Equity, 549; Este v. Strong, 2 Hammond, Ohio, 461.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The facts, or most of them, out of which the present controversy arises, may be seen in the report of the case of

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

Smith v. Smith, 12 Cal. 217. At the sale under the decree which the Court below rendered in that case, by the direction of this Court, lot six, between M and N, and Eighth and Ninth streets, in the City of Sacramento, was purchased by the defendant McDonald. The plaintiffs here, who now seek to recover it from him, were the infant defendants in that case, and they now claim that the proceedings resulting in the sale are void as to them, on the ground that jurisdiction of their persons was never acquired.

It appears, from the findings filed in this action, that no summons was personally served upon the infant defendants in that action, but that, without such service being made or attempted, their father, F. C. Smith, who was himself a defendant, and was at the time their general guardian, duly appointed, qualified, and acting, "appeared in said action, and by attorney, for himself and them, defended the same; that said attorney, on behalf of said infants and in their names, and F. C. Smith as their guardian, demurred to the complaint therein," etc.

It is insisted by counsel that F. C. Smith, as such general guardian, had no authority to appear for his wards in that action, because no service of summons had been made upon them, or either of them; and that, in the absence of such service, the appearance so entered was of no legal import whatever, and, as a consequence, that the decree subsequently rendered therein was absolutely void, to all intents and purposes, as to them.

The question thus presented, though jurisdictional in its consequences, is purely one of practice. It is a question of correct or incorrect procedure in cases in which infant defendants are impleaded, or attempted to be impleaded, in Courts of justice. It is exactly the question which arose and was determined here in the case of Gronfier v. Puymiol, 19 Cal. 629, and ever since the decision there rendered, it has been regarded as definitely settled in the Courts of this

State. In that case, Gronfier, the infant defendant, was not within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court in which he was impleaded; he was at the time in France, of which country he was a resident. No service of summons was made or attempted upon him. Mr. Lies having been appointed to be his guardian by the Probate Court, under that provision of the statute authorizing such an appointment for a minor "who shall reside without the State and have any estate within the county," entered his appearance in the action. Objection being subsequently made here to the authority of the guardian in that respect, the objection was held not well taken. Mr. Chief Justice FIELD, delivering the opinion of the Court upon this point, said: "As Lies was general guardian, there was no occasion for his special appointment as guardian ad litem in the action. As general guardian he was authorized—indeed it was his duty—to appear for his ward."

It is believed that the authority of that case, upon the point involved, has never been doubted or called in question until now. The construction which it gave to the statute, in the respect now under consideration, has since then been steadily adhered to by the Courts—it has been relied upon by the profession in the examination of titles, and acted upon in the purchase and sale of real estate during the intervening period, now some eight years—and property interests of immense magnitude must be imperiled if it is to be overturned now.

Under such circumstances it has arisen to the importance of a rule of property, and even though it were conclusively shown to have been, as an exposition of the statute it attempted to construe, incorrect at the outset, I think it, nevertheless, our duty to maintain it now, and not permit it to be disturbed. If its operation for eight years in practice has indeed shown it to have unnecessarily facilitated the despoliation of the estates of infants, it certainly is not for us to abrogate it for such a reason.

The Legislature can make such change, if it be desirable, without the disturbance of titles and the destruction of individual rights, which invariably follow such a change when brought about by a judicial decision. When a rule, by which the title to real property is to be determined, has become established by positive law or by deliberate judicial decision, its inherent correctness or incorrectness, its justice or injustice, in the abstract, are of far less importance than that it should, itself, be constant and invariable. We should not disturb such a rule of property here, even though we be satisfied that we could substitute another preferable in theory, or better calculated by its operation to promote the purposes of justice.

Entertaining these views, I am of the opinion that the judgment of the Court below should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

CROCKETT, J., dissenting:

The defendant McDonald deraigns title to the demanded premises through a judicial sale in the case of Augusta S. Smith v. F. C. Smith et als., and a Sheriff's deed in pursuance thereof. The present plaintiffs were named as defendants in that action, and were minors at the date of the decree therein. No summons, however, was ever served upon them, and being minors they were incapable of binding themselves by a voluntary appearance, had they attempted to do so. But it appears from the findings that their father (who was also a defendant, and appeared to the action) was their general statutory guardian, duly appointed and qualified, and that he employed counsel to represent them in said action; that the counsel so employed filed, in their names, a demurrer to the complaint; and the de-murrer being overruled, he subsequently filed an answer for them, on which the cause went to trial. Under the decree rendered therein the defendant McDonald purchased; and if the Court acquired jurisdiction of the persons of the plaintiffs by reason of the above recited facts, it is clear that McDonald has acquired whatever title they then had. On the other hand, if they are not bound by the decree, for a want of jurisdiction in the Court over their persons, the title is still in them, and they are entitled to recover, unless the action is barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Section nine of the code provides that "when an infant is a party, he shall appear by guardian who may be appointed by the Court in which the action is prosecuted, or by a Judge thereof, or a County Judge;" and the next section provides on whose motion the guardian may be appointed. Section twenty-nine prescribes the method of serving the summons on an infant defendant, to wit: If he be under the age of fourteen years, by delivering a copy "to such minor personally, and also to his father, mother, guardian, or if there be none within the State, then to any person having the care or control of such minor, or with whom he resides, or in whose service he is employed;" and "in all other cases to the defendant personally." If these provisions were alone to be appealed to, it would be plain enough, that the Court could acquire no jurisdiction of the person of an infant defendant without a personal service of the summons. The Court has no power, on the motion of any one else, to appoint a guardian ad litem for a minor above the age of fourteen, until after service on the minor, as is apparent from section ten, which authorizes him, if above the age of fourteen, to make his application for the appointment of the guardian ad litem, at any time within ten days after the service of the summons; and until he shall have neglected to apply within that time, no one else can make the application. It is not for us to inquire into the motives of the legislature for requiring a personal service on an infant of tender years. It is sufficient that the statute expressly requires it; and it is our duty to see that the law is obeyed in this respect, without criticising the reasons for its enactment. But it is not difficult to perceive very sufficient reasons for this provision, founded on the vigilant care which the law exercises over minors and their estates. Children are generally under the care or control of relatives or friends, who feel an interest in their welfare; and a personal service or process on a minor increases the chances of protecting his rights, and diminishes the opportunity for fraud and collusion in the disposition and management of his estate. The general guardian may, possibly, be himself a party to a contemplated fraud on the minor, or may be culpably neglectful of his duties, in either of which events the summons served personally on the minor, and which may, and very probably would, fall into the hands, or attract the notice of the friend or relative having the custody of his person, and who is presumed to feel an interest in his affairs, might possibly be the means of preventing a wrong. In a majority of cases the practical effect of personal service on a minor is to give notice of the action to the actual custodian of his person; and this was, doubtless, the chief motive for requiring such service. There may be very satisfactory reasons why the general guardian should not be allowed to defend for the minor. He may be incompetent to conduct an important litigation, or he may be liable to a suspicion of fraud or collusion, or so negligent as to render him an unfit person to prepare the defense. In such cases the personal service on the minor may be the means of bringing these facts to the attention of the Court, and thus securing the appointment of a proper guardian to conduct the defense. But by section sixteen of the Act to provide for the appointment and prescribing the duties of guardians it is provided, that the guardian "shall appear for and represent his ward in all legal suits and proceedings, unless where another person is appointed as guardian or next friend."

In Gronfier v. Puymiol, 19 Cal. 629, a general guardian appeared and defended the action for his ward, on whom there had been no service of process, and without having been appointed guardian ad litem by the Court in which the action was pending; and this Court held the proceedings to be valid, and that the ward was bound by the judgment. The decision is founded on the provision of section sixteen of the Act above quoted, which was held to authorize an appearance for the ward by the general guardian, when no guardian ad litem had been appointed. But the attention of the Court does not appear to have been called to the provisions of the code requiring a personal service on the minor, as affecting the question of jurisdiction. If service on the minor be shown, it cannot be doubted that the general guardian may appear for and represent him in the action, unless another be specially appointed for that purpose. But, as already stated, one of the principal ends to be subserved in requiring service on the minor, is to bring the matter to the attention of his friends, relatives, or custodian, so that they may have the opportunity to show that the general guardian is not a fit and proper person to represent him in the litigation. This object might, and in many cases would be wholly defeated if no service on the minor was required before the general guardian was authorized to appear for him. After service on the minor, if no one appears within the proper time to apply for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, the presumption is that there is no objection to an appearance on his behalf by the general guardian. But, as I construe these provisions, and in view of the policy which obviously dictated them, the general guardian has no authority to appear for his ward in the action until after the latter shall have been served with process, and until the time shall have elapsed within which an application may be made by the minor, or in his behalf, for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, to wit: ten days after the service. In so far as the decision in Gronfier v. Puymiol, contravenes this proposition, it ought, in my opinion, to be overruled.

I am not, however, to be understood as holding that if a minor be a non-resident, so that he cannot be personally served, the service may not in that case be made by publication of summons, as in other cases in which the service by publication is substituted for personal service. My conclusion on this branch of the case is, that the plaintiffs are not bound by the decree in the case of Augusta S. Smith and F. C. Smith et als., because they were not served with the summons.

But the defendants claim, on the authority of Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, that all the presumptions are in support of the decree, and that in a collateral action it cannot be shown by proof dehors the record, that there was no service of summons on the present plaintiffs. The record, however, in that action is not before us on appeal. The Court finds it as a fact that no summons issued and none was served on the plaintiffs, and, for aught that appears, the fact may have appeared on the face of the record itself. This is an appeal on the judgment roll alone, and we must presume that there was sufficient competent evidence to support the findings. The decree against the plaintiffs was absolutely void, and not merely voidable as to them, and their acquiescence in it, for a time after reaching their majority, does not estop them. Nor is their claim barred by the Statute of Limitations, upon the facts found by the Court.

I think, therefore, that the judgment should be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PHILIP SICHEL v. MARIA MERCED WILLIAMS DE CARRILLO, JOSE CARRILLO (HER HUSBAND), CORNELIA RAINS, ISAAC RAINS, ROBERT RAINS, JOHN SCOTT RAINS, AND FANNIE B. RAINS, MINOR CHILDREN OF JOHN RAINS, DECEASED, ET AL.

EFFECT OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—The expiration of the time fixed in the Statute of Limitations with reference to actions for money due on contracts, does not discharge the debt or extinguish the right, but only takes away the remedy.

MORTGAGE GIVEN BY ONE PERSON TO SECURE ANOTHER'S DEBT.—Where a promissory note is executed by one person, and a mortgage to secure the debt is given by another, and the payor of the note dies, and the holder thereof fails to present either the note or mortgage to his administrator for allowance within ten months after publication of notice to creditors, although the claim is barred as against the estate, yet the mortgage remains in full force as against the mortgager and the mortgaged property, and may be foreclosed at any time before it is barred, as against the mortgagor, by the Statute of Limitations.

IDEM.—The above rule remains the same when the note is made by the husband for his own debt, and the wife mortgages her separate property to secure it, and the husband signs the mortgage to show his assent to it. In such case the wife's liability on the mortgage is not affected by the death of the husband and the failure of the holder to present the claim for allowance to the administrator of his estate.

CONTINGENT CLAIM AGAINST AN ESTATE.—If the wife, to secure the debt of the husband, mortgages her separate property, and the husband dies, and the holder fails to present the claim to the administrator for allowance, and the mortgage is afterward enforced; whether the widow has a contingent claim which she may afterwards enforce against the estate, spoken of, but not decided.

CHANGE OF CONCLUSIONS OF LAW BY COURT.—Whether, after the Court has made its findings of fact and adopted its conclusions of law, it may change the conclusions of law, and enter a different judgment from that first ordered, spoken of, but not decided.

COST OF TRANSCRIPT.—When an appellant includes in the transcript irrelevant matter, he can not recover costs for procuring or printing the same.

Argument for Appellants.

COUNSEL FEES.—If there is no provision in a mortgage for payment of counsel fees, the plaintiff in an action to foreclose it is not entitled to such fees.

TAXES ON DEBT SECURED BY MORTGAGE.—If one person mortgages his property to secure the debt of another, and there is a provision in the mortgage for the payment of taxes on the mortgage debt, the plaintiff, in foreclosing, may retain such taxes out of the proceeds of sale.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS AS AGAINST ESTATE OF DECEASED.—The limitation on the right to enforce a claim or debt, which is not presented to the administrator within ten months after the first publication of notice to creditors, applies solely to the claim as against the estate, and in no way affects the validity of the debt as against other persons who are liable for the debt, or whose property is liable.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, County of Santa Clara.

John Rains died on the 17th day of November, 1862, and E. K. Dunlap was, on the 5th day of January, 1863, appointed the administrator of his estate. The administrator first published notice to the creditors of deceased on the 28th day of February, 1863. The notes fell due September 14th, 1863. This action was commenced on the 29th day of October, 1864. The Court below allowed the plaintiff one thousand dollars for counsel fees in foreclosing the mortgage. The administrator of Rains was not made a party to the action.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp and A. Glassell, for Appellants.

A presentation to the administrator of the estate of Rains was unnecessary. (Christy v. Dana, ante, 174.) Admitting that Mrs. Carrillo is a surety, and entitled to all the rights of one, appellant is not affected. He has not given time to the principal upon a binding agreement, received payment, or anything else. If a principal does not meet his obligation at the time and in the manner agreed upon, the liability of the surety becomes absolute. (Willard's Eq. Jurs. 108, and cases cited.) And if a demand on the principal in life is not necessary to bind the surety, his death, most certainly, cannot impose on the creditor the burden of a demand (by presentation) on his representatives; if unnecessary in one case, it is in all. A release of property of the principal releases surety; but in this case it is the property of the alleged surety, and not the principal, that has been pledged. A discharge of the principal in insolvency does not affect the property pledged by surety and prevent the foreclosure of the mortgage. (Christy v. Dana, supra.) Appellant had two remedies; one on the personal obligation of Rains, and one on this separate property of his wife. By the general law of the State, at the time the contract is made the Statute of Limitations bar neither until four years after maturity.

Holt & Heacock, for Respondents.

An action on the notes or mortgage debt is barred by non-presentation to Rains' administrator. Upon this point there is no conflict in the authorities in this State. (Ellison v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 386; Faulkner v. Folsom's Ex., 6 Cal. 412; Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 24; Willis v. Farley, 24 Cal. 500; Ellis v. Polhemus, 27 Cal. 350.)

The debt being "forever barred," does an action lie to foreclose the mortgage? The solution of this question depends upon the nature and character of a mortgage in this State. What is a mortgage under our laws? It is a contract, in writing, whereby the debtor agrees that upon failure to pay a sum of money at a specified time the creditor may have his property sold, upon application to a competent Court, and out of the proceeds of the sale to have his debt paid. Beyond this he has no interest in the property mortgaged whatever. (Godeffroy v. Caldwell, 2 Cal. 492; Peters v. Jamestown Bridge Co., 5 Cal. 336; Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. 516; Lord v. Mains, 18 Cal. 488; Willis v. Farley, 24 Cal. 500; Polhemus v. Trainer, 30 Cal. 685.) When the debt goes out of existence, the mortgage goes with it.

Argument for Respondents.

As the surety for John Rains, Mrs. Carrillo is discharged from the payment of this money, independent of section one hundred and thirty of the Probate Act. The notes matured September 14th, 1863, and at that time, and ever since, the administrator of Rains has been acting as such, with full powers. Mrs. Carrillo, as surety, is entitled to all the rights and privileges of that relation; one of those rights is, that payment of the principal must be demanded before a suit lies against the surety. (Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 488; Pierce v. Kennedy, 5 Cal. 138; 1 Parsons on Notes and Bills, 354.)

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, in reply.

It is a well settled principle of law and equity, that no demand upon the principal is necessary to bind the surety; the latter's liability becomes absolute, if the former does not meet his obligation the day it is due. (Orme v. Young, Holt's N. P. Cas. 87; Willard's Eq. Jurs. 108.) If this be the rule while the principal is living, how can his death change the contract?

The sole object of section one hundred and thirty is to expedite the settlement of estates, and to protect a particular fund from old claims. There is no provision that an action should not be maintained upon the debt after ten months, as in the general Limitation Act. It would be a strange construction of this section to hold that if A. holds the joint note of B. and C., and B. should die, and A. proceeded directly against C., that he could not recover, because, not having pursued the estate of B., the note has lost its existence, consequently C. is discharged. The defense could not be, nor is it, maintainable.

C. B. Younger, also for Respondents Carrillo, Rains, and Hayes.

The bar created by section one hundred and thirty is available to the defendants, because that section is for the benefit of the heirs and devisees, in order to discharge the estate within a reasonable time from the lien of the debts of the deceased. When an action on a promissory note is barred by the statute, the remedy upon the mortgage given to secure it is also barred; and in an action to foreclose the mortgage the bar of the note is a complete defense to the foreclosure, and is available to any one interested in the mortgaged property. (24 Cal. 497; 21 id. 495; 22 id. 100; 23 id. 16; id. 43; 24 id. 403; 26 id. 141; id. 361.)

Peachy & Hubert filed the petition for a rehearing on behalf of Mrs. Carrillo.

By the Court, SAWYER, C. J.:

On the 11th of November, 1862, John Rains executed the notes in suit, payable one year after date, for his own private debts. On the same day Rains and his wife, Maria Merced Rains, now Mrs. Carrillo, one of the defendants to secure the payment of the promissory notes, executed the mortgage in question, upon lands which were the separate property of the wife, Mrs. Rains — the wife thereby mortgaging her own separate property to secure her husband's debts, for which neither she nor her property was otherwise liable. John Rains having died, an administrator was duly appointed, the statutory notice to creditors duly published, the ten months given to creditors to present their claims expired without any presentation of the notes or mortgage for allowance, and the claim thereby became barred, under section one hundred and thirty of the Probate Act, so far as the estate of Rains is concerned.

This action was subsequently commenced against Mrs. Carrillo, the real mortgagor, who was formerly the wife of Rains, and others having interests in the land, to foreclose the mortgage. The Court found the facts substantially as thus briefly stated, ascertaining the amount due and unpaid, and, as a conclusion of law, added that plaintiffs were entitled to have the property sold under the judgment of the Court, and the amount found due paid out of the proceeds of the sale. Upon filing these findings, Mrs. Carrillo, the principal defendant, moved the Court to strike out the legal conclusion drawn from the facts, and substitute others of a contrary character, and the Court, upon consideration, adopted the views of defendant's counsel, and substituted conclusions to the effect that, by reason of the failure to present the notes and mortgage, or either of them, to the administrator of John Rains within ten months after publication of notice, the notes became forever barred before the commencement of suit, and that Mrs. Carrillo, being security to the extent of the property mortgaged for the payment of said notes, was thereby discharged from payment. In accordance with this view judgment was entered for defendants, from which plaintiff appealed.

The argument is that a mortgage is only an incident to the debt; that when the debt is paid, satisfied, or in any manner extinguished, the mortgage is also discharged or extinguished; that the mortgage cannot exist without a debt to support it, and that the debt, being barred by the statute on failure to present it to the administrator within the ten months prescribed, it is extinguished, and the mortgage thereby discharged for the want of a debt to support it. There is, at least, one mistake in this argument in assuming that the Statute of Limitations extinguishes the debt. It is well settled, with reference to actions for moneys due on contracts, that the statute does not discharge the debt, or in any way extinguish the right or destroy the obligation, but only takes away a remedy. The debt remains unsatisfied and unextinguished. It is a sufficient consideration to support a new promise. (Townsend v. Jemison, 9 How. U. S.

The limitation invoked in this case is not a general statute of limitations, taking away all remedy as to every party liable, either personally or through his property, for the debt. It arises under a specific Act adopted for a particular purpose, and has reference solely to the estates of deceased persons. It applies to no other subject matter. The provision is adopted to facilitate the early settlement of the estates of deceased persons, and provides that, unless a claim be presented within ten months after publication of notice, "it shall be forever barred." That is to say, it shall be forever barred as a claim against the estate — the claimant shall have no right, thereafter, to payment out of the estate of the deceased. The whole subject matter of the provision is claims against the estate. It in no way affects claims against other parties or against the property of others, or the contracts of other parties, although the same demand may also be a claim against the estate. Thus, if two parties are jointly liable on a demand, and one dies, the demand would undoubtedly be barred as respects the estate of the deceased party by a failure to present the claim within the ten months prescribed; but this would in no respect affect the right of action against the survivor. The debt is not extinguished, paid, or discharged, nor is the cause of action barred as to the survivor. A payment, or valid release or discharge, or extinguishment of the debt as to the deceased, no matter in what form it might be accomplished, would also be a payment, discharge, or extinguishment as to the survivor, because the debt no longer exists. Suppose Mrs. Carrillo had not been the wife of Rains, and, having no interest in the matter herself, had indorsed the notes in suit, intending to be security for their payment; the notes had fallen due, the proper steps had been taken to charge her as indorser, Rains had subsequently died, and the holder had failed to present the notes to the administrator, and the claim had thereby been barred as against the estate, although four years have not elapsed since the making of the notes. We apprehend it would not be claimed that an action could not be maintained against Mrs. Carrillo on her indorsement. The bar did not attach to her contract, and the fact that she was a surety merely would not affect the question. Her contract is still in force. The failure to make the money out of the principal was the result of neglect—mere non-action on the part of the holder. The principal might be involved, and the holder look only to the surety. The surety might at any time have paid the demand and presented the claim herself, and thus protected herself. This would have been her remedy. The non-action of the holder, by which the claim became barred, would not discharge the surety. (Dane v. Cordman, 24 Cal. 164; Whiting v. Clark, 17 Cal. 410.)

In the latter case the creditor allowed the demand to become barred as to the principal, and the surety claimed that the bar discharged him. The Court held otherwise, and the case is directly in point as to this question. So, had Mrs. Carrillo not been the wife of Rains, and had the mortgage in question contained a covenant on her part to pay the debt, she certainly would not have been discharged from her own liability on her personal covenant because the creditor allowed his claim against the estate to become barred. Her own liability, on her own independent covenant, would have continued until it should, in some mode, become paid, satisfied, released, discharged, or extinguished, or until it should become barred, as to her, under the general Statute of Limitations; and it can make no difference in principle whether she is generally personally liable or whether she has become liable through her property to the extent of the value of a specific piece of property, which, by her contract, she has subjected to the demand, or which she has, in effect, cove-nanted shall pay the demand so far as it will go toward payment.

It must be borne in mind, in examining the case now before us, that there are two contracts, the contract on the part of Rains to pay the debt, of which the notes are the evidence, and the independent contract on the part of Mrs. Rains that her lands shall pay it, or which is the same thing, be bound for its payment. In the older States, where a different time was prescribed in the Statutes of Limitations for simple contracts and those under seal, an action to foreclose a mortgage was held not to be barred, although the action on the note secured was barred. Thus, in Elkins v. Edwards, 8 Geph. 326, an action to foreclose a mortgage, the Supreme Court of Georgia say: "Because the remedy on the note is barred by the statute in six years, it does not follow that the creditor's remedy on the mortgage, being a sealed instrument, is also barred. The creditor's remedy on the mortgage is not barred until twenty years — the debt being unpaid." And it is on this very difference between our statute and those of other States, that our predecessors, in Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 483, held an action to foreclose a mortgage to be barred, in this State, at the same time with the action on the note. The Court, by FIELD, C. J., say: "It is undoubtedly true, as stated by the Court in the case from Georgia, that the creditor stipulated by contract for two remedies against his debtor to enforce the collection of his demand—the one by action upon the note, and the other by petition and foreclosure upon the mortgage. Similar remedies he can pursue in this State. He can proceed upon the note, and take an ordinary judgment for the amount due; or he can sue in equity upon the mortgage, and take a decree for its foreclosure and the sale of the premises. The difference is, that here the limitation prescribed to the equitable suit is the same as that prescribed to the action at law. The mortgage is as much within the general designation of a 'con- tract, obligation, or liability, founded upon an instrument of writing, as is the note itself.

"We do not question the correctness of the general doctrine prevailing in the Courts of several of the States, that a mortgage remains in force until the debt, for the security of which it is given, is paid. We only hold that the doctrine has no application under the Statute of Limitations of this State. A mortgage is a specialty, and is not within the terms of the English statute, or of the statutes of most of the States. An action founded upon such specialty can only be met by proof of payment. The payment may be established by direct evidence of the fact, and it may be presumed from the lapse of twenty years, when such presumption is not countervailed by evidence from the mortgagee. 'Thus,' says the Supreme Court of Maine, in Joy v. Adams, 26 Maine, 333, 'a mortgage security has not been deemed to be within any branch of the Statute of Limitations. He who would avoid such security must show payment, otherwise the mortgagee will not be precluded from entering upon and holding possession of the mortgaged premises. The mortgagor has not been allowed to defeat such right by showing merely that the personal security, to which the mortgage security is collateral, has become barred. (Thayer v. Mann, 19 Pick. 535.) But he has been allowed to allege payment, and for proof to rely upon the lapse of time, when it amounted to twenty years from the accruing of the indebtedment. Such a lapse of time has been deemed to be sufficient for the purpose, in the absence of any countervailing considerations. This is admitted as a presumption of law, which may be removed by circumstances tending to produce a contrary presumption.' The view thus stated is met by our statute, which embraces a mortgage security within its terms. Here payment may be pleaded, and so may the statute itself without reference to the fact of payment.

“Our conclusion, therefore, upon the first question presented is, that where an action upon a promissory note, secured by a mortgage of the same date upon real property is barred by the statute, the mortgagee has no remedy upon the mortgage; that though distinct remedies may be pursued by him, the limitation prescribed is the same to both.” (Ib. 489.)

The principle thus established is, that there are two distinct contracts, and two distinct causes of action; that the creditor has stipulated for two remedies, one on the note, and the other on the mortgage — that is to say, that there is one cause of action on the note against the maker, and another on the mortgage against the mortgagor, and these may be against different parties, or, if originally against the same party, they may subsequently become separated, and attach to different parties. This principle was affirmed in Low v. Allen, 26 Cal. 142, and Lent v. Shear, 26 Cal. 362. In Low v. Allen we held that the cause of action on the mortgage became barred as to two of the defendants, while that on the note secured continued against one defendant in consequence of his absence from the State during a portion of the time. We said: “The mortgage contract of Thorp and Ramsdell is distinct from the note it was given to secure, and is manifestly one of the ‘written contracts’ on which the statute provides that no action shall be brought, except within four years after the cause of action accrued. Now a cause of action accrued against Thorp and Ramsdell on their mortgage contract, as collateral to Allen’s several promises, as soon as those promises matured. Thorp and Ramsdell were both in the State at the time, and for aught that appears to the contrary, they have been here ever since.” (26 Cal. 145.) Similar views were expressed in Lent v. Shear, 26 Cal. 369. Now, in this case, on the principle thus established, there was a cause of action against Rains on his personal liability upon the notes to which

Opinion of the Court — Sawyer, C. J.

Mrs. Rains was personally no party, and another against Mrs. Rains on the mortgage, by which she bound her lands, and through them herself to the extent of the lands, for the payment of the debts evidenced by the notes. Rains had no interest in the lands, and was only a party to the mortgage for the purpose of manifesting his assent to its execution, in accordance with the requirements of the statute. He was, therefore, substantially no party to that cause of action affecting the lands, and the two causes of action were in reality originally against different parties. The cause of action against the mortgagor, on the mortgage in such case, might be prosecuted to judgment, without making the maker of the notes a party. The cause of action against Rains is barred by failure to present the notes to the administrator. But it is only barred as to him. The debt is not paid, satisfied, discharged, or in any way extinguished, and the cause of action against the lands, and through the lands on mortgage against Mrs. Carrillo, remains according to the principles of the cases cited. The cause of action against her is not upon Rains' contract, but upon her own, subjecting her lands to the lien of plaintiff's demand. Although she does not covenant personally to pay the debt, she does, in legal effect, covenant that the land mortgaged shall pay it, so far as it goes. This is her contract, not Rains, and it is as effectual to bind the land as a covenant on her part, absolute in form to pay the debt herself, would be if she was competent to make such a covenant. And we have seen that an absolute covenant on her part to pay a debt would not be discharged or extinguished, or barred, simply because an action on a promise, on the part of Rains to pay the same debt, is barred as to him.

There is an obligation on the part of both to pay — one to pay the whole, the other to pay to the extent of the land bound. Rains' obligation is barred, the obligation of the land of Mrs. Carrillo is not.

If it be conceded that a mortgage is a claim within the meaning of the statute, which must be presented to the administrator, the property mortgaged in this case did not belong to the estate of Rains, and the mortgage was not his. Presenting the mortgage, as such, to the administrator would, therefore, be of no avail. It would only be necessary to present the mortgage to the administrator of Mrs. Carrillo, as a claim against her estate in the event of her death, in order to prevent a bar in favor of her estate.

A remark of the Chief Justice, in Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 32, that a "presentation and allowance were necessary to secure the payment of the debt out of the general estate, if that were desired, and, perhaps, also to prevent the debt from being barred by the statute, and thus uphold the mortgage," and passages containing similar suggestions from Willis v. Farley, 24 Cal. 500, are cited as authority for the position taken by the respondents. These are but suggestions, and are made with reference to the cases then before the Court, where the maker of the note and the mortgagor were the same person. That is to say, both causes of action were against the estate. It may be that where the personal liability is against the estate, and the mortgaged property belongs to the estate, so that, in any event, the debt would have to be satisfied out of the estate, it would be necessary to present the claim to prevent a bar, and keep the remedy alive as to the debt, in order to uphold the remedy on the mortgage. But the principle can have no application to the case now in hand, where there is a contract of another party still alive — where the land is under a contract, not barred, to satisfy the demand.

In Christy v. Dana, ante, 174, where a similar question arose in an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by E. O. Dana, deceased, after the mortgaged property had been conveyed to other parties, it was objected that the claim had not been presented to the administrator, and we said: "Inasmuch as no relief is demanded against the estate, and the intestate, at the time of his death, had no interest in the land, there was no need for the plaintiff to present his claim to the administratrix for allowance."

It is unnecessary now to determine whether Mrs. Carrillo, under section one hundred and thirty of the Probate Act, has a contingent claim against the estate of deceased, arising out of the mortgage upon her property as security for her husband's debt, and the liability to a sale thereunder, which may yet be presented within ten months after the sale, when the claim will become absolute. If so, it is nothing more than would accrue where two parties execute a joint note, one being in fact surety for the other, and the principal dies and the surety is compelled to pay it, which he would be undoubtedly liable to do at any time within four years after maturity, notwithstanding the claim might become barred as against the estate, by neglect of the holder to present it in time. He has bound himself to pay it, and he cannot escape the obligation. By paying the money, or any portion of it, he might, from the time of the payment, acquire an absolute claim against the estate for the amount so paid. His claim, however, would not be the original notes, which were barred as to the estate, but for moneys paid on account of the deceased, contingent before, absolute after payment. (Chipman v. Morrill, 20 Cal. 133.) But whether Mrs. Carrillo has, or has not, such a contingent claim, that may hereafter become an absolute charge against the estate, cannot affect the question. She has undertaken absolutely, by her own independent, though collateral contract, that her land shall stand charged for the payment of the debt; and, as we have before seen, if there was danger that the holders of the note would fail to pursue the principal and make the money out of her estate, the remedy of the surety was to take up the notes and present them herself. (Dane v. Cordnan, and Whiting v. Clarke, supra.)

It is unnecessary to consider some possible hypotheses, suggested in the brief of one of appellants' counsel, for it is clearly apparent from the record upon what view the Court acted in rendering judgment. Had the first conclusions of law adopted by the Court been allowed to stand, the judgment, and all presumptions of law, would have been the other way. Both conclusions are drawn from the same facts.

We think the first conclusions of law adopted by the Court correct, and the last erroneous. It is, therefore, unnecessary to determine whether it was proper for the Court to change its conclusions of law, and enter a different judgment from that at first ordered, at the time and in the manner pursued in this instance. As bearing upon the question, however, we will refer to the cases of Carpentier v. Gardiner, 29 Cal. 163, and Calderwood v. Peyser, 31 Cal. 337, in which we had occasion to consider cognate questions.

Judgment reversed, and the District Court directed to enter judgment for plaintiffs upon the findings, directing a sale of the premises, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose, and payment out of the proceeds of the respective claims properly chargeable thereon, under the views expressed in this opinion, according to their respective priorities; and it appearing that the appellant has included in his transcript a large amount of irrelevant matter, it is ordered and adjudged that he recover the costs of the appeal, less one half of the expense of procuring and printing the transcript.

Mr. Justice RHODES dissented.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT, being disqualified, took no part in the decision.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

A rehearing was granted in this case for certain purposes indicated in the opinion rendered on the petition for rehearing. No brief has been filed by respondent on the rehearing, except on the part of certain infants, by Benjamin Hayes, their guardian ad litem. In this brief no attempt is made to show that the infants have rights which ought to be saved by decree; but objection is made to the manner in which the appeal is taken. The affidavit of Glassell is sufficient to show service of the notice of appeal upon Benjamin Hayes, and it was not necessary that he should be named as guardian ad litem. The record shows that he had appeared and represented the infants in that capacity. There being no provision in the mortgage for that purpose, the plaintiff is not entitled to counsel fees. The agreement to pay the taxes upon the mortgage was part of the consideration for the money obtained upon the mortgage, and is binding upon Mrs. Carrillo, and the plaintiff is entitled to retain that amount from the proceeds of the sale.

The judgment below is reversed, and the District Court directed to enter judgment for plaintiffs upon the findings, directing a sale of the premises, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the payment of the respective claims properly chargeable thereon, under the views expressed by this Court, according to their respective priorities; and it appearing that a large amount of irrelevant matter has been inserted in the transcript, it is ordered that the appellant recover but one half the costs and expense of printing the transcript.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT and Mr. Justice WALLACE did not sit in this case.

REPORTS OF CASES
DETERMINED IN
THE SUPREME COURT
JANUARY TERM, 1872.

[No. 2,216.]

THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO v.
CERTAIN REAL ESTATE.

JUDGMENT UNOPPOSED NOT NECESSARILY A CONSENT JUDGMENT.—A motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that the judgment appealed from was entered by consent, cannot be sustained where the record, though it shows that no opposition was made, fails to show that appellant or his attorney was present in Court at its entry.

PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF RIGHT OF APPEAL.—Doubtful claims affecting the right of appeal should be liberally construed in favor of the right.

"SECOND STREET CUT" IN SAN FRANCISCO—DEFECTS IN PROCEEDINGS CURED.—The amendatory Act of February 1st, 1870, ratifying and confirming all the orders and resolutions of the Board of Supervisors in reference to the "Second Street Cut" in San Francisco, and the proceedings of the Superintendent of Streets, and the contract, and all the acts and doings of the contractor under it (Stats. 1869-70, p. 41), cured an omission of the Supervisors to publish notice as required by the original Act authorizing the improvement. improvement of certain streets in San Francisco; held, that it was competent for the Legislature, by subsequent enactment, to cure any defects or omissions in the proceedings of the Board of Supervisors or Superintendent of Streets.

FINAL DISPOSITION OF OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSIONERS' REPORT ON "SECOND STREET CUT."—The Act of February 1st, 1870, in reference to the "Second Street Cut" in San Francisco (Stats. 1869-70, p. 41), in providing that the judgment of the County Court, either confirming or setting aside the report of the Commissioners, should be "final and conclusive," obviously contemplated that all objections to the report, founded upon the errors, misconduct, irregularities, or omissions of the Commissioners, should be heard and determined by the County Court, and that it should not thereafter be open to attack in a collateral action.

EFFECT OF "ACCEPTANCE" OF STREET IN SAN FRANCISCO.—The only obligation imposed upon the City and County of San Francisco, by section twenty-one of the street law of 1862 (Stats. 1862, p. 391), if there be any, is to keep open and improved that portion of the street constructed and "accepted" in accordance therewith; and there is no obligation on the part of the city and county to pay assessments upon property for benefits derived from the opening and improvement of other portions of the same street.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action brought in accordance with section seven of the amendatory Act of February 1st, 1870 (Stats. 1869-70, p. 41), in reference to the collection of assessments for the "Second Street Cut" in San Francisco. It was an action in rem to subject certain real estate on the southeasterly side of Market street, one hundred and seventy-five feet southwesterly from Second street, to an assessment of four hundred dollars, imposed upon it by the Commissioners appointed under the original "Second Street Cut" Act of March 30th, 1868 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 595). An answer was filed on behalf of the real estate involved, setting up the various defenses and the cross-complaint noticed in the opinion. After the filing of the answer the plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings, basing his motion upon the ground that there was no plea of payment, and that under the statute, which limits the defenses to be made in opposition to such a suit, no allowable issue had been tendered. The motion was granted, and, as appears from the minutes of the Court below, "no opposition being made thereto, it is ordered that plaintiff have and take judgment thereon for the relief demanded in the complaint."

Judgment being accordingly entered, defendant appealed.

Daingerfield & Olney, for Appellant.

The statute under which plaintiff attempts to force a lien is in conflict with Article I, section eleven, of the Constitution. There was, at the time of its passage, a general law in force providing for the change of grade of streets, and the Legislature had no power to suspend its operation for a particular locality of the city. (French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 544; Cooley on Com. Lim. 391, 392, and notes; Lewis v. Webb, 3 Greenl. 326; Wally's Heirs v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 554; Janes v. Reynolds, 2 Texas, 251.)

That part of the statute which limits the proof by the defendant, on the trial, to payment, is unconstitutional. Art. I, Sec. 8, and Art. III, Sec. 1, of Con.; Blackwell on Tax Titles, 80; Cooley on Con. Lim. 368; Abbott v. Lindenbower, 42 Mo. 162; Corbin v. Hill, 21 Iowa, 70; Watlan v. White, 19 Ind. 470; People v. Hastings, 29 Cal. 449.)

The action is not brought upon a judgment of the County Court, but upon an assessment which, by the statute, is merely made evidence of the liability of the land, not conclusive evidence, nor even prima facie evidence. There was, in fact, no judgment of the County Court, in the sense in which the word judgment is used in Courts of law or equity. The proceedings there were not judicial proceedings. There was nothing there in the nature of an action involving the validity of the assessment. It merely supervised the action of the Commissioners, and heard objections to their report. The so-called judgment of the County Court is not a binding judgment upon a Court of law where the validity of all the proceedings, prior to and including the assessments, are in dispute. (S. F. and A. W. Co. v. A. W. Co., 35 Cal. 644.) Here the objectors to the assessments were condemned before they were heard. Afterwards, they were allowed the poor privilege of coming into the County Court and showing that the sentence was too severe. But now, when they ask to be heard in full vindication of their rights, they are met by the plea that the judgment of the County Court, to the effect that the sentence was not too severe, precludes them from opening their mouths in their own defense. This is not justice, and we think it is not law.

There is nothing in the statute to prevent us from setting up a cause of action by way of cross-complaint. The statute, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed; and, as it does not forbid a cross-action, such an action will be allowed. Courts look with disfavor upon anything, statute or other, which precludes a party from asserting his rights. The cross-complaint sets up, in effect, a contract between the plaintiff and the property holders, by the terms of which, and the "acceptance" of Second street, the plaintiff became obligated thereafter to keep it in repair.

Joseph M. Nougues, for Respondent.

The statute regulating the mode of proceeding, and under which the plaintiff claims, is constitutional and valid. (People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 332; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 262; Oriental Bank v. Freese, 18 Maine 109; Fales v. Woodworth, 23 Maine, 533; Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 304.)

The facts stated in the cross-complaint do not show that defendant had any vested right of action against plaintiff for the amount of the assessment. The City and County of San Francisco, though designated by the statute as the plaintiff, has no pecuniary interest, and by the terms of the statute is expressly exempted from liability. Besides, the facts set forth by way of cross-complaint show that the acceptance of the street—if it ever was accepted—was subsequent to the passage of the statute under consideration, and prior to the judgment of the County Court, and that the "assessment" here was not for work done in front of the property of defendant, but for work done in front of other property; and it appears that the defendant was benefited, and is within the district, and liable to assessment.

The judgment of the County Court was final and conclusive upon all matters which were or might have been presented by defendant against the confirmation of the report of the Commissioners. (See Houghton's Appeal, ante, 42; Biddle v. Wilkins, 1 Pet. 686; Loring v. Mansfield, 17 Mass. 394; Le Guen v. Gouverneur, 1 John. Cases, 492; Mecham v. McKay, 37 Cal. 164; Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 228; Barnum v. Reynolds, 38 Cal. 646; Sullivan v. Triomfo M. Co., 39 Cal. 465.)

John W. Dwinelle, McAllister & Bergin, McCollough & Boyd, and Patterson, Irvine & Stow, under the designation of "amica curæ," also filed a "Brief for Respondent"—the real object of which, however, appears to have been to dismiss the appeal in this case, and thereby prevent a decision in advance of cases in which they were interested, and "upon a presentation which would not be satisfactory to them." They urged chiefly the point that the judgment was taken without opposition on mere reading of the motion and proof of service; that there was no point of law or fact argued or presented to the Court below; that there was no appearance of any real contest between the parties, and that the judgment was in effect taken by consent, and was, therefore, not appealable.

It is objected, in limine, that we ought not to entertain this appeal, for the reason that the judgment from which the appeal was taken was entered pro forma and by consent. If the record disclosed this fact, it would be our duty to dismiss the appeal, as we have repeatedly decided that we will not review judgments or orders entered by consent. (Stoddard v. Treadwell, 26 Cal. 282; Sleeper v. Kelly, 22 Cal. 456; Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 572; Brotherton v. Hart, 11 Cal. 405; Imley v. Beard, 6 Cal. 666.) The order in this case, directing a judgment to be entered for the plaintiff, after reciting that the plaintiff, upon due notice, moved for judgment, continues: "And no opposition being made thereto," and then proceeds to direct a judgment to be entered for the plaintiff on the pleadings. If it had appeared from the record that the defendant's attorney was present in Court when the motion was made and the order entered, it is certainly true that without straining the language employed in the order, it might well be held to mean that the defendant consented to the judgment. In that case the recital that he made no opposition to it might possibly, under certain circumstances, be held as equivalent to the statement that he consented to it. It is unnecessary, however, to express a positive opinion on this point, as the record does not show that the defendant's attorney was present in Court, and if he did not appear to the motion there can be no inference that he consented to the judgment. If, however, he had been present, it may be that he was only passive and silent, and in that sense made no opposition to the judgment, choosing to stand on his legal rights, and leaving the court to decide the question as it saw fit, without any suggestion from him. Doubtful clauses affecting the right of appeal should be liberally construed in favor of the right. I am therefore, of opinion that we ought to entertain this appeal.

One of the defenses set up in the answer is, that the Board of Supervisors omitted to publish a certain notice as required by the provisions of the Act of March 30th, 1868 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 595), and that the publication of this notice was a jurisdictional fact, without which the Board acquired no authority to let the contract and proceed with the work. But a conclusive answer to this defense is, that by section eleven of the amendatory Act of February 1st, 1870 (Stats. 1869-70, p. 41), it is provided that all the orders and resolutions of the Board of Supervisors, and the proceedings of the Superintendent of Streets, be, and they were thereby ratified and confirmed, and the contract and all the acts and doings of the contractor under it, were affirmed and declared to be valid. The whole proceeding was of statutory creation, and "it was competent for the Legislature to cure any defects or omissions in the proceedings of the Board, or of the Superintendent of Streets." This was done, and it is too late now to inquire whether the Board strictly pursued its original authority in its mode of initiating the work.

The other defenses set up in the answer seek to attack the proceedings of the Commissioners appointed to assess the damages and benefits, and to assail their report on the ground that the Commissioners did not afford to all the parties interested in the property to be affected by the improvement, an opportunity to be examined, and to call witnesses in support of their rights. The amendatory Act of February first provides that the report shall be returned into the County Court, of which fact notice was to be given by publication, after which a reasonable time is allowed by the Act within which all persons interested were permitted to file objections to the report and to call witnesses in support thereof. A sufficient opportunity, after due notice, was thus afforded to all persons to attack the report and the proceedings of the Commissioners for irregularity, or for any other just cause; and after hearing all the proofs and allegations of the parties, it was made the duty of the Court to set aside, modify, or confirm the report. In case the report was set aside and a new report was ordered to be made, a like opportunity was afforded for filing objections thereto and calling witnesses in support of them. After hearing the objections to the second report, it was made the duty of the Court to render a judgment, either confirming or setting aside the report; and the statute declares that this judgment "shall be final and conclusive." In the case of Houghton's appeal from this judgment, decided at the last term, we held the judgment to be final and conclusive in such a sense that no appeal would lie therefrom. It was obviously the intention of the Legislature that all objections to the report, founded upon the errors, misconduct, irregularities, or omissions of the Commissioners, should be heard and determined by the County Court, and should not thereafter be open to attack in a collateral action. The parties in interest were allowed their day in Court, after due notice, with a sufficient opportunity to be heard in their defense, and the proceeding would be interminable, if the report could be collaterally attacked after a final judgment in the County Court. This is precisely what is attempted to be done by the defense in this action. To permit such a defense would be to disregard the manifest intention of the statute, and to nullify some of its provisions. The answer, in my opinion, presented no defense to the action.

But the defendant also filed a cross-complaint, setting up that Second street, from Market to Folsom, had been constructed under and in pursuance of the provisions of section twenty-one of the Act of April 25th, 1862, amending the Consolidation Act (Stats. 1862, p. 401), and that having been so constructed at the expense of the adjoining property, it was incumbent on the city and county to defray the cost of all subsequent improvement of the street; that, by virtue of said section twenty-one, the owners of the property, after the street was constructed at their expense, stood in the relation of contracting parties toward the city and county, and acquired a vested right of action against the latter to compel the payment of whatever costs or expenses might thereafter be incurred for improving the street or keeping it in repair. Waiving the question whether the defendant was entitled to file a cross-complaint in this action, or should be limited to the defense specified in the amendatory Act of February 1st, 1870, I think the cross-complaint contains no cause of action against the plaintiff. The defendant in this action is a lot of land situated on the southerly side of Market street, west of Second street, and the averment of the cross-complaint is, that Second street, from Market to Folsom, was constructed under and in accordance with section twenty-one of the Act of April 25th, 1862, to the satisfaction of the committee of the Board of Supervisors and of the Superintendent of Streets, and that the Board of Supervisors has accepted that portion of the street lying between Folsom and Howard streets, and that the defendant in this action was assessed for and contributed toward the expense of constructing Second street from Market to Folsom.

On these facts it is claimed that the city and county, and not the defendants, are liable for the expense of reducing the grade of Second street, between Folsom and Harrison or Bryant streets. If section twenty-one, already referred to, can be construed as creating a contract between the city and county on the one side and the property owners on the other, that when a street has been constructed in accordance with section twenty-one, at the expense of the property, the city and county would thereafter keep it open and improve it at its own expense (a point not necessary to be now decided), it is nevertheless clear that the only obligation imposed on the city and county by section twenty-one is to keep open and improve that portion of the street which had been so constructed, and that there is no obligation upon the city and county to pay assessments upon the property for benefits derived from opening or improving other portions of the same street. There can be no reasonable interpretation of section twenty-one which would render it incumbent on the city and county to do more than keep open and improve that portion of a street which had been constructed in accordance with that section. The work for which this property has been assessed was done upon a portion of Second street, not lying between Market and Folsom, but entirely outside those limits. I imagine it never entered the mind of the Legislature, when it passed section twenty-one, that it was fastening upon the city and county a liability for all assessments for benefits accruing to a block of land situated on a street constructed under that section, from work done or an improvement made on a remote portion of the same street.

The assessment in this case is not for keeping open or improving Second street, from Market to Folsom, in the sense of section twenty-one, but for benefits which the property is supposed to have derived from work done on Second street at a different point; and it is manifest that the city and county never undertook to pay or assume this liability, either expressly or by implication. The cross-complaint, therefore, contains no valid cause of action, and judgment was properly rendered for the plaintiff on the pleadings.

Neither Mr. Chief Justice WALLACE, nor Mr. Justice SPRAGUE, participated in the foregoing decision.

MARGARET SCOLES v. THE UNIVERSAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

LIFE INSURANCE—WHAT IS A LOCAL DISEASE.—A tubercular affection of the lungs, or tubercles upon the lungs, or tubercles on the brain, or consumption, either of them constitute a local disease, as matter of law, within the meaning of the word "local" when used by a life insurance company to an applicant for insurance, by asking him if he has a local disease.

USUAL MEDICAL ATTENDANT.—The question, who was the usual medical attendant upon an applicant for life insurance, is a question of fact for the jury, in an action on a life insurance policy.

NEW TRIAL.—The Court will not grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict was not warranted by the evidence, if there was a substantial conflict in the evidence.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action to recover five thousand dollars, insurance upon the life of Paul Scoles, the plaintiff's deceased husband. It was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, as prayed by her. A motion for a new trial having been denied, defendant appealed from the judgment and order.

In its answer, the defendant, after setting out the statements furnished by Paul Scoles at the time of his application, alleged that they were false and untrue, for the reason that he was at the time "in bad and feeble health, and suffering from consumption and dysentery, and an abscess and tubercles upon the right lung and from tubercles upon the brain; his health was thereby greatly impaired," and that the statements as to the age of his parents and relatives, at the time of their death, was false and untrue.

The instructions asked by the plaintiff, and given to the jury, were as follows:

"A. Who was the usual medical attendant of the party applying for insurance, is a question of fact for the jury to decide.

Statement of Facts.

"B. The examination of the party, whose life is insured, by the examining physician of the company, and his favorable report as to the then physical condition and health of Paul Scoles, are circumstances entitled to the serious consideration of the jury, but are not conclusive or binding on the defendant.

"C. If the insurer defend on the ground that the insured misrepresented the fact in respect to his having had severe illness, local injury, or personal injuries, and was not in good health at the time of effecting the insurance, the burden of proof is on them.

"D. In cases where the testimony upon any particular issue leaves it doubtful whether the affirmative of that issue is sustained, it is a safe and proper course for the jury to find against the party who has the burden of proof upon that issue.

"E. The party upon whom is cast the affirmative of an issue, must make out the existence of the issuable fact by preponderating evidence."

The instructions asked by defendant, and refused, were as follows:

"O. If you shall find, from the evidence, that Paul Scoles represented to the defendant that he had had no local diseases or serious illness, of any kind, you are instructed that such representation was a warranty to the defendant of that fact; and if you shall further find that such representation was false in fact, you are instructed that there was such a misrepresentation as to avoid the policy sued upon, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover.

"P. You are also instructed, that in case you shall find, from the evidence, that Dr. Verhave had not been called upon by Paul Scoles, to attend to him in his professional capacity, for two years prior to August 5th, 1867, and that Dr. Holbrook had, during the year prior to that date, been consulted professionally by him, and had prescribed remedies for him, and that within said period of two years Paul Scoles had been sick, and had not called upon Dr. Verhave to attend him, then Dr. Verhave was not his usual medical attendant.

"Q. If you shall find, from the evidence, that Paul Scoles represented to the defendant that he had never had any 'local disease,' of any kind, and shall find that the contract of insurance, introduced in evidence, was entered into by the defendant upon the faith that such representation was true, and shall also find that Paul Scoles had, within a year prior to the time of making such representation, had a local disease, you are instructed that the contract of insurance sued upon never took effect, and that the policy of insurance offered in evidence never had any existence as a contract, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover thereon.

"R. You are also instructed that whether Paul Scoles knew that he had had such local disease is immaterial, in arriving at your determination in this matter.

"S. You are also instructed that a tubercular affection of the lungs, or tubercles upon the lungs, or tubercles upon the brain, or consumption, would either of them constitute a 'local disease,' within the meaning of that term, as used in the application of Paul Scoles."

The Court below, in its charge, instructed the jury, among other things, as follows:

"If you find that prior to making the application for the policy sued on, Paul Scoles had had any serious illness, serious local disease, or serious personal injury, the plaintiff cannot recover, whether Paul Scoles knew or remembered that he had had such illness, local disease, or personal injury, or not.

Argument for Appellant.

"On behalf of the defendant I give you this instruction: You are instructed that the plaintiff in this action is bound by all the statements and representations made to the defendant by Paul Scoles, and that any misrepresentation on his part is available to the defendant in this action, as much as if the misrepresentation had been made by the plaintiff."

Jarboe, Harrison & Robinson, for Appellant.

The policy was not binding upon defendant, for the reason that the insured made false statements to the effect that he had no local disease or serious illness; that Dr. Verhave was his usual medical attendant, and that he had omitted no material fact bearing upon his physical condition in the statements in his application. There was a warranty on his part that the statements made by him to defendant were true, and the breach of that warranty vitiated the policy. (Clark v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 2 W. & M. 487; Forbush v. Western Mass. Ins. Co., 4 Gray, 340; De Hahn v. Hartley, 1 T. R. 343; 35 Conn. 230; 98 Mass. 389; 12 Cush. 425; 2 Denio, 82; 6 Cush. 42; 3 Gray, 580; 2 Allen, 572.) And again, even though the statements are to be regarded as "representations" rather than "warranties," still their falseness vitiates the policy. (Kimball v. Aetna Ins. Co., 9 Allen, 542; Davenport v. N. E. M. F. Ins. Co., 6 Cush. 340; 2 Allen, 574; 4 Allen, 225; 10 Cush. 449; 20 N. Y. 37; 98 Mass. 403; 24 Eng. L. & E. 1.)

The Court below erred in giving instruction "A." It is true that, which of several physicians is to be called the "usual medical attendant" of a party, is a question of fact for the jury; but this is a very different question from determining what elements serve to make up the "usual medical attendant" of the party. When the question to be determined is, as it was here, whether any one of the physicians had the elements necessary to make up the "usual medical attendant," the Court must pass upon it. (Everett

v. Desborough, 5 Bing. 503; Morrison v. Musygratt, 4 Bing. 60; Maynard v. Rhodes, 1 C. & P. 360; Huckman v. Fernie, 3 M. & W. 505; Cazanove v. British Assurance Co., 6 C. B., N. S. 437.)

McAllisters & Bergin and John J. McElhinney, for Respondent.

The points really at issue are questions of fact, which were passed upon by the jury; and the verdict will not be disturbed on the ground that it was not justified by the evidence, as there was evidence upon each point.

In reference to what was a local disease, the Court charged, in effect, that if the jury found Scoles had "any affection of the lungs," whether tuberculous or otherwise, or "any affection of the brain," or "consumption," or any other "local disease," the plaintiff could not recover.

There was no error in submitting to the jury the question as to who was the usual medical attendant. It is true that defendant might have requested the Court to have gone further and instructed the jury as to the elements that constituted the "usual medical attendant;" but failing to do this, they can take no exception to the want of such an instruction. A failure to give the jury an instruction not asked for has repeatedly been held not to be error.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The verdict will not be disturbed on the ground that it is contrary to the evidence, upon the issue as to whether any false statements were made by Paul Scoles, the person whose life was insured, for there is a manifest conflict in the evidence upon the points which have been discussed by counsel. It may be doubted whether any misrepresentations were in issue, except such as were specified in the answer, but we express no opinion on the point.

We see no error in the instructions given by the Court; and we are of the opinion that the refusal to give those requested by the defendant was not erroneous, except in respect to one instruction. Among the questions propounded to the insured was the following: "Have you had any serious illness, local disease, or personal injury; and, if so, of what nature, and how long since?" And the answer given was: "Not any." There was evidence tending to prove that the insured had consumption, or tubercles upon the lungs, and tubercles upon the brain. The defendant requested this instruction: "You are also instructed that a tubercular affection of the lungs, or tubercles upon the lungs, or tubercles upon the brain, or consumption, would either of them constitute a local disease, within the meaning of that term, as used in the application of Paul Scoles." We think such diseases as those mentioned in the proposed instruction would clearly come within the definition of a local disease; and that the jury should have been so instructed, as matter of law. It was not enough that the jury were instructed that, if Paul Scoles had had a serious local disease, then the plaintiff could not recover; but the defendant had a right to have them instructed that a particular disease, in respect to which there was evidence before them, came within the meaning of the term local disease, as used in the application of the insured.

Points decided.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

HAYWARD H. HOWE v. UNION INSURANCE COMPANY.

ATTACHMENT LIEN DISSOLVED BY BANKRUPTCY OF DEBTOR AFTER JUDGMENT.—Where Howe commenced an attachment suit against McCann, and garnished money of McCann's in the Union Insurance Company, and afterwards recovered judgment and issued execution to the Sheriff, who, however, did not receive the money or actually levy the execution, and before any further steps, and within four months of the issuance of the attachment, proceedings in bankruptcy were commenced against McCann, and an assignee of his estate appointed: held, that the proceedings in bankruptcy dissolved the lien under the garnishment, and that neither the judgment nor execution, without an actual levy or receipt by the Sheriff of the money, would create any other lien.

Statement of Facts.

JUDGMENT AND EXECUTION, WITHOUT LEVY, DO NOT CONVERT ATTACHMENT LIEN INTO "LIEN UNDER FINAL PROCESS."—In case of a garnishment in an attachment suit, the mere recovery of judgment and issuance of execution will not, without a receipt by the Sheriff of the property, or an actual levy of the execution, create any additional lien upon the fund garnished, nor convert the attachment lien into a "lien under final process," within the meaning of section twenty of the Bankrupt Law.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

It appears from the findings in this case, that on December 4th, 1869, plaintiff commenced a suit, to recover one thousand four hundred and sixty-five dollars, against Henry McCann, in the Sixth District Court, Sacramento County, and issued a writ of attachment to the Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, which was duly served, by way of garnishment, upon the Union Insurance Company. On December 18th, 1869, plaintiff recovered judgment in that action, and caused a writ of execution to be issued to, and placed in the hands of, the Sheriff of San Francisco, who, on December twentieth, proceeded with it to the office of the Union Insurance Company for the purpose of collecting the money garnished. The Secretary of the company admitted that there was then, and had been when the garnishment was served, one thousand dollars belonging to McCann in the hands of the company; but he declined to apply the same to the satisfaction of the execution at that time, on the ground that the money was due on a policy of insurance, by the terms of which the company was not required to pay under sixty days. There was no levy, or attempted levy, of the execution.

On December 23d, 1869, a petition in involuntary bankruptcy was filed against McCann in the United States District Court, which, on January 4th, 1870, adjudged him a bankrupt; and soon afterwards, Henry C. Hyde, who was appointed assignee of his estate, demanded of the insurance company the one thousand dollars, so in its hands, as a portion of the bankrupt effects. The company formally declined to pay, but without making any claim upon the fund except as a mere stakeholder, for whoever should be found entitled to it.

Under these circumstances, and upon proper intermediate proceedings, this action was commenced by the plaintiff as garnishor against the defendant as garnishee. Defendant answered, disclaiming any interest in the fund, but setting up the facts, and praying that Hyde, an assignee in bankruptcy, might be made a party, and judgment rendered ordering to which of the parties, plaintiff or Hyde, the money should be paid. Mr. Hyde also answered, by way of intervention, and claimed the money as against the plaintiff, by virtue of the bankrupt proceedings and his official character as assignee.

There was a judgment in the Court below in favor of Mr. Hyde, as assignee in bankruptcy; and, a new trial having been denied, plaintiff appealed from the judgment and order.

S. Solon Holl and Estee & McLauren, for Appellant.

The levy of the attachment created a lien on the funds in the hands of the defendant, to secure the payment of the plaintiff's debt, within the meaning of section twenty of the United States Bankrupt Law. (Peck v. Jennings, 7 How. 611; Kittridge v. Warren, 14 N. H. 509; Kittridge v. Emerson, 15 N. H. 227; Kilborn v. Lyman, 6 Met. 304.)

Argument for Respondents.

The lien was not dissolved by section fourteen of the Bankrupt Act. The proceedings in bankruptcy were not taken until five days after Howe obtained his judgment against McCann. After judgment attached, property is not held upon "mesne process," within the meaning of that term in said section fourteen. (In the Matter of Cook, 2 Story, 379; Franklin Bank v. Bachelder, 23 Me. 60; Practice Act, Secs. 120, 124, 127, 130, 132, and 217.)

Under our practice, an actual levy is not necessary when the property sought to be subjected to the execution is held on attachment. The attachment holds the property, and the execution comes as a power to sell or collect money. (Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 121; Wood v. Colvin, 5 Hill, 228; Cresson v. Stout, 17 Johns. 115; Van Winkle v. Udall, 1 Hill, 559.)

Sidney V. Smith & Son, for Respondents.

Plaintiff's attachment was made within four months next preceding the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings against McCann, and was therefore dissolved by operation of law upon the assignment to Hyde.

The nature of an attachment lien is not affected by the fact of a judgment obtained in the action. Even after judgment, the attachment continues to be what it was originally: "an attachment on mesne process." (Andrews v. Southwick, 13 Met. 535; Bump on Bankruptcy, 329; Pennington v. Lowenstein, 1 Bankrupt Register, 157; Corner v. Mallory, 31 Md. 478; 3 Bl. Com. 379; Bouvier's Law Dic. "Mesne," 31 Md. 38.)

Plaintiff had no other lien but that which depended on the attachment. The judgment gave him no lien, not being able, of its own force, to become a charge on personal property. The attempted levy of the execution was a failure, and did not affect, in any way, the moneys in the hands of the insurance company. (Dutertre v. Driard, 7 Cal. 549; Practice Act, Secs. 217 and 126.)

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

The rule that an actual levy is not necessary to subject attached property to execution, applies only to cases where personal property has been taken into actual possession by a Sheriff by virtue of an attachment. Here, however, the money was not in the hands of the Sheriff, but had been merely levied upon by way of garnishment; and in order for the Sheriff to get possession of it, a regular levy of the execution was necessary.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The plaintiff having commenced an action against one McCann, sued out an attachment therein, under which the defendant in this action was duly summoned as a garnishee. When thus summoned the defendant was indebted to McCann in the sum of one thousand dollars. Whilst the attachment and garnishment remained in force the plaintiff obtained a judgment against McCann for about the sum of one thousand four hundred dollars, on which judgment an execution was immediately issued and placed in the hands of the Sheriff, who, by virtue thereof, applied to the defendant in this action for the payment of the one thousand dollars previously attached; but this request was not complied with, and the money was not paid; nor did the Sheriff levy the execution upon the fund in the hands of the defendant, supposing, from what transpired at the time, that the money would be paid in a day or two without an actual levy of the execution. Before any further step had been taken, and within less than four months from the time when the attachment was issued and served, proceedings were commenced in due form in the District Court of the United States against McCann, to have him declared a bankrupt; and, subsequently, in due time, the intervenor, Hyde, was duly appointed assignee of the bankrupt's estate, and received an assignment thereof. By section fourteen of the Bankrupt Law of the United States it is provided that all attachments upon mesne process within four months before the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy shall be thereby dissolved, in case the defendant in the attachment be declared a bankrupt. Under this section it is clear that if the proceedings in bankruptcy had been commenced before the plaintiff obtained his judgment against McCann, the attachment would have been dissolved and the plaintiff would have lost his lien upon the fund in the hands of the insurance company. It is equally clear that if the plaintiff had obtained his judgment, issued his execution thereon, and caused the same to be actually levied upon the fund before the proceedings in bankruptcy were commenced, he would have acquired a lien upon the fund which would not have been divested by the proceedings in bankruptcy. In that case his lien would have accrued under final and not under mesne process, and would have been protected under section twenty of the Bankrupt Law. But inasmuch as the execution was not, in fact, levied, neither the judgment nor execution created any lien upon the fund other than that under which it had been previously held. If the insurance company had paid the money to the Sheriff at the time when it was summoned as garnishee under the attachment, as it had the right to do, and if the plaintiff had thereafter obtained his judgment against McCann, and issued his execution and placed it in the Sheriff's hands before the proceedings in bankruptcy were commenced, it would have been the duty of the Sheriff immediately to apply the money received under the attachment toward the satisfaction of the execution; and under section one hundred and thirty-two of the code the plaintiff would have acquired a lien under final process, within the meaning of section twenty of the Bankrupt Law. But when there is no money or property in the hands of the Sheriff under the attachment prior to the judgment, I do not perceive how the mere fact that a judgment was rendered and an execution issued, but not levied, can have the effect to convert the attachment lien upon a fund in the hands of a garnishee into a lien upon final process. It appears to me to be plain that in such a case the attachment lien remains, after the judgment and before the levy of the execution, precisely what it was before, to wit: an attachment under mesne process, and is therefore dissolved under section fourteen of the Bankrupt Law, by proceedings in bankruptcy commenced within four months after the attachment.

Judgment affirmed.

WALLACE, J., concurring specially:

I concur in the judgment and in the general view expressed by my associates. I am not satisfied, however, as maintained in the opinion of Mr. Justice CROCKETT, that the case would have been substantially different, even had the Sheriff actually received and held the money in the first instance, under the writ of attachment. It is suggested in the opinion that in such case the mere subsequent receipt of the writ of execution by the Sheriff would have, ipso facto, converted the attachment lien into one under final process, even though the officer had, in reality, taken no step whatever in pursuance of the writ of execution.

This is supposed to result because it would, in such case, be the duty of the Sheriff to apply the money in his hands to the satisfaction of the execution. Though such, however, be his duty in that respect, he may, nevertheless, neglect to perform it, and in that case, should he take no step whatever pursuant to the writ of execution, it might be argued, with some degree of plausibility at least, that the money in his hands would still be held only by virtue of the attachment lien, under which it had been before then held. The question will, in my opinion, deserve consideration, should it arise in some future case; and, as it is not involved in the present

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
YSIDORE PADILLIA.

IN A CRIMINAL CASE THE EVIDENCE MUST APPEAR IN A BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.—Where a motion for a new trial is granted, on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict, the only manner in which the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence can be presented to the Supreme Court is by a bill of exceptions, duly settled and certified by the Judge who tried the cause.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE RELATIVE TO DISTRICT COURT REPORTERS.—It was not intended by the Act concerning District Court Reporters (Stats. 1865-6, p. 232), that the report of the testimony, transcribed into longhand from the reporter's notes, should be a substitute for the bill of exceptions. Such report is only prima facie a correct statement of the evidence and proceedings therein contained, while a bill of exceptions imports absolute verity, and is not to be taken as merely prima facie.

DUTY OF ATTORNEYS AND COURT AS TO REPORT OF TESTIMONY.—Before incorporating the reporter's transcript of the testimony in a bill of exceptions it is the duty of attorneys to eliminate from it all matter not necessary or proper to illustrate the points to be presented on the appeal. The Judge of the Court should not permit the report to be used until it has been revised by him.

TRANSCRIPT TO SHOW AFFIDAVITS WERE USED.—Where, on an appeal from an order granting a new trial, there is no evidence to show that the affidavits contained in the transcript were used or referred to on the hearing of the motion for a new trial, they will not be considered by the Supreme Court.

INCORRECT INSTRUCTION TO BE CONSIDERED.—Alleged errors in the instructions given to the jury may be considered on appeal, in the absence of testimony, if the instructions are incorrect in every conceivable state of the evidence.

INSTRUCTION AS TO CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.—In order to convict on circumstantial evidence, the evidence should be such as to produce nearly the same degree of certainty as that which arises from direct testimony.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

EVIDENCE NECESSARY TO CONVICT.—The evidence in a criminal case must satisfy the jury, to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt—that is, it must entirely satisfy the jury—of the guilt of the defendant, before they can convict. If the jury are not entirely satisfied, they should acquit.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree. He moved for a new trial, the motion was denied, and he appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

D. S. Terry, for Appellant.

Attorney General Jo Hamilton, W. S. Montgomery, and J. H. Budd, for Respondents.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The motion for a new trial was made on the ground, among others, that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. That question cannot be considered on the record now before us. The record contains no bill of exceptions. The only manner in which that question can be presented to the appellate Court is by a bill of exceptions—or a statement, as it is sometimes called—duly settled and certified by the Judge who tried the cause. In this case, the transcript contains a longhand copy of the notes of the official reporter, certified by him to be correct; but there is no evidence, that the report was used or referred to on the hearing of the motion. The same observation will apply to the affidavits which are contained in the transcript. The Act concerning District Court Reporters (Stat. 1865-6, p. 232) provides that the reporter shall write out, in longhand, verify, and file the report of the testimony, etc.; and that the report shall be deemed prima facie a correct statement of the evidence and the proceedings therein contained.

Whatever may be the value of the report on the motion for a new trial, it is very apparent that it was not intended by the statute that it should be a substitute for a bill of exceptions. A bill of exceptions imports absolute verity, and is not to be taken merely as prima facie correct. And even if a bill of exceptions were prepared, it would be a gross abuse of the provisions of the statute to make the entire report by reference or otherwise, a part of the bill of exceptions. For, whatever may be the grounds of the motion, or whatever may be the alleged errors of the Court, it is almost impossible that the entire report will be necessary or proper to illustrate the grounds or points. Page after page of the report, where it contains the testimony of many witnesses, may be, and usually is, taken up with matters which throw no light on the questions which are the subjects of review by this court. There may be many protracted discussions between counsel and the court as to the form of questions which are ultimately withdrawn, or, if not withdrawn, were asked by the respondent and overruled by the Court. There may have been a series of questions, which were propounded in many different forms, because the witness did not understand the inquiry, or because the court required the questions to be so general as not to be subject to the objection of being leading. Many questions and answers are found to be utterly immaterial, or, if material, at the trial, were asked for the purpose of testing the recollection of the witness. In many instances the question is repeated, and the answer is again repeated; and perhaps the answer is repeated by counsel, and the witness is asked if that is his answer to the question. And, without going into further detail, it is sufficient to say that the reports are often filled with matters which should be eliminated before the reports are permitted to form parts of bills of exceptions.

It is well known that it is scarcely possible for the stenographic reporter, in the hurry of a trial, to present a report which is in all respects accurate. It often happens that a witness illustrates his testimony by reference to a diagram or some object in or about the Court-room, and his answers to questions, as taken down by the reporter, are here, there, this direction, along here, and the like; and the report is, in that respect, entirely meaningless, without an explanation of the diagram or other objects referred to by the witness. For these and other reasons, which we think must be obvious upon slight reflection, the judge should not permit the report to be used in any proceeding until it has been revised by him. And it might be added that counsel could readily agree upon the omission, from the bill of exceptions or statement, of the larger portion of the immaterial and useless matter of the report, and thus they might save the parties the expense of copying or printing immaterial matter, and relieve the court of the trouble and annoyance of its examination. We are fully aware of the great labor imposed upon some of the Judges of the District and County Courts, and do not desire to add further burdens; but we doubt not that counsel will, upon the request of the Judges, perform the labor necessary for the proper explanation and expurgation of the report. We do not wish to be understood as intimating that the report in this case is particularly obnoxious to the objections of the character mentioned, nor that the Court or counsel have been more than usually derelict or negligent, for it is the common practice to send up the entire report; and it should be added that the records from that Court are generally prepared with commendable brevity. We repeat that the report forms no part of a bill of exceptions in this case, and cannot be permitted to be used as a substitute for it. (People v. Thompson, 28 Cal. 218; People v. Martin, 32 Cal. 91; People v. Ferguson, 34 Cal.

309; People v. Trim, 37 Cal. 274; People v. Tetherow, 40 Cal. 286.)

For the reasons above given we cannot consider the other grounds of the motion for a new trial, nor any of the alleged errors which depend for their illustration on the report. The affidavits and copy of record annexed to the transcript are subject to the objections already mentioned. They form no part of a bill of exceptions, and they do not appear to have been read on the hearing of the motion.

Alleged errors in the instructions given to the jury may be considered, in the absence of the testimony, if the instructions are incorrect in every conceivable state of the evidence. It is apparent, from the body of the instructions, that the evidence was mainly of a circumstantial character, and the two instructions, which we shall notice, were evidently given in view of that kind of evidence.

The objection to the tenth instruction—in which the Court states to the jury that “circumstantial evidence should be such as to produce nearly the same degree of certainty as that which arises from direct testimony”—was fully disposed of in People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 201; and, indeed, the instruction seems to have been extracted from the opinion in that case.

The seventeenth instruction is as follows: “All that is necessary in order to justify the jury in finding the defendant guilty is, that they shall be satisfied, from the evidence, of the defendant’s guilt to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, although they may not be entirely satisfied from the evidence that the defendant, and no other or different person, committed the alleged offense; and if the jury are satisfied from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant committed the crime charged against him, they are not legally bound to acquit him because they may not be entirely satisfied that the defendant and no other or different person committed the alleged offense."

The first clause of the instruction is undoubtedly correct in stating that the jury must be satisfied from the evidence of the defendant's guilt, to a moral certainty, and beyond a reasonable doubt; but the next clause of the instruction — "although they may not be entirely satisfied that the defendant, and no other or different person, committed the alleged offense" — was intended as a material qualification of the first clause. The purpose was to tell the jury that they might be satisfied to a moral certainty, and beyond a reasonable doubt, but at the same time not entirely satisfied of the defendant's guilt.

This, in effect, assigns a lower grade to moral certainty beyond a reasonable doubt, than is given to it by the law, and permits the jury to convict without being entirely satisfied that the defendant is guilty of the offense charged. When the jury are satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, they are entirely satisfied. The truth of any fact which is to be proven by evidence cannot be established beyond the possibility of a doubt, and yet the jury may be entirely satisfied of its truth. Anything short of entire satisfaction on the part of the jury of the truth of the charge necessarily implies, in case of conviction, that in their opinion the charge is sustained by a mere preponderance of evidence. A mere preponderance of evidence is not sufficient for a conviction; and, on the other hand, it is not required that the inculpatory facts shall be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused. (People v. Murray, 41 Cal. 66.) The true medium is, that the evidence shall satisfy the jury to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt — that they shall be entirely satisfied — of the guilt of the accused. The instruction was calculated to mislead the jury.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

Points decided.

THE CITY OF SAN FRANCISCO v. P. H. CANAVAN, JOS. G. EASTLAND, CHARLES E. McLANE (BOARD OF CITY HALL COMMISSIONERS), ROBERT GEORGE (SECRETARY), JOHN MIDDLETON, SAMUEL P. MIDDLETON (COMPOSING THE AUCTION FIRM OF JOHN MIDDLETON & SON), AND THE BOARD OF CITY HALL COMMISSIONERS. ALSO, A. P. HOTALING AND JAMES MOFFITT v. THE SAME DEFENDANTS.

DEDICATION OF LAND TO PUBLIC USE MUST BE IRREVOCABLE.—It is one of the essential elements of a good dedication that it shall be irrevocable, and that the land shall be forever dedicated for the public use which is designated, provided the public see fit to use it for that purpose. A reservation of the right to revoke the dedication, defeats the dedication.

VALID AND COMPLETE DEDICATION.—To constitute a valid and complete dedication, there must be an intention by the owner, clearly indicated by his words or acts, to dedicate the land to public use, and an acceptance by the public of the dedication.

ACCEPTANCE OF DEDICATION.—An acceptance of a dedication is generally established by a use by the public of the land for the purpose to which it had been dedicated. Until accepted, the dedication, whether made by deed or otherwise, may be revoked by the owner of the land.

NATURE OF USE NECESSARY TO CONSTITUTE ACCEPTANCE.—The public use, necessary to constitute an acceptance of a dedication, must be of such duration that the public interest and private rights would be materially impaired if the dedication were revoked and the use by the public discontinued.

EVIDENCE OF DEDICATION.—Where land was used in San Francisco as a cemetery, and was so marked upon the Van Ness map, and where the Legislature subsequently authorized the removal of the dead bodies and the dedication of the land to such public use as the Board might deem proper, and the Board undertook to dedicate it as a park: held, that the map was not evidence tending to prove a dedication as a public park.

TITLE OF SAN FRANCISCO TO PUEBLO LANDS.—Neither the former pueblo nor the City and County of San Francisco, as its successor, ever held an indefeasible proprietary interest in the pueblo lands. Such lands are held in trust for certain municipal purposes.

POWER OF THE STATE OVER MUNICIPALITIES AS TO PUEBLO LANDS.—When California was erected into a State of the American Union, it succeeded to the power which the Government of Mexico had before exercised over its municipalities, in respect to the control and disposal of the pueblo lands, so soon as the title of the pueblo, or its successor, and the nature of the trust on which the lands were held, should be recognized by the proper tribunals of the United States.

PUEBLO LANDS IN SAN FRANCISCO.—The tenure by which the pueblo lands are held by San Francisco, is of a fiduciary nature, and cannot be alienated except in accordance with the trust.

POWER OF LEGISLATURE AS TO TRUST.—It is for the Legislature to decide how the trust, for which San Francisco holds the title to the pueblo lands, shall be performed.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS SUBORDINATE SUBDIVISIONS OF THE STATE GOVERNMENT.—Municipal corporations are but subordinate subdivisions of the State Government, which may be created, altered, or abolished, at the will of the Legislature, which may enlarge or restrict their powers, direct the mode and manner of their exercise, and define what acts they may or may not perform, subject, however, to the limitation that the Legislature cannot direct the performance of an act which will impair the obligations of a contract.

POWER OF LEGISLATURE OVER MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.—The Legislature has the constitutional power to direct a sale of pueblo lands owned by a municipal corporation, by Commissioners, and an application of the proceeds to the erection of public buildings.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

McAllisters & Bergin and W. C. Burnett, for Appellants.

1. The land in suit was dedicated as a public park to the use of the public. This is shown by the Acts of the Legislature of April 27th, 1860, of April 4th, 1864, of March 14th, 1868, and of March 4th, 1870; by the Order No. 447 of the City and County of San Francisco, and by the official acceptance on the part of the Board of Supervisors in appropriating the necessary moneys to improve and promote the usefulness of the park. (Wash. on Easements, 139, Sec. 21.) In Rowan's Executors, 8 B. Mon. 250, the Court say: "The dedication having been made * * * did not require a subsequent use to establish or prove it. (Godfrey v. City of Alton, 12 Ill. 35; State v. Wilkinson, 2 Verm. 485; Abbott v. Mills, 3 Verm. 527; Brown v. Manning, 6 Ohio, 298; Lo

Clercq v. Gallipolis, 7 Ohio, 218; Grant v. City of Davenport, 18 Iowa, 186; Warren v. Mayor of Lyons City, 22 Iowa, 356; Commonwealth v. Rush, 14 Penn. St. 189.)

The learned counsel of the respondents claim that there was no dedication, because the audience reserved to the Board of Supervisors the power to alter or change the dedication. But the answer is, that the city has never attempted to do so. Whenever the city shall attempt to do so, then it will be time to consider the question of her power. But whatever may have been the infirmities of the dedication, if any, which we do not admit, the repeated Acts of the Legislature cured them all. (Friedman v. Macy, 17 Cal. 230; Seabury v. Arthur, 28 Cal. 150; People v. Law, 34 Barb. 571; McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 26, 27.)

A public park or square is an easement in which the inhabitants of the city have a vested right of which the Legislature cannot deprive them, except in exercise of the right of eminent domain. (New Orleans v. The United States, 10 Pet. 660; Van Ness v. The Mayor of Washington, 4 Pet. 232; Commonwealth v. Rush, 14 Penn. St. 188; Alves' Executors v. Henderson, 16 B. Monr. 170; Common Council of Indianapolis v. Croas, 7 Ind. 12; Trustees of Augusta v. Perkins, 8 B. Monr. 441; Lackland v. North M. R. R., 31 Mo. 187; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall., U. S., 504.)

2. The land attempted to be sold is the corporate property of the city, which the Legislature cannot aliene without the consent of the city.

In support of the first branch of this proposition we have the direct admission of the Legislature in the very Act under which respondent profess to act — "they [the Commissioners] shall take possession of all that certain tract of land belonging to said city and county, and known as Yerba Buena Park" (Stats. 1869-70, p. 728, Sec. 2), and upon sale of it they are to make deeds in the name of the City and County of San Francisco, which shall be evidence of title

It must be admitted that after the cession of the country, and prior to the admission of the State into the Union, the title to these lands was either in the city or in the United States. During this period there could be no title in the State, as the State was not then in existence, and during the same period it is evident this alleged plenary power of the Governor and Departmental Assembly did not exist, as they were not in existence to exercise it, and the United States could not. It was a political power foreign to our system, which the cession of the country to the United States displaced. (Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. 225; Vattel's Law of Nations, Book I, Chap. 19, Secs. 210, 244, 245, and Book 2, Chap. 7, Sec. 80.) It is clear, then, that during this period no Departmental Assembly, no Governor, could arbitrarily or otherwise dispose of public land; they were not in existence; they were unknown to the law. (Mumford v. Wardell, 6 Wal. U. S., 435; Merryman v. Bourne, 9 id. 601; Fremont v. United States, 17 How. 563; People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 378; Merle v. Mathews, 26 Cal. 477.)

Now the State of California never owned the pueblo lands; did not, in fact, own a foot of land within her borders, save what she succeeded to in virtue of her right of sovereignty, or subsequently to her admission acquired by grant from Congress. She was admitted into the Union "upon the express condition that the people of said State, through their Legislature, or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits, and shall pass no law and do no act whereby the title of the United States to, and right to dispose of the same, shall be impaired or questioned." (Brightly Dig. 105; Ward v. Mulford, 32 Cal. 372.)

Argument for Respondents.

The Legislature has the power to repeal the charters of municipal corporations, but as long as they are allowed to coexist as a part of the State Government they are not liable to be stripped of their property or funds. The acknowledged principle of constitutional law that forbids the State to tax the property or securities of the Federal Government or the salaries of its officers, and that vice versa precludes the United States from taxing State agencies, etc., applies with full force, and demonstrates the inadmissibility of any such power in the Legislature. (McCullough v. The State of Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316; Weston v. The City of Charleston, 2 Pet. 467; The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall., U. S., 113; The Banks v. The Mayor, 7 Wall., U. S., 24; The Banks v. Supervisors, 7 Wall., U. S., 28; Dobbin v. Commissioners Erie Co., 16 Pet. 435; Cooley Const. Limitations, 482; The State v. Haben, 22 Wis. 665.)

Municipal corporations are like any other citizen, within the constitutional guaranty that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." (People v. Haws, 37 Barb. 445.)

J. C. McCeney, J. P. Hoge, I. M. Wilson, and J. B. Felton, for Respondents.

Mexican pueblos did not have the absolute ownership of property, with full right of disposition. They held the pueblo lands merely in trust for municipal purposes. These purposes were to dispose of them by donation or sale to individuals, or to apply them to public uses, as directed by the Departmental Assembly, or other superior authority. The pueblo authorities could only alienate the lands by a power previously conferred on them, which the Sovereign could authorize or forbid. In the meantime, the Governor or other superior authority could dispose of the lots to individuals.

Argument for Respondents.

[Counsel here cited Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 568, and the other cases which are cited on this point in the opinion in this case.—REPORTER.]

The City of San Francisco, and the city and county, became successors of the pueblo, and took and held the lands, not as proprietors, but merely in trust for municipal purposes, in the same manner that the former pueblo held them. For this reason, sales on judgments and executions against the city were not good. (See cases above, particularly Townsend v. Greeley, 5 Wall. U. S. R. 337.) The decree of the Circuit Court of the United States (Judge FIELD presiding) recognizes the same view. The Acts of Congress cited in the complaint affirm the same principle. Congress could not change the character of these trusts. (Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 575.) The power of the Legislature over these lands is complete and paramount. (Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 233; cases cited supra, and also Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. 660; East Hartford v. Hartford Bridge Co., 10 How. 533, et seq.; State of Maryland v. Balt. and O. R. R., 3 id. 550.) The Van Ness Ordinance, having been repealed before confirmation, by the Act of the Legislature, the vast amount of property described in it depends for validity solely on the power of the Legislature. (Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 624; City v. Beideman, 17 id. 461, 462. See other cases cited above.) The Fund Commissioners act under the Acts of the Legislature, and independently of the municipal authorities. They have sold hundreds of lots, and these titles have always been held good. (Babcock v. Middleton, 20 Cal. 655; Thornton v. Hooper, 14 id. 9; Davis v. Middleton, id. 540.)

As to the general powers of the Legislature over the property and affairs of municipal corporations, see, in addition to the above cases: People v. Board of Supervisors San Francisco, 11 Cal. 211; People v. San Francisco, 36 id. 595;

Argument for Respondents.

Morris*, 18 Wend. 237; The Act of Congress of March 8th, 1866 (14 Stats. at Large, 4), which is referred to in the complaint, recognizes the power and control of the Legislature.

2. The triangular block in question never was dedicated to the public as a park. The complaint of the city and county does not allege any dedication of this land, but only that the city and county "has kept and reserved, and dedicated the same to the public use, forever, as a public park or plaza, at the future will and pleasure of said plaintiff." This would make a mere reservation, not a dedication, and in the future the lands could be devoted to other purposes. (Pitcher v. New York and Erie Railroad Company, 5 Sand. S. C. R. 608; Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 Cal. 24; Grant v. City of Davenport, 18 Iowa, 186.) This amounts, at most, to a mere license; acts of dedication must be clear, conclusive, and free from doubt or ambiguity. (Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 649, and cases cited.) The ordinance introduced as proof of dedication is, if anything, stronger in negation of a dedication, for it expressly provides "that nothing contained in this order shall prevent the said city and county from devoting said land, at any time, to any public purposes, either State or municipal." It is of the essence of a dedication that it be irrevocable. (Irwin v. Dixon et al. 9 How. U. S. R. 30, and cases cited; Washburne on Easements, 139; State v. Trask, 6 Vermt. 355; N. O. v. U. S., 10 Pet. 622; Commonwealth v. Alburger, 1 Whart. 469; Huber v. Gazley, 18 Ohio, 18; Missouri Inst. v. Horr, 27 Mo. 211.)

The complaint of Hotaling et al. relies on what is called the Van Ness Ordinance Map, and the ordinances relating to the same, as effecting a dedication. This block lies inside, or to the eastward of Larkin street, whilst the Van Ness Ordinance Map applies entirely to lands west of Larkin and southwest of Johnson streets. When the map was introduced, it showed no plaza, or land designated as such, but merely a cross indicating, doubtless, a cemetery, as it had for years previously been used as such. The city could dedicate only by ordinance; its powers are to be exercised in the mode prescribed by the charter; the mode is the measure of the power; the city could make no implied contract; nor be bound by any act treating the land as dedicated. (Grogan v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 590; McCracken v. same, 16 id. 616; Pimenthal v. same, 21 id. 363; Satterlee v. same, 23 id. 318; Herzo v. same, 33 id. 140; Zottman v. same, 20 id. 96; Murphy v. Napa Co. 20 id. 508; French v. Teschemacher, 24 id. 550.)

An acceptance by the public is necessary to constitute a dedication. Had the ordinance introduced to show dedication been clearly and unreservedly such, still its acceptance by the public was necessary to make it effectual. It would have been "but an offer to dedicate, by which the city could lose nothing, and the public could acquire nothing, until the offer should have been accepted. The doctrine upon this point is so well settled as to leave neither encouragement nor chance for discussion." (San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 589, citing Washburne on Easements, 132, and cases there cited; Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 647; Child v. Chapel, 9 N. Y. R. 257.)

Ordinarily there is no other mode of proving acceptance than by a use by the public sufficiently long to evince an acceptance. (Washburne on Easements, 139, 140.) "This use ought to be such length of time that the public accommodation and private rights will be affected materially by an interruption of the enjoyment." (Cincinnati v. White, 6 Peters, 431-439; 2 Smith's Lead. Cases, 182, and cases cited.) Here it was clearly shown that this block of land never had been used as a public park, and that its condition rendered such use impossible. It had been a cemetery for many years. The dead bodies had, to some extent, been removed, but many still remained when the Commissioners took possession. They, in grading and preparing the block for sale, removed several hundred dead bodies. Only after the Commissioners removed these remains, and graded the block, was it in a condition for any other use than a cemetery.

Where, by laying out a town and selling lots on the faith of streets, squares, and parks laid out, purchasers can claim a dedication, it is on the doctrine of estoppel — an estoppel in pais. (See Washburne on Easements, 144, et seq.; 2 Smith's Lead. Cases, 182; State v. Trask, 6 Vermont, 365; State v. Cullen, id. 530; Rowan's Ex. v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. 232-237; Noyes v. Ward, 19 Conn. R. 251-265.) The city here, in setting up this estoppel against herself, occupies a curious position. As was said in a similar case: "It is a new doctrine that a party can, without authority of law, create an estoppel for himself, and be permitted to say he is estopped by his own act. It is for others to interpose the objection of an estoppel, and not him who created it." (Rector v. Hart, 8 Mo. R. 457, et seq.) The use of a park or public square is never an appurtenant to property. It is not necessary to the use of the property adjacent. The property holder is only affected like the rest of the community. It is not like cutting a man off from the use of a street necessary to his property. (De Armas et al. v. Mayor of New Orleans, 5 La. R. [O. S. 125] 192.) This block of land, if ever dedicated at all, was dedicated as a cemetery. It has been doubted whether the common law principle of dedication applies to public burial grounds. It rests upon the principle that it would be "immoral, indecent, and even sacrilegious to reclaim at pleasure property which had been solemnly devoted to the use of the public in furtherance of some pious or charitable object." (See Hunter v. Trustees of Sandy Hill, 6 Hill, 407, 442; 2 Smith's Lead. Cases, 182, 183, 193, et seq.; Beatty v. Kentz, 2 Pet. 584.) No complaint is made on this ground. All unite in desiring a removal of the cemetery — the municipal and State authorities as well as the individuals. Of course, such an act, by the direction of the Legislature, could not be pronounced "indecent or immoral." The plaintiffs proceed, in their complaints, on the ground that this was a pleasure ground, not a graveyard. The above authorities also show that when a cemetery has ceased to be such in fact, a dedication for that purpose ceases.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The only question which we are called upon to consider in these cases is, whether in enacting the Act of April 4th, 1870 (Stats. 1869-70, p. 738), providing for the erection of a City Hall in the City of San Francisco, the Legislature exceeded its constitutional power. The Act authorizes the Governor to appoint three Commissioners to superintend the work of erecting a City Hall, and directs them to take possession of all that certain tract of land belonging to said city and county, and known as Yerba Buena Park, to grade it to the official grade of the surrounding streets, and directs how the work shall be let and paid for. It also directs that a portion of Yerba Buena Park be subdivided into lots and subdivisions, and provides for the manner of doing it, and that, after the land is laid out, the Commissioners shall immediately proceed to sell, at public auction, the lots and subdivisions in such manner as will bring the largest sum or price possible, and directs the mode of doing it, and that, upon payment of the purchase price and interest, as therein provided, the Commissioners are to execute deeds, in the name of the City and County of San Francisco, to the purchasers, and that these deeds shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings, * * * and shall be evidence of the title and right of possession in the grantees, upon which actions for the recovery of real property, or injuries thereto, may be maintained and defended in all the Courts of this State. It is then provided, that all moneys received from sales of the lots shall be paid into the City Treasury, there to constitute a fund to be known as City Hall Fund, and not to be drawn out or used except as provided in the Act. Provision is then made for the erection of a City Hall, at a cost not exceeding one and a half millions of dollars, on that portion of the land not sold, and for the manner in which warrants are to be drawn on the City Treasury, as funds are needed for the prosecution of the work. If vacancies should occur in the Commission, they are to be temporarily filled by the Board of Supervisors until the next meeting of the Legislature, when the vacancies shall be permanently filled. On the completion of the work, the Commissioners are to make a report and render an account to the Board of Supervisors; and if any surplus remains of the City Hall Fund, one hundred thousand dollars thereof, if there be so much, shall be placed to the credit of the School Department Fund of the city, to be used for the erection of a normal school building in the city. These actions are brought for the purpose of enjoining the Commissioners from proceeding with the work, on the ground that the Act of the Legislature is unconstitutional and void. The plaintiffs applied for a temporary injunction, which was denied, and they appeal from the order denying it. The Act is alleged to be unconstitutional on the ground — first, that Yerba Buena Park was dedicated to the public as a public park, and that the Legislature has no power to divert it to any other use; second, that it is the property of the City and County of San Francisco, as a municipal corporation, in its capacity of a proprietor of lands, and is as much protected by the Constitution from invasion by the Legislature as the property of a private individual; third, that the Constitution provides for the formation of counties, cities, incorporated villages and towns, as subdivisions of the State Government, with the intention that they should exercise all the powers of local self-government which usually pertain to municipal corporations; and whilst it is conceded that the Legislature may create, modify, or abolish these corporations, and may direct the mode and manner in which they shall exercise their powers, or may limit the extent of their powers, it is denied that the Legislature can itself usurp their functions or interfere with their proprietary rights as owners of lands. In discussing the first point, it is necessary to ascertain, primarily, whether or not the land has been dedicated to the public as a park. It appears that up to the time of the passage of the Act, this land had been used as a public burying ground, and had never at any time been used as a public park. On the contrary, since the Commissioners commenced the work of grading the land very many dead bodies had to be removed and buried elsewhere. So far, therefore, as an acceptance of the dedication by the public might be inferred, from a public use of the ground as a park, there is no proof in the record of such an acceptance. But it is claimed that there was an express dedication, by ordinance by the proper city authorities, and that if an acceptance by the public was necessary, there has been such an acceptance by reason of the appropriation of large sums of money out of the City Treasury, under the authority of the legislature, for the purpose of removing the dead bodies from the ground, in order to prepare it for use as a public park. The ordinance referred to is in the following words: "The Mayor is authorized and empowered to take possession of the lot or parcel of ground, in the City and County of San Francisco, situated between Market, McAllister, and Larkin streets, and keep possession thereof for and in the name of the City and County of San Francisco; and that the said land be, and the same shall be, known as Yerba Buena Park. That the same shall hereafter be known and designated as a public park, to be held and used for public and municipal purposes, and the same shall be, and is hereby dedicated to public uses as a public park or plaza; provided, that nothing contained in the said order shall prevent the said city and county from devoting the said land, at any time, to any public purpose, either State or municipal." It is one of the essential elements of a good dedication, that it shall be irrevocable, and that the land shall be forever dedicated to the public use which is designated, provided the public see fit to use it for that purpose. If a private person should, by deed, attempt to dedicate a parcel of land to public use, as a highway, street, park, or for any other public use whatsoever, and should, in the same deed reserve the right, at his pleasure, to revoke the dedication, and to devote the land to any other use he might see proper, this would be no dedication. (Irwin v. Dixon et al., 9 How. U. S. R. 30, and cases cited; Washburne on Easements, 139; State v. Trask, 6 Vermont, 335; N. O. v. U. S., 10 Pet. 622; Commonwealth v. Alburger, 1 Whart. 469; Huber v. Gazley, 18 Ohio, 18; Missouri Ins. v. Horr, 27 Mo. 211.) The proviso in the ordinance, reserving to the city and county the right to devote the land, at any time, to any other public use, State or municipal, defeats the alleged dedication of the grounds as a public park, so far as a dedication is supposed to result from the ordinance itself. But if there had been no reservation in the ordinance, it would not, proprio vigore, have operated as a dedication of the land until the dedication had been accepted by the public. Until accepted, the dedication, whether made by deed or otherwise, may be revoked by the owner of the land. To constitute a valid and complete dedication, two things must occur, to wit: an intention by the owner, clearly indicated by his words or acts, to dedicate the land to public use and an acceptance by the public of the dedication. This acceptance is generally established by the use by the public of the land for the purpose to which it had been dedicated. These propositions are thoroughly established by a long line of decisions, and it will only be necessary to refer to the following: San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 580; Washburne on Easements, 132; Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 647; Child v. Chappel, 9 N. Y. Reports, 257; Washburne on Easements, 239, 140. This use must be of such duration that the public interest and private rights would be materially impaired if the dedication were revoked, and the use by the public discontinued. (Cincinnati v. White, 6 Peters, 431, 439; 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 182, and cases cited.) In order to establish the dedication, the plaintiff also produced what is known as the Van Ness Ordinance Map. But the Van Ness Ordinance relates only to lands lying west of Larkin street, and on the map made in pursuance of the ordinance, this land is marked only by a cross, to indicate its use as a cemetery. This map, therefore, did not tend to prove the dedication as a public park. My conclusion on this branch of the case is, that the land has not been dedicated to the public use as a park. I do not understand counsel to claim that it was dedicated as a public cemetery; but if it had been so dedicated, it had practically ceased to be used as such, through the action of the city authorities, before the passage of the Act; and I presume it will not be contended that it was not competent for the Board of Supervisors, as a police regulation merely, to prohibit the use, as a public burying ground, of a parcel of land situate nearly in the heart of a large and growing city.

In discussing the second ground on which the Act is alleged to be unconstitutional it becomes material to inquire into the tenure by which the title to this land was acquired and is now held by the city and county. It is conceded to be a portion of what are known as the pueblo lands held by the City and County of San Francisco, as the successor of the former Mexican Pueblo of Yerba Buena. The nature of this title has been so often discussed and repeatedly adjudicated by this Court that it would now be a work of supererogation to undertake anew a critical analysis of it. It will be sufficient to state generally that it has been established by these decisions too firmly to be shaken or overthrown at this late day that neither the former pueblo, nor the city and county, as its successor, ever held an indefeasible proprietary interest in these lands. On the contrary, they were and are held only in trust for certain municipal purposes. Under the Mexican system, while the pueblo might dispose of the lands or use them in pursuance of the trust on which they were held, they were nevertheless subject to the disposition of the Governor without the consent of the municipal authorities. On the change of Government what had before been known as the Pueblo of Yerba Buena was incorporated as the City of San Francisco, and afterwards as the city and County of San Francisco. As the successor of the former pueblo the city presented to the Board of United States Land Commissioners its claim for a confirmation of its title to these lands. These proceedings resulted in a final decree of confirmation by the Circuit Court of the United States (to which Court the case had been transferred), by which decree the trust on which the lands were held is distinctly recognized. Subsequently the Congress of the United States, by two special Acts, released the fee of the land to the City and County of San Francisco; but upon the trusts already referred to. Whilst the Mexican Government exercised dominion over this territory, it had the power to direct how the trust should be executed by the pueblo, and to enlarge or limit its power in respect to the disposition of these lands: and when California was erected into a State of the American Union, it succeeded to the power which the Government of Mexico had before exercised over its municipalities, in respect to the control and disposal of the pueblo lands so soon as the title of the pueblo, or its successor, and the nature of the trust on which the lands were held, should be recognized and ascertained by the proper tribunals of the United States created for that purpose. This has been done. The title has been recognized and the trust declared, not only by the Courts of the United States, to whom the subject was referred, but also by special Acts of Congress, as already stated. Acting upon its power to control and enforce this trust, the Legislature, as early as the year 1851, directed certain of these lands to be conveyed to several persons as Commissioners of the Funded Debt of the City of San Francisco with power in the Commissioners to sell and convey said lands, and out of the proceeds to pay off the funded debt of said city. Numerous sales were made by these Commissioners, and the titles conveyed by them have been repeatedly recognized by this Court as valid. We have also decided, and it is now perfectly well settled in this State, that the City of San Francisco had no such proprietary interest in these lands as was subject to levy and forced sale on execution; that the tenure by which the lands were held was of a fiduciary nature, and could not be alienated except in accordance with the trust, and it was for the Legislature to decide how the trust should be performed. In support of these propositions, I refer to the following authorities: Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 568, 573, et passim; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 id. 220; Brown v. San Francisco, id. 457; City and County of San Francisco v. Biedeman, 17 id. 461; Leese v. Clark, 18 id. 573; Brenham et al. v. Mayor of San Jose, 24 id. 602; Greeley v. Townsend et al., 25 id. 610; Redding v. White, 27 id. 285; Grogan v. San Francisco, 18 id. 614; Steinback v. Moore, 30 id. 506; Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 id. 20; Fulton v. Hanlon, 20 id. 480, et seq.; White v. Moses, 21 id. 41; Carleton v. Townsend, 28 id. 223; Halliday v. Frisbie, 15 id. 635; Townsend v. Greeley, 5 Wallace, U. S. R. 326; Townsend v. Burbank, id. 337; Seale v. Doane, 17 id. 484; Kissling v. Shaw, 23 id. 445; Hubbard v. Sullivan, 18 id. 525; McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 id. 621; People v. Coon, 25 Cal. 649; People v. San Francisco, 36 id. 601; San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 id. 588; People v. Doe, 36 id. 222. These authorities conclusively establish that the tenure by which these lands are held is wholly different from that by which lands acquired by a municipality by gift or purchase are ordinarily held; and whatever may be the extent of the legislative power over the latter class of lands, there can be no doubt, I think, that in respect to pueblo lands it is competent for the Legislature to control and direct how they shall be managed and controlled, or disposed of by the municipal corporation.

The last proposition urged by the appellants is, that, inasmuch as the Constitution provides for the organization of county, city, and town governments for the administration of their local affairs, the necessary implication is, that it was intended to prohibit the Legislature from usurping the functions of these municipal bodies by taking upon itself, through its constituted agents, against the will and without the consent of the municipal authorities, the performance of duties which pertain only to the municipal body itself. In support of this argument it is said that the erection of a City Hall is a purely local improvement, and that it was for the city and county to determine for itself whether it needed such an improvement, and if so, when and how it should be made, and at what cost, and how the expense should be defrayed. But it is well settled, in this State at least, that municipal corporations are but subordinate subdivisions of the State Government, which may be created, altered, or abolished, at the will of the Legislature, which may enlarge or restrict their powers, direct the mode and manner of their exercise, and may define what acts they may or may not perform, subject, however, to the limitation that the Legislature cannot direct the performance of an act which will impair the obligation of a contract. On the theory of the appellants it would be difficult, if not impracticable, to define the line at which the power of the Legislature to interfere in the affairs of a municipal corporation would terminate. We have already decided that it may compel the corporation to reduce the grade of a street, and may prescribe the details for letting out the contract, etc. (People ex rel. Ferguson v. San Francisco, 38 Cal. 595, 601.)

In Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 238, this Court says: "The principal of the numerous cases cited is, that a municipal corporation is a public institution, created for public purposes; that the municipality is a political subdivision or department of the State, governed and regulated and constituted by public law; that the agents who administer its affairs derive their power from the Legislature, and can only act in obedience to legislative authority; that the original power to control, as well as to create them, therefore, is in the Legislature, and that the Legislature can as well immediately direct the use and disposition of the public property, as a general rule, as it can mediate do this by appointing or providing for the appointment of agents, or giving authority for that purpose; in other words, what the Legislature can authorize to be done, it can itself do. The agents of the corporation can sell or dispose of the property of the corporation only in the way and according to the order of the Legislature; and, therefore, the Legislature may, by law operating immediately upon the subject, dispose of this property, or give effect to any previous disposition or attempted disposition of it. The property itself is a trust, and the Legislature is the prime and original controlling power, managing and directing the use, disposition, and direction of it. Otherwise the solecism would appear of a derivative power higher in degree and different in kind from the source of its derivation." In Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 568-573, et passim, the same views substantially, if not directly expressed, were distinctly intimated. These decisions have been too long acquiesced in to be now overthrown; and so many valuable property rights have, doubtless, been acquired on the faith of them, that disastrous consequences would ensue if a different rule was now established. In my opinion the Act in question is not unconstitutional, and the application for an injunction was properly denied.

Order affirmed.

DOMINGO PUJOL v. JAMES McKINLAY, CARMEN AMESTI DE McKINLAY, ELENA B. McKINLAY, MARIA F. G. McKINLAY, JOSE G. F. A. McKINLAY, PRUDENCIA G. McKINLAY, AND JANE KRAMPNER.

INTEREST STIPULATED BY CONTRACT ONLY PARTLY EXECUTED.—Where an agreement was made between Pujol and McKinlay that Pujol should advance money to redeem McKinlay's land from an execution sale; that he should be paid interest at the rate of two and a half per cent per month, compounding quarterly on his advances; that after redemption he should advance a further sum sufficient to make the whole advance three thousand dollars, for which sum at the said rate of interest McKinlay was to give his note and mortgage; and it appeared that after redemption and the taking of a Sheriff's deed by Pujol, he made no tender of the additional sum, nor did McKinlay tender the note and mortgage: Held, that Pujol was entitled to interest on his advances at the stipulated rate; that McKinlay could not defeat it on the plea that such was not to be the rate unless the full amount of three thousand dollars was advanced, because Pujol was not in default so long as no tender of the note and mortgage had been made by McKinlay; and that before McKinlay could ask equity to compel Pujol to transfer the legal title acquired by the Sheriff's deed, he must do equity by paying Pujol his advances with the interest stipulated.

HE WHO SEeks EQUITY MUST DO EQUITY.—Where parties come into a Court of equity seeking to enforce a trust created in their favor under a contract, their right to the relief demanded being founded on the contract itself, they cannot claim the benefit of such portions of it as are to their advantage and repudiate the rest.

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES NOT PAYMENTS ON ACCRUING INTEREST ACCOUNT.—

Where Pujol leased a ranch from McKinlay at a rent of a certain number of calves to be delivered annually; and afterwards advanced money to redeem the ranch from an execution sale under an agreement, that he was to be repaid the advance with interest at the rate of two and a half per cent per month, compounding quarterly; and no calves were delivered or rent paid: held, on a settlement of accounts that McKinlay's claim for non-delivery of the calves was in the nature of unliquidated damages; and that, though equity in making a settlement might, for the purpose of avoiding a multiplicity of actions, estimate such damages and deduct them from Pujol's demand, it would not compute the interest on his demand with rents—in other words, it would not treat such damages as pro tanto a payment of Pujol's demand at the several dates when the calves were to be delivered.

INTEREST BY WAY OF DAMAGES ON VALUE OF PROPERTY CONVERTED.—It is well settled that in an action at law for the conversion or non-delivery of personal property agreed to be delivered, interest may be awarded by way of damages for a breach of the contract; and there are even more cogent reasons why equity should adopt the same rule in the settlement of a long standing account.

ACCOUNT FOR RENTS IN EQUITY THOUGH MERGER OF LEASE AT LAW.—Where a lessee, having redeemed the property leased from an execution sale and received the Sheriff's deed, recovered in ejectment against the lessor; but it appeared that as a matter of fact the lessee, in making such redemption, did it in trust for the lessor: held, that although at law the lease was merged in the lessee's new title and recovery in ejectment, in equity there was no merger; and that on a settlement of accounts the lessee was chargeable with rents during the whole time.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Monterey County.

This was an action to quiet the plaintiff's alleged title to the Rancho "Moro y Cayucos," in San Luis Obispo County, to set aside a deed thereto made on November 24th, 1857, by James McKinlay to his wife Carmen Amesti de McKinlay, and for general relief. The defendants answered, and among other things set up, by way of cross-complaint, that plaintiff held the possession of said property as a lessee, and also held the legal title, under a Sheriff's deed, by way of mortgage, or in trust, to secure certain advances made by him; and they prayed for an account of the moneys due him; also, for an account of the rents due them; also, that plaintiff should be enjoined from asserting title against them, or right of possession, except as lessee of an unexpired term, and compelled to convey to them the title acquired under the Sheriff's deed, and for general relief. The action was originally commenced in 1865, in the District Court of the First Judicial District, for San Luis Obispo County, but seems to have been afterwards transferred to the District Court of the Third Judicial District, for Monterey County, where it was tried, and findings filed on September 22d, 1869.

From the findings it appears, among other things, that in 1857 James McKinlay, the owner of the ranch in question, being involved in certain litigation, conveyed to his wife the whole of that part of the ranch known as the "Cayucos," and one half of that part known as the "Moro," in trust, to receive and apply the rents, issues, and profits to her support and maintenance, and to the support, maintenance, and education of the children then born or which might thereafter be born unto them; that this deed was made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud one Jane Allen in enforcing any judgment which she might recover in an action brought by her and then pending against him, but that neither his wife nor the children knew of any such intent, or were privy to it; that Jane Allen afterwards recovered judgment, upon which execution was issued, and all the right, title, and interest of James McKinlay in said ranch was sold thereunder, and a Sheriff's certificate of sale issued to her; that under these circumstances, and while affairs were in this condition, on December 29th, 1859, James and his wife leased the ranch (except three hundred acres of arable land, which, with the privilege of pasturage on the ranch for two hundred or three hundred head of cattle and horses and their increase, they reserved to themselves) to Domingo Pujol, the plaintiff, for the term of six years from March 1st, 1860, with the privilege of surrendering it at the end of three years — the plaintiff to deliver to them, as rent, two hundred calves (one hundred heifer and one hundred bull calves) annually, and to pay the taxes; that plaintiff entered into possession of the ranch, under the lease, on March 1st, 1860, and stocked it with cattle and horses belonging to the firm of Sanjurjo, Bolado & Pujol; that when the time for redemption from the Allen sale was about expiring, James applied to Pujol for a loan of money to redeem, which the latter at first refused to make, on the ground that James had conveyed to his wife and children, but upon James' assurance that he had made that conveyance for his own ends, plaintiff, on June 19th, 1860, made him a loan of two hundred dollars, to secure the payment of which, with interest thereon, at the rate of two and a half per cent per month, he took a note and mortgage on the ranch, and at the same time, and simultaneously therewith, the two entered into a written agreement to the effect that Pujol was to redeem the ranch from the Allen sale, and after the redemption loan a further sum, which, with the redemption money and money loaned, would make up an amount of three thousand dollars, for which James was to give his note, bearing interest at two and a half per cent per month, compounding every three months, and a mortgage, executed by himself and wife, upon the ranch to secure the same; that the plaintiff did redeem from the Allen sale, and afterwards, on November 14th, 1860, there having been no redemption made from him, the Sheriff executed his deed for the ranch to Pujol, which was duly recorded; that Pujol did not offer to pay to James the additional sum necessary to make up the amount of three thousand dollars contemplated in the agreement, and the note and mortgage therein provided for, though executed and ready to be delivered on the payment of such additional amount, were never in fact delivered or tendered; that the plaintiff remained in possession of the ranch, but never paid any rent, nor was any rent demanded of him; that in May, 1861, James' indebtedness to the plaintiff, or rather to the firm of Sanjurgo, Bolado & Pujol, was two thousand nine hundred and sixty-five dollars and sixty-five cents for redemption money and money loaned, with interest, and they proposed, upon the payment to them of three thousand dollars and the release of the plaintiff from paying rent for the ranch for a number of years, to reconvey the ranch to him, which proposition he agreed to, but failed to raise the necessary money; that on further negotiation it was agreed that James should give a note, by himself and wife, for three thousand dollars, bearing interest at two and a half per cent. per month, and a mortgage on the ranch, by both, to secure it, and receive a reconveyance, and the papers were accordingly prepared, but, when the parties met to execute them, James refused to do so, and the transactions of the parties remained unsettled; that in March, 1862, plaintiff, while still in possession of the ranch, except the portion reserved, commenced an ejectment suit in San Luis Obispo County, against James, to recover possession of the ranch and damages, and about the same time, but after James was served in that suit, plaintiff wrote to him to go to Monterey, where he would meet Bolado, his partner, who was authorized to make a settlement of the matter in dispute; that James proceeded to Monterey and found Bolado, and various negotiations took place, which resulted in no definite settlement; that while James was absent, engaged in the negotiations pending, a default was taken in the ejectment suit, a judgment entered against him, a writ of restitution issued, and a return made by the Sheriff of its execution "by dispossessing the defendant James and delivering peaceable possession to the plaintiff;" that the ranch continued to be assessed to James, and he paid the taxes; that in October, 1864, James being in possession of the portion of the ranch reserved in the lease, the plaintiff commenced an action of forcible entry and unlawful detainer against him, in which he recovered judgment, and on June 16th, 1865, a writ of restitution, issued thereon, was executed by the Sheriff "by causing the plaintiff to have possession of the premises described in the writ;" and that the next day the plaintiff commenced the present suit.

As conclusions of law, the Court below found that the deed of trust to Carmen Amesti De McKinlay was delivered before the plaintiff had acquired any title to the ranch, and that it vested title in her as against all persons, but creditors of her husband, subject to any liens upon it against him, and to the right of his creditors to attack it as fraudulent; that plaintiff was not a creditor at the time of its execution, and therefore not in a position to attack it as fraudulent; that on the redemption from the Allen sale plaintiff became subrogated to the position of Jane Allen, but subject to the relation between him and the defendants created by the agreement under which he became such redemptioner; that by virtue of the lease, entry, and possession under it, there having never been any surrender, plaintiff was estopped from denying Mrs. McKinlay's title; that the redemption from the Allen sale was for the benefit of the defendants, and the deed obtained from the Sheriff in the ejectment case vested title in the plaintiff only in trust, until the debt for three thousand dollars should be secured by note and mortgage; that defendants were not in default for not tendering the note and mortgage, for the reason that plaintiff did not tender the sum necessary to make up the amount of three thousand dollars, as contemplated by the agreement; that the relations of debtor and creditor still existed; that the judgment in the ejectment suit not being fraudulent, nor anything having been done to prevent the defendant therein from putting in an answer and defending the case, was conclusion of title in fee as against James, and as to him merged the term of the lease to plaintiff, but did not affect the rights of Mrs. McKinlay or her children; that consequently plaintiff was not entitled to the relief demanded; that defendants, on their cross-complaint, were entitled to an account of the rents of the ranch from the date of the lease, and also to an account showing the moneys advanced by plaintiff for redemption, loans, and taxes, and the interest thereon; that upon payment of the amount found due the plaintiff on such accounting, defendants would be entitled to a reconveyance, and that the matter should be referred to the Court Commissioner to state the accounts.

The Court Commissioner, in stating the accounts, found that the amount advanced by the plaintiff for redemption was two thousand and forty-six dollars, the amount loaned two hundred dollars, and the amount paid for taxes nine hundred and sixty-four dollars and sixty-five cents; that plaintiff was entitled to interest on these advances at the rate of two and a half per cent per month, compounding quarterly, amounting in all to thirty-five thousand five hundred and forty-four dollars and forty-eight cents; that the defendants were entitled to credit for the value of the calves reserved as rent as the same became due, with legal interest thereon, amounting to two thousand and eighty-four dollars and seventeen cents, to James McKinlay, up to the judgment in ejectment, and seven thousand three hundred and twenty-four dollars and seventy cents to Mrs. McKinlay up to date, leaving the amount due the plaintiff twenty-six thousand one hundred and thirty-five dollars and sixty-one cents.

Exceptions being taken to the accounts as stated by the Commissioner, new accounts were filed, which reduced the amount of plaintiff's demand to thirty-four thousand eight hundred and forty-five dollars and eighty-four cents; struck out interest on the value of the calves, and thereby reduced the credits in favor of defendants to eight thousand one hundred and forty-three dollars and seventy-five cents, leaving the amount due the plaintiff twenty-six thousand seven hundred and two dollars and nine cents.

Upon the findings of the Court, the report of the Commissioner, and the last accounts filed, final judgment was entered in accordance therewith, and further providing that upon the payment to the plaintiff of the amount so found due him within one hundred and twenty days, he should reconvey said ranch to defendants as they held it before; and that in default of such payment the cross-complaint should be dismissed and defendants barred and foreclosed of all equity of redemption in the ranch.

The plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied; and he then took an appeal from the judgment and order. In the meanwhile the defendants also took an appeal from the judgment, and urged as objections the points discussed in the opinion. Both appeals were heard together.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

In this case there were cross-appeals, and so much of the judgment as the plaintiff appealed from was affirmed from the bench. The defendant's appeal relates only to the accounting which was had under the order of the Court, and the errors alleged are: First, that the Court computed interest at the rate of two and one half per cent per month, compounded quarterly and without rests, upon the amount advanced by the plaintiff to effect the redemption from Allen, and upon the sums paid by the plaintiff for taxes on the land; second, that the Court refused to allow to the defendant interest on the value of the calves, which were to be paid annually by the plaintiff as rent for the land under lease; third, that the Court erred in refusing to charge the plaintiff with the value of James McKinlay's one quarter interest in the calves, after the date of the judgment in ejectment in favor of the plaintiff against McKinlay.

In considering the first point, it is to be observed that, by the contract of the 19th of June, 1860, McKinlay stipulated that the plaintiff should be paid interest on his advances at the rate of two and one half per cent. per month, compounded quarterly, and the only reason now urged against this rate of interest is, that under the contract the plaintiff was to advance a further sum, which, when added to the other advances would aggregate the sum of three thousand dollars, and it is said that inasmuch as the last named advance was never made by the plaintiff, the contingency did not happen upon which McKinlay agreed to pay so high a rate of interest; hence it is claimed that the plaintiff is entitled only to legal interest on the sums actually advanced. But under the contract of June nineteenth, the undertaking of the plaintiff to make the last advance, and of McKinlay, that he and his wife would make and deliver their promissory note and mortgage to secure the three thousand dollars, were mutual and dependent covenants; they were concurrent acts, to be performed at the same time, and neither of the parties could put the other in default, except by an offer to perform on his part; and McKinlay having failed to tender the note and mortgage, on or before September 3d, 1860, the plaintiff was in no default in omitting to tender the additional advance before that period, and on that day he became entitled, under the contract, to the Sheriff's deed for the property. Assuming that he held the legal title thus acquired, subject to a trust created under the contract of June nineteenth, in favor of McKinlay and wife, nevertheless when they come into a Court of equity, seeking to enforce the trust, their right to the relief demanded is founded on the contract itself, and they cannot claim the benefit of such portions of it as are to their advantage, and repudiate the rest. The plaintiff, as we have seen, was in no default until after he had obtained the Sheriff's deed, and the defendants are not entitled to divest him of the legal title, except on payment of his advances, with the stipulated rate of interest. The maxim, that he who seeks equity must do equity, applies to the defendants' case. In Hidden v. Jordan, 28 Cal. 313, the plaintiff sought to enforce a parol trust, similar to that in this case; and it was held that he could enforce the trust only by the payment of the stipulated sum, with the agreed rate of interest, which was largely in excess of the legal rate when none was agreed upon. I think that case is decisive of the point now under discussion, and that the Court did not err in computing interest at the stipulated rate. Nor did the Court err in refusing to deduct the value of the calves from the plaintiff's demand, as of the several dates at which they were to be delivered under the lease. The defendants' demand for the non-delivery of the calves was in the nature of unliquidated damages, the amount of which could not be ascertained until the accounting was had. Neither at common law, nor under our statute, could unliquidated damages of this nature be the subject of a set-off or counterclaim in an action at law for a liquidated money demand, not connected with or growing out of the same transaction in which the alleged set-off, or counterclaim, originated; and though a Court of equity, in making a final settlement of the accounts between the parties, in order to avoid a multiplicity of actions, will estimate the damages and deduct them from the plaintiff's demand, with a view to end the litigation, it will not, in such cases, compute the interest on the plaintiff's demand with rests. The calves can in no just legal sense be regarded as a payment pro tanto of the plaintiff's demand, as of the several dates when they were to be delivered under the lease. The defendants, at most, had only a cause of action against the plaintiff for the value of the calves, which was unascertained and sounded in damages. A cause of action of this nature could not stop the running of interest on the plaintiff's demand until the final accounting, and the value of the calves was ascertained. But I think the Court erred in refusing to compute interest at the legal rate on the value of the calves from the respective dates at which they ought to have been delivered. It is well settled that in an action at law for the conversion or non-delivery of personal property, the Court or jury may award interest by way of damages for a breach of the contract; and there are even more cogent reasons why a Court of equity should adopt the same rule, in the settlement of a long standing account between the parties, as in this case. The plaintiff has had the use of the calves, or their value for many years, and there is no reason, founded either in law or justice, why he should not be chargeable with interest on their value. In respect to the third point, the Court below proceeded on the theory that James McKinlay's interest in the lease became merged in and terminated by the judgment in ejectment, and consequently, that said McKinlay's interest in the rent, under the lease, was henceforth extinguished. This was undoubtedly true in respect to McKinlay's legal title to the rents. If McKinlay had brought an action at law to recover the rents, the judgment in ejectment would have been a sufficient answer to it. He would have been estopped thereby from asserting title, in an action at law, to the land or its rents.

Points decided.

But he was not bound to set up his equitable defense in that action; and now that he has appealed to a Court of equity, it appears for the first time that the legal title acquired by the plaintiff, under the Sheriff's deed, and which was the foundation of the judgment in ejectment, was and is held by him, subject to the equities created by the contract of June nineteenth; and consequently the judgment in ejectment did not have the effect in a Court of equity to merge or extinguish McKinlay's interest in the lease, or the rents reserved thereby. I am therefore of opinion that the Court erred in refusing to deduct from the plaintiff's demand the amount due to James McKinlay for his portion of the rents, during the whole term of the lease, with interest thereon.

That portion of the judgment from which the defendants appealed is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with an order to the Court below to modify its judgment in accordance with this opinion.

JUDGMENT FOR DAMAGES.—A judgment for damages, in an action of ejectment, where no damages are alleged in the complaint, is clearly erroneous.

case; but except for such purpose the former record, unless it is stipulated by the parties, cannot be considered.

DECISION ON FORMER APPEAL, HOW FAR THE LAW OF THE CASE.—The principles and rules announced by the Supreme Court on a former appeal will be recognized on a subsequent appeal as the law of the case, if the same questions are again presented on the same state of facts.

DOCTRINE OF HAHN v. KELLY, 34 CAL. 391.—The doctrine announced in Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, as to the presumptions indulged in favor of the jurisdiction and correctness of recitals of judgments of Courts of general jurisdiction, applies only in cases where the attack is collateral, and not where the attack is direct.

WHAT RECORD MUST SHOW AS AGAINST DIRECT ATTACK.—In order to maintain a judgment on the merits, directly attacked as on appeal therefrom, it is requisite that the record should show that the Court had jurisdiction of the person against whom the judgment was rendered, and that such judgment was warranted by the pleadings of the party in whose favor it was rendered; and in determining these questions recitals in the judgment cannot be regarded.

RECITALS IN JUDGMENT NOT RECEIVED ON DIRECT ATTACK.—Upon a direct attack, the recitals in a judgment will not be accepted as a substitute for the summons and proof of service, to show jurisdiction of the person of defendant, any more than would recitals in it be received instead of the necessary allegations of the pleadings.

JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT NOT AUTHORIZED UNLESS DEFENDANT PROPERLY CHARGED.—In ejectment it is an indispensable averment of the complaint that the defendant ousted and withholds possession from the plaintiff; and no judgment can be regularly taken in such case against a person, as to whom there is no such allegation.

ACTION AGAINST PERSONS SUED BY FICTITIOUS NAMES.—Where persons are sued by fictitious names, judgment against them will not be binding unless the complaint be amended, as provided by section sixty-nine of the Practice Act, by inserting their true names, so as to allege that they are the persons charged.

ANSWER BY PERSONS SUED UNDER FICTITIOUS NAMES NOT A WAIVER OF AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT.—Where persons sued and served under fictitious names appear and answer the complaint, such answer is not a waiver of an amendment of the complaint describing them by their true names.

COMPLAINT AGAINST "JOHN DOE" DOES NOT SUPPORT JUDGMENT AGAINST "GUADALUPE CASTRO."—Where in ejectment against John Doe and others, the complaint alleged that the true names of such defendants were unknown, and prayed that when ascertained they might be inserted with apt words to charge them; and Guadalupe Castro answered by his true name; and there was judgment against him, but the record showed no amendment of the complaint by inserting his true name: held, on a direct appeal by him, that the judgment was not binding and should be reversed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, County of Santa Cruz.

This was an action of ejectment, commenced February 12th, 1866, to recover possession of the Rancho "Los Corralitos," in Santa Cruz County. The complaint did not aver any damages, and named sixty-seven defendants, and averred that the true names of twenty-eight of them, sued as John Doe, Richard Roe, and others, were unknown to plaintiffs, and prayed that, when ascertained, they might be inserted with proper and apt words to charge them and each of them. On January 7th, 1868, Guadalupe Castro, Simeon Castro, and Joaquin Castro, none of whom were named in the complaint, filed a separate answer, naming themselves as defendants in the action. At the April Term, 1869, the cause came on for trial in the Court below, and a judgment was rendered against said Castros for possession of the property and five thousand dollars damages, and reciting, among other things, "That the defendants, Guadalupe Castro, Simeon Castro, and Joaquin Castro, were duly personally served with the summons and complaint in this action; that they demurred to said complaint, and, after argument, said demurrer was duly overruled; that thereupon said last named defendants answered said complaint, and subsequently, by leave of the Court, held January 7th, 1868, filed an amended answer."

There does not appear to have ever been any amendment of the complaint, inserting the true names of the Castros as defendants therein; but the plaintiffs (respondents here) appended to their argument the record of an appeal in the same case, taken in 1867, and reported in 34 Cal. 235 — "not as adding anything to the recitals in the judgment in the transcript before this Court, but as showing that those recitals are, in fact, supported by the whole record, and the steps which these defendants took seriatim, after being served in the action."

Guadalupe Castro, Simeon Castro, and Joaquin Castro appealed from the judgment.

John Currey, for Appellants.

The Castros, who alone have appealed to this Court, are not named in the complaint. They are not charged in or by the complaint with anything—hence the judgment against them is without any basis on which it can stand. There is no principle more completely settled than that the allegations and proofs must correspond. The plaintiff cannot be entitled to a judgment against any person, unless that person is charged by the plaintiff—that is, unless a cause of action is alleged against that person. It is true that by section sixty-nine of the Practice Act, the Castros might have been made parties; but that section required and still requires that when the true names of defendants are discovered, the complaint shall be amended by the insertion of the true names. Except for that section the plaintiffs could not have sued any person by a name not belonging to him; and, consequently, the Castros could not become charged by the complaint, and legally bound by the judgment, without being made defendants by an amendment, as therein provided.

Again, the complaint contains no allegation in relation to damages, yet the Court below gave judgment against the Castros in the sum of five thousand dollars as damages. It will be observed that no issue was tendered or joined as to damages, and nothing in the pleadings is said in relation to damages to which evidence could have been directed. It cannot be presumed the Court admitted any evidence upon the ex parte trial on the subject of damages, because there was no issue tendered or joined on the subject. If the Court did admit such evidence, it could not authorize a judgment for the plaintiffs, for the reason that there was nothing in the complaint to sustain such judgment. To entitle the plaintiffs to damages there must be an averment of the facts necessary to establish a cause of action for damages. (Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 324; De Castro v. Clarke, 29 Cal. 16.)

The record in the case before the Court is all that counsel for the parties have any right to refer to, and beyond which the Court will not look. If the plaintiffs are to be permitted to refer to the case reported in 34 Cal. 235, the defendants may claim the like privilege of referring to the record and judgment in Castro's Executors v. Amesti, 14 Cal. 38, as a complete bar to plaintiffs' right of action in this case.

William A. Cornwall, also for Appellants.

William Irvine and William H. Patterson, for Respondents.

It was the opinion of the Court below, at the trial, that as the defendants (who take this appeal) had appeared and answered the complaint, it was within the province of the Court to hear proof and allow recovery for rents and profits. Under this State of facts the plaintiffs now offer to remit all claim for rents and profits and herewith offer to file a release thereof, and, if the judgment for damages has been to any extent executed, to make restitution. And upon these conditions they ask an affirmance of the judgment. (Carpentier v. Gardner, 29 Cal. 160; Curtiss v. Herrick, 14 Cal. 114; Prince v. Payne, 14 Cal. 419; Doll v. Fuller, 16 Cal. 432; Union Water Company v. Murphy's Flat Fluming Company, 22 Cal. 620.)

The appeal here is upon the judgment roll, and upon this must the efficiency of the service be decided, it being always presumed that a Court of general jurisdiction has acquired the necessary jurisdiction over the parties to support the judgment, unless the record shows to the contrary. The judgment here recites the fact that the defendants—the Castros—have been duly served with process, and it is a direct adjudication by the Court upon the point, and is as conclusive upon the parties as any other decided in the cause. (Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391; Barrett v. Carny, 32 Cal. 537; Sharp v. Lumley, 34 Cal. 615.)

We do not overlook the real distinctions which obtain, with respect to the conclusiveness of judgments attacked collaterally, and those directly brought up for review on suggestions of error in the rendition thereof. But unless alleged errors are reserved in a statement on appeal, or bill of exceptions, so as to be proved by the record, we recognize only the following causes for which a judgment will be reversed, on appeal, upon the judgment roll, where the same judgment would be sustained against a collateral attack (excepting judgments by default): 1. Where the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. 2. When within the issues made by the pleadings they do sustain the judgment. 3. A decision sustaining or overruling a demurrer erroneously rendered. 4. A final judgment awarding, sustaining, or dissolving an injunction not authorized or justified by the record.

The Castros, by their answer, allege they are in possession of the demanded premises, and set up title in themselves. Under such claim they had a right to defend the action of ejectment prosecuted by the plaintiff to recover the possession of the premises. (Roland v. Kreyenhagen, 18 Cal. 455.) Does it matter, then, with what formalities they came into Court—whether under the cover of the fictitious names of John Doe or Richard Roe—so that their true names were discovered, and they were permitted to defend (all of which the record shows); and whether their names were formally inserted in the complaint, or whether a formal order of amendment was entered in the minutes? At most, it was a personal privilege of the defendant; and they were competent to waive it, and they will be presumed to have done so.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The appeal is taken by defendants Guadalupe Castro, Simeon Castro, and Joaquin Castro, and they appeal from the judgment alone. The record in this Court consists of the complaint, summons, Sheriff's return of service, answer of the above named defendants, and the judgment.

The judgment for damages is clearly erroneous, for no damages are alleged in the complaint.

The defendants — the Castros — are not named in the complaint, summons, or Sheriff's return, but long prior to the rendition of the judgment, they filed their answer, and it is recited in the judgment that they were duly served with the summons; that they demurred to the complaint, and that the demurrer having been overruled, they answered the complaint. The question is whether a judgment can be sustained against persons who are not mentioned in the complaint. A controversy has arisen between the parties, as to whether they are entitled to read, in connection with the record now before us, the record in the former appeal. (See 34 Cal. 235.) That record may be looked into for the purpose of ascertaining what facts were before this Court on the former appeal, so as to see the application of the rule, that the decision then made is the law of the case. In other words, we must examine the former record, in order to ascertain what was then decided. The principles and rules then announced would be recognized as the law of the case on this appeal, if the same questions were now again presented on the same state of facts, but the questions then presented do not now arise. The facts presented on that appeal — or more generally stated, the former record — cannot, except upon the stipulation of parties, be added to, and read as a part of, the record now before us.

The plaintiff invokes the doctrine announced in Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, and kindred cases, following the authority of that case; but it has no application here, for in those cases the attack was collateral, while here it is direct.

In order to maintain a judgment when it is directly attacked, as in this case by an appeal, it is requisite that the record should show that the Court had jurisdiction of the person against whom the judgment was rendered, and that the judgment was warranted by the allegations of the pleadings of the party in whose favor it was rendered. We refer only to the judgments on the merits. In determining that question, recitals which may be found in the judgment cannot be regarded, for the question is whether the record sustains the judgment. Such recitals, therefore, will not be accepted as a substitute for the summons and the proof of service; and, indeed, it would be as illogical so to do, as to receive such recitals in the stead of the allegations of the pleadings.

It will not be doubted that in the action of ejectment, it is an indispensable averment of the complaint that the defendant ousted the plaintiff, and still withholds the possession of the premises; and it is equally clear, that if the plaintiff brings in a new party as a defendant, the ouster and withholding of the possession by him must be averred, otherwise no judgment can be taken against him for the recovery of the possession of the premises. We can see no reason why the same rule will not apply when the names of defendants are ascertained, who have been sued by fictitious names. It must be alleged that they are guilty of the ouster, otherwise there will be no relation between the complaint and the judgment. When the names of the defendants, who are sued by fictitious names, are ascertained, whether before or after service of process, the complaint must be amended by inserting their true names. Section sixty-nine of the Practice Act, provides that when the true name is discovered the pleading may be amended, but in our judgment the pleading must be amended, if it is intended to bind such persons by the judgment.

There is as little room for question that such is the proper course, as there would be in a case where the plaintiff discovers that, by mistake, he has sued the defendant by a wrong name. When the defendants, who are sued by fictitious names, are served with process (as is claimed by the plaintiffs here), appear and answer the complaint, their answer is not a waiver of an amendment of the complaint, describing the defendants by their true names. The averment that John Doe ousted the plaintiffs from the possession of the premises, will not support a judgment that the plaintiffs recover the possession from Castro. The recovery must be according to the allegations of the complaint.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

COMPANY, OWNERS, AND OLIVER ELDRIDGE, CON-
SIGNEE OF SAID STEAMSHIP.

POWER OF A STATE TO EXCLUDE PAUPERS, ETC., FROM ITS LIMITS.—A State has the power, by proper police and sanitary regulations, to exclude from its limits paupers, vagabonds, and criminals, or sick, diseased, infirm, and disabled persons, who are liable to become a public charge, or to admit them only on such terms as will prevent the State from being burdened with their support.

Argument for Appellants.

ITEM.—The exercise of such a power is a police or sanitary regulation for preserving the health and morals of the people.

POWER OF A STATE TO EXCLUDE ABLE-BODIED PERSONS NOT PAUPERS OR CRIMINALS FROM ITS LIMITS.—The power to exclude from the limits of a State, or to admit within its limits upon terms, persons in the full possession of their faculties, sound in body, and neither paupers, vagabonds, or criminals, and in all respects competent to earn a livelihood, is a regulation of commerce, of such a nature that it can be most advantageously exercised by Congress; and a State, even in the absence of legislation by Congress upon the subject, cannot exercise it.

POWER OF A STATE TO REGULATE COMMERCE.—If a regulation of any kind of commerce is local in its character, demanding varying rules, so as to adapt it to particular localities, it is within the province of the State Legislature to adopt such local rules and regulations, in the absence of legislation by Congress on the subject.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

McAllisters & Bergin, for Appellants.

The term "commerce," as used in the Constitution, includes intercourse with foreign nations and between the several States. (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1; People v. Raymond, 34 Cal. 497.)

The power to regulate commerce includes the power to regulate the transportation of passengers. (Smith v. Turner, and Norris v. The City of Boston, 7 How. U. S. 983; id. 401.)

Congress has prescribed regulations for the transportation of passengers, and its action in regard thereto is exclusive. Congress has, from time to time, prescribed all the regulations deemed necessary for the transportation of passengers. The number of persons, extent of accommodation, character and treatment of passengers, are all matters that it has already fully regulated. The "wearing apparel in actual use, and other personal effects (not merchandise), professional books, implements, instruments, and tools of trade, occupation or employment, of persons arriving in the United States" are exempt from duty. (13 United States Statutes at Large, 390; 12 United States Statutes at Large, 3; 10 United States Statutes at Large, 69, 715; 1 Brightly's Dig. p. 373, Sec. 236; 2 Brightly's Dig. p. 159, Sec. 28.) These Acts of Congress indicate the manner and extent to which Congress has deemed it necessary to regulate commerce in this particular.

The Acts of the Legislature upon the point now under consideration cannot be maintained as an exercise of the police power.

Under the police power the State has the right to exclude from its territory all paupers, vagabonds, and fugitives from justice. This results from the inherent right existing in all communities of self-preservation, but this right does not sanction or justify the exclusion of persons who are not vagabonds, paupers, or fugitives from justice. (7 How. U. S. 426, 427; Crandall v. The State of Nevada, 6 Wallace, 48.)

H. H. Byrne, District Attorney of San Francisco, T. W. Freelon, and Jo Hamilton, Attorney General, for Respondent.

The law in question is a regulation of internal police. The bond required, or the commutation money under it, are neither of them a duty, nor are the alien passengers named in the complaint imports. An import is an article upon which a duty may be levied. The duty is specific or ad valorem. (Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheaton, 437.) Commerce does not mean anything that is not connected with buying or selling. (7 How. U. S. 416.) Congress has not legislated upon the subject before the Court, and until it does so the States under their reserved power can do so. (Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wallace, 713; Steamship Co. v. Port Wardens of New Orleans, 6 Wallace, 31; Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wallace, 450.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action against an American passenger vessel, built, owned, and registered at the port of New York, and engaged in the passenger trade between the ports of San Francisco, in this State, and of Panama, in the Republic of New Granada, to enforce the collection of certain forfeitures alleged to have been incurred for the violation of the provisions of an Act of the Legislature of this State, entitled "An Act concerning passengers arriving in the ports of the State of California," approved May 3d, 1852 (Stats. 1852, p. 78), as amended by the Act of April 2d, 1853 (Stats. 1853, p. 71.) The Act provides, in substance, that the master of any vessel arriving at the port of San Francisco from any port out of this State shall make to the Commissioner of Emigrants a report in writing, duly verified, stating the name, place of birth, time and place of naturalization, last residence, age, and occupation of every person or passenger who shall have landed from such vessel on her last voyage to such port, not being a citizen of the United States, and who shall have, within the last preceding twelve months, arrived from any country out of the United States, at any place within the United States, and who shall not have been bonded, or who have paid the commutation money, according to the provisions of this Act or any former Act. The master is also required to state in said report if any of said passengers or persons so reported are lunatic, idiot, deaf, dumb, blind, crippled, or infirm; and if so, whether they are accompanied by any relatives likely to be able to support them, and also whether any of said passengers are persons convicted of any infamous crime, or of a felony, so far as the same may be within the knowledge of said master. Certain penalties are imposed on the master for his failure to make the required report, or for making a false report. It is then made the duty of the Mayor, on receiving said report, to require, by his indorsement thereon, that the owner or consignee of the vessel shall give a joint and several bond, with two sureties, in the sum of five hundred dollars, for each and every passenger included in such report, conditioned to indemnify and save harmless each and every county, town, or city in this State, and also the Trustees or the several State hospitals, against all costs and expenses which may be by them, or any of them, necessarily incurred for the relief, support, or medical care of the persons named in the bond, within two years from the date of such bond, or in lieu of sureties, the bond may be secured by a mortgage on real estate, or by a deposit of bonds of the United States or of this State. The sureties are required to justify as to their sufficiency, and a fee is to be paid by the owner or consignee for the justification. A separate bond with separate sureties is required for each passenger; but, in lieu of the bond, the owner or consignee may commute therefor by paying five dollars in cash for each passenger included in said report. It is further provided that whenever, in the opinion of such Mayor, there be among the passengers in any vessel any lunatic, idiot, deaf, dumb, cripple, or infirm person not members of families, or who, from attending circumstances are likely to become permanently a public charge, or who have been paupers in any other country, or who from sickness or disease existing either at the time of departure from the port of departure, or at the time of their arrival in any part of this State, are a public charge, or likely soon to become so, it shall be the duty of such Mayor to require in the indorsement made according to section two of this Act, or in any subsequent indorsement or indorsements, in addition to the bond provided for in section two, that the owner or consignee of such vessel shall execute for every such passenger a further bond, joint and several, to the people of this State, in the sum of one thousand dollars. Such bond shall be conditioned and secured in the manner already stated. If any person for whom a bond is given shall, within the period specified in the bond, become a charge upon any city, town, or county in this State, or upon either of the State hospitals, suit may be brought on the bond, and a recovery had for such sum as was expended in the care or support of the person named in the bond; and all moneys received for commutation are to be paid into the State Treasury, into the Hospital Fund, and to be applied exclusively towards the support of State hospitals.

The Act further provides that in lieu of the bond for blind, deaf and dumb, cripples, or other disabled persons, the owner or consignee may commute by the payment of such sum as the Commissioner of Emigrants shall deem reasonable.

The complaint alleges that on a voyage from Panama to San Francisco the steamship Constitution brought as passengers, and landed at the latter port, four persons as passengers who were natives and citizens of New Granada; that the Master on his arrival duly made his report to the Commissioner of Emigrants, including therein the names of the four passengers aforesaid, and that the Mayor, by his indorsement on said report, had duly required bonds to be given for those passengers, as required by the statute; but that neither the owner or consignee had given the required bond or paid the requisite commutation money, and had refused either to give the bond or pay the commutation. The statute declares that all forfeitures incurred under the Act by the owner or consignee shall be a lien upon the vessel, to be enforced by a proceeding in rem, and the action is brought to enforce this lien. The answer admits that the passengers were brought and landed as charged in the complaint, and that they were natives and citizens of New Granada, and avers that they were taken on board as passengers in the ordinary course of the business of the vessel, and that when landed in San Francisco they were persons in the prime of life, in the full possession of their faculties, perfectly sound in body and mind, neither paupers, vagabonds, or criminals, and in all respects competent to earn a livelihood. The Court sustained a demurrer to the answer, and the defendant declining to amend, a final judgment was entered for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals. The only question presented for our decision is, whether or not so much of the statute as requires a bond to be given or commutation money to be paid on the passengers described in the answer is in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and therefore void. The Act is claimed to be repugnant to that portion of Article I, section eight, of the Federal Constitution, which provides that Congress shall have the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes," and to that portion of section ten of the same Article which provides that "no State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties or imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws."

In considering the grave question here presented, it is to be observed in limine, that whatever may have been the real purpose of the statute, its ostensible purpose was to provide police and sanitary regulations, to prevent the people of this State from becoming chargeable with the support and maintenance of persons imported from foreign countries, who either then were, or were soon after, liable to become a public charge. If it were conceded that this was the real purpose of the statute, and that its provisions are reasonably adapted, and were intended to secure this result, and this only, there would be an end to the argument; for in all the numerous adjudications which have been had in respect to the power of the several States to interfere with commerce under the clauses of the Constitution above referred to, it has never been doubted that a State has the power, by proper police and sanitary regulations, to exclude from its limits paupers, vagabonds, and criminals, or sick, diseased, infirm, and disabled persons, who were liable to become a public charge, or to admit them only on such terms as would prevent the State from being burdened with their support. To surrender this power would be to abandon one of the highest prerogatives of local self-government, one of the chief functions of which is to preserve the public health and to repress crime. In this respect the statute under consideration differs widely from that which we had occasion to consider in People v. Raymond, 34 Cal. 495. The statute discussed in that case was designed solely for revenue purposes, and was intended to raise revenue for the support of the State Government from a stamp tax, imposed on passenger contracts with persons about to depart from this State on passenger vessels. We held this to be a regulation of commerce, within the meaning of section eight, Article I, of the Federal Constitution, and that Congress having legislated on the same subject, by requiring a Federal revenue stamp to be affixed to all passenger contracts, its authority was paramount, and when exercised excluded all State legislation on the same subject. We, therefore, held the statute to be void. But we did not decide whether or not, in the absence of legislation by Congress on the same subject, the State would have had the constitutional power to enact the statute which was considered in that case. But whilst conceding the authority of the State to enact police and sanitary regulations for preserving the health and morals of the people, counsel insists that this statute is neither the one nor the other, so far as it operates upon persons who at the time of landing are neither paupers, vagabonds, or criminals, or affected with any mental or bodily infirmity, but on the contrary are perfectly sound in body and mind, and in every way fitted to earn a support. It is said that police and sanitary regulations can have no just application to persons of this description, and that it is an abuse of terms to say that they are proper subjects for such regulations, because, possibly, they may at some future day become paupers, vagabonds, or criminals, or sick, infirm, or otherwise disabled. This view of the question appears to me to be unanswerable. It is a misnomer to call that a police regulation, in the sense in which that term is here applied, in so far as it operates upon persons of good morals and upright character, and who are not more likely than the average of mankind to become paupers, vagabonds, or criminals; and it is equally a misnomer to term that a sanitary regulation which applies only to persons in good health and of sound mind, and who are not more liable than other people hereafter to become a public charge from sickness or infirmity. The power to make police or sanitary regulations prescribing the terms on which certain classes of persons shall be admitted into this State, necessarily includes the power to exclude them altogether if they fail to comply with the prescribed conditions. If a criminal from a penal colony should be required to pay one hundred dollars upon his entrance into this State, he might be excluded altogether, if he refused to pay the required sum, or a pauper from a foreign almshouse might be refused permission to land in this State on any terms, or might be received on such conditions as the State may prescribe. These would be merely police regulations, in the proper and just sense of that term. But if the State, under the pretense of police or health regulations, should enact that no person should hereafter enter this State, unless he would first pay a sum of money, or give a bond, with sureties, for his future good behavior, or conditioned that he would not become a public charge during his sojourn in this State, this could in no just sense be termed a police or sanitary regulation, in so far as it would be applicable to persons of good character and morals, and who were sound in body and mind. If the State could exercise such a power as this under the pretense of preserving the public health and morals, it is obvious that it might destroy the entire passenger traffic between this State and foreign countries, and even with our sister States. It might, for the same reason, prohibit the importation of all merchandise from foreign countries, for fear that it might be infected with some secret cause of disease which in the future might possibly damage the health of the community. Whilst the Legislature may exercise a wide discretion as to the proper subjects for police and sanitary regulations, and as to the proper mode of preserving the health and morals of the community, by means of these regulations, it cannot, under color of this power, enact laws which in no proximate degree are germane to the subject. I am, therefore, of opinion that a statute which obstructs the entrance into this State of persons who are neither paupers, vagabonds, or criminals, or in anywise unsound or infirm in body or mind, is not an exercise of the police power of the State, in any just sense of that term.

Assuming these conclusions to be correct, and that the statute in question is not a police or sanitary regulation, as applied to these passengers, it remains to be considered whether it is not, nevertheless, a valid enactment. Conceding it to be a regulation of commerce between this State and foreign nations, the grave question arises whether it was within the constitutional power of the Legislature to enact it. There is, perhaps, no question of constitutional construction which has been so elaborately discussed by the highest Court in this country as that which relates to the power of Congress, and of the several States respectively, in regulating commerce with foreign nations. Whatever doubts may originally have existed in respect to the concurrent power of Congress and the several States over this subject, it is now well settled that when Congress undertakes, by its legislation, to regulate a particular branch of our foreign commerce, its authority in this respect is paramount, and is exclusive of all action by the several States on that particular subject. (People v. Raymond, supra, and cases there cited.) But it has long remained a doubtful question, of the gravest import, whether or not, in the absence of legislation on the same subject by Congress, a State might not legislate for itself in respect to its commerce with foreign nations. This question was elaborately reviewed by the eminent jurists who then composed the Supreme Court of the United States, in what are known as The Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283. In the very able opinions which were delivered by the several members of the Court in these cases the argument on this question was apparently exhausted; and yet, notwithstanding the great learning and ability which characterizes them, so voluminous are these opinions, and so great the variety of topics discussed, that it is not easy to determine what was the precise result reached by a majority of the Court on this particular point. A similar doubt as to the result of these conflicting opinions, on this point, appears to have been entertained by the same Court in the late case of Crandall v. State of Nevada, 6 Wall. 35. In delivering the opinion of the Court in that case, Mr. Justice MILLER says:

“The proposition that the power to regulate commerce, as granted to Congress by the Constitution, necessarily excludes the exercise by the States of any of the power thus granted, is one which has been much considered in this Court, and the earlier discussions left the question in much doubt. As late as the January Term, 1849, the opinions of the Judges in The Passenger Cases show that the question was considered to be one of much importance in those cases, and was even then unsettled, though previous decisions of the Court were relied on by the Judges themselves as deciding it in different ways. It was certainly, so far as those cases affected it, left an open question.

“In the case of Cooley v. Board of Wardens, four years later, the same question came directly before the Court in reference to the local laws of the port of Philadelphia concerning pilots. It was claimed that they constituted a regulation of commerce, and were therefore void. The Court held that they did come within the meaning of the term ‘to regulate commerce,’ but that, until Congress made regulations concerning pilots, the States were competent to do so.

“Perhaps no more satisfactory solution has ever been given of this vexed question than the one furnished by the Court in that case.

“After showing that there are some powers granted to Congress which are exclusive of similar powers in the States, because they are declared to be so, and that other powers are necessarily so from their very nature, the Court proceeds to say that the authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and the States includes within its compass powers which can only be exercised by Congress, as well as powers which, from their nature, can best be exercised by the State Legislature—to which latter class the regulation of pilots belongs. ‘Whatever subjects of this power are in their nature national, or admit of one uniform system or plan of regulation, may justly be said to be of such a nature as to require exclusive legislation by Congress.’

“In the case of Gilman v. Philadelphia this doctrine is reaffirmed, and, under it, a bridge across a stream navigable from the ocean, authorized by State law, was held to be well authorized, in the absence of any legislation by Congress affecting the matter.”

The proposition here announced is, that when a regulation of our foreign commerce is national in its character—that is to say, when it is of such a nature that the power to enact it can be most advantageously and appropriately exercised by Congress under a general system, applicable alike to the whole nation and all its parts, then Congress has the exclusive power to legislate upon it, and the States, severally, have no power to deal with it. But, if the regulation be local in its nature, and demanding varying rules, so as to adapt it to particular localities, it is within the province of the State Legislatures to adopt such local rules and regulations, in the absence of legislation by Congress, on that particular subject. This must be accepted as the latest expression of opinion, on this vexed question, by our highest judicial tribunal, to whose authority it is our duty to defer in its construction of the Constitution of the United States. Tested by this rule, the statute under discussion is, in my opinion, unconstitutional.

It seeks to apply to emigrants from foreign countries, landing on our shores, onerous conditions not exacted from them at other of our domestic ports, and not imposed upon them by any Act of Congress. The regulation is not local in its nature or character, and, if Congress deemed it wise to do so, could as well be enforced at the port of New York, or any other of our great ports, as at San Francisco. Congress having omitted to establish such regulations, and to impose such burdens on foreign emigrants, the presumption is that it deems it unwise or impolitic to do so. But, however this may be, under the construction given to the Federal Constitution in Crandall v. State of Nevada, Congress has the exclusive power to establish such regulations as these.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with an order to the District Court to overrule the demurrer to the answer.

Statement of Facts.

[No. 1,705.]

JACOB A. MORENHOUT, THOMAS B. VALENTINE, AND BENJAMIN S. BROOKS v. WILLIAM E. BARRON.

CONTRACT TO SELL LAND.—A provision in a contract for the sale of land that the purchaser may make inquiry and satisfy himself with its quality, situation, and title, and, if not satisfied, may rescind the contract, is solely for the purchaser's protection, which he may waive; and a conveyance taken by him, without such inquiry, is valid and effective.

EXECUTION OF DEED IN PURSUANCE OF CONTRACT TO SELL LAND.—Where the owner of a Mexican grant, in California, in 1847, contracted to sell it for a certain price, if the purchaser should, after inquiry, be satisfied with the title, and pay the price, and after more than half the price was advanced, the vendor executed and the purchaser received a deed, in the Mexican form, in which the contract was set forth as a part thereof: held, that by the execution of the deed, all the purposes of the contract were accomplished, and that the provision that it should be attached to the deed amounted to no more than a recital, and did not have the effect of keeping it on foot as a subsisting contract.

FINDINGS OUTSIDE OF THE ISSUES USELESS.—A finding is useless and idle unless the facts found are within the issues, and a judgment based upon such finding cannot be sustained.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action brought for the purpose of having a certain tract of eight leagues of land, called the Rancho "Caslamayomi," in Lake County, adjudged to be held by the defendant in trust for the plaintiffs, to compel a conveyance thereof to them, and to enjoin defendant from setting up any title thereto adverse to the plaintiffs.

It appears that on August 23d, 1847, one Eugenio Montenegro, being the owner by grant from the Mexican Government of the rancho named, entered into an agreement, in writing, with William Forbes, of the house of Barron, Forbes & Co., of Tepic, Mexico, as follows:

"By this document it appears that I, Eugenio Montenegro, being the owner in property of a tract of land, situated in

Statement of Facts.

Sonoma, Alta California, the extent of which is eight square leagues, suitable for sowing and grazing purposes; which tract of land I have proposed to sell to Don Guillermo Forbes, of this place, for the sum of two thousand dollars; which purchaser, being satisfied with the price, is desirous of ascertaining the quality and situation of the land referred to; for which purpose he will appoint a confidential agent to make the necessary examination, and report in relation thereto, as well in respect to the character of the lands as in relation to the title under which the same has been guaranteed to me; and if said examination shall result in his determination to consummate the proposed purchase, from the present time I obligate myself, in the most solemn manner, to transfer to the said Señor Forbes the eight square leagues of land referred to, for the said sum of two thousand dollars, under the condition that he, in the meantime, supply me with partial sums, from one to five hundred dollars, on account of the value of said land, with the understanding that if the sale should not be consummated, I shall return to the purchaser the amount he may have advanced me under the foregoing condition, as soon as the business may be determined; and, as a security for the return of what I may receive, the Señor Don José Castro binds himself to do it in my name, in case I should fail to do so, assuming my obligation and, for the purpose, obligating the property of which he is now possessed, as well as that which he may hereafter acquire; who, with me and the Señor Forbes, signs this, in witness of the same, in Tepic, on the 23d of August, 1847."

In pursuance of this agreement, Forbes paid to Montenegro several sums, amounting to one thousand five hundred and fifty-two dollars and fifty cents; and on August 7th, 1848, at the same Town of Tepic, in Mexico, Montenegro executed and delivered to Forbes a deed of conveyance [escritura], according to the Mexican formula, as follows:

Statement of Facts.

"In the City of Tepic, on the 7th day of August, 1848, before me, the Notary, and witnesses, the Señor Don Eugenio Montenegro, a resident of this place, whom I certify that I know, said: That in Alta California he owns a tract of land, called 'Caslamayomi,' which he has contracted to sell to Don Guillermo Forbes, of this place, according to a private obligation which he executed on the 23d day of August, 1847; that upon said contract the said Forbes has already paid, on account, the sum of one thousand dollars, which he received in two payments, and receipted for the same, as appears at the end of said obligation; and finally, as it has been determined to sell and he has received from the said Forbes another sum of a thousand dollars, in completion of the sale stipulated, wherefore acknowledging the receipt of the two thousand dollars mentioned in the contract, he renounces all exceptions which might be taken, and that of not having referred to the Law 9, Tit. 1, Part 5, which treats thereof, and the two years allowed for proof of the receipt of the same. In consequence whereof, and in due form of law, he declares that for himself, and in the name of his heirs and successors, or whomsoever of them, who may have any right, title, or interest in the matter, he sells forever, with the right of inheritance, to the said Don Guillermo Forbes, the said land or rancho situated on the frontier of Alta California [describing it]. That Señor Forbes is satisfied with the titles under which the vendor holds said land, and for this reason said titles are not presented. That said land is free from all incumbrances, express or implied, by mortgage, sale, or otherwise; and in this condition it is sold, with right of entrance and exit, with its depths and heights, and with all the uses, privileges, and servitudes, that he has had or could have, by law, in and to said land, for the sum of two thousand dollars; that this sum is the value of said land, and that, although it should be worth more, of the excess, whatever the same may be, he makes a donation thereof to the purchaser and his representatives, by judicial intervention and other securities, renouncing Law 2, Tit. 1, Book 10, of the New Recop., and the four years provided for asking a rescission of the contract or a supplement to its just price, which are considered as having passed, as if in fact they had; wherefore he relinquishes all right that he may have had or could have, to the said land, since he cedes, renounces, and transfers to the purchaser and his representatives all his right in the same, real, mixed, direct, and executive, in order that he may possess the same as his own, cultivate, or make donation thereof at his will. He confers power on him, in his own cause, to take the real possession of said land, on the presentation of this writing alone, of which he consents legalized copies may be given to the purchaser, which shall serve him as a title and security for his property. And for the bona fides of this sale, and for the security and firmness of this instrument, the vendor obligates his present property, and such as he may hereafter acquire, to be subject to the fulfillment thereof, as by judgment rendered by competent authority; renouncing his domicile, and the laws and privileges that may favor him, and the generalities of the law in form. Thus he executed and signed, consenting that the obligation referred to, for what it may import to the purchaser, be annexed to this writing, since he hereby admits that the same was executed in due form. Don Santos Gallego, Don Rosario Romero, and Don Dionisio Garcia y Corona, being the witnesses present.

“EUGENIO MONTENEGRO.

“Which I attest: JESUS VIJAR.”

It further appears, that in 1849, Forbes, not having obtained possession of the land, and not being satisfied with the title, wrote to Montenegro as follows:

Statement of Facts.

"TEPIO, July 31st, 1849.

"Senor Don EUGENIO MONTENEGRO:

"MY DEAR SIR: Your favor of the present month is before me, and to which I reply that I have actually sent instructions to Don Diego Aleje Forbes for the settlement of the matter pending. There is no doubt that for more than a year you have been in want of the remainder of your money; but you must not expect that I will advance this money for a property which I now see no probability whatever of obtaining, on account of the difficulties that have arisen; and as I am of opinion that these cannot be overcome, I avail myself of your offer to return me the sum received by you, which amounts to one thousand five hundred and fifty-two dollars and fifty cents, and our contract remains null, which you can do at once, placing that sum at the disposition of Señor Forbes, whom I will advise to the same effect.

"Trusting that you are in good health, I remain your obedient servant,

"GUILLERMO FORBES."

Various other letters were written, from which it appears that Forbes offered and desired to get back his money and give up his deed, but that neither the money was refunded or the deed given up.

In December, 1853, Montenegro, claiming that the letters of Forbes amounted to a rescission of the contract and deed, made another conveyance of property to the plaintiff, Jacob A. Morenhout, who afterwards conveyed undivided interests therein to his co-plaintiffs, Valentine and Brooks.

In June, 1857, Forbes conveyed the land to the defendant, William E. Barron; but before the making of the last conveyance, the claim was presented by Forbes to the United States Land Commission. It appears to have been rejected there, but was afterwards appealed to the United States District Court, where, chiefly through the exertions of Mr. Brooks, it was finally confirmed in the name of Forbes. It further appears, that after the making of the deed to Barron, the plaintiffs offered to pay him the sum of one thousand five hundred and fifty-two dollars and fifty cents, with interest, upon his executing to them a deed of the ranch, which he refused; and that neither party had been or were in possession of the property.

On substantially the foregoing state of facts, the Court below, on November 27th, 1867, found, among other things, that "though the deed of August 7th, 1848, was absolute on its face, there was, at the time of its execution and delivery, an understanding and agreement between Forbes and Montenegro, that if the former, upon examination, should find that he could not get possession of the land, or the title was not good, he should have the right to rescind the purchase and demand his money." The Court also found that Forbes had, "on July 31st, 1849, exercised his right to rescind the contract of purchase, and did rescind it, by sending to Montenegro the letter aforesaid, and other letters, by himself and his agent, to that effect," and that "Montenegro accepted said rescission, and agreed to repay said Forbes said sum due him." And as a conclusion of law, the Court found that plaintiffs were entitled to a conveyance of the property from the defendant, upon the payment to him of one thousand five hundred and fifty-two dollars and fifty cents, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum, from March 4th, 1849, and that defendant should be enjoined from setting up any claim or title thereto, adverse to plaintiffs. In accordance with these findings, a decree was entered; and a motion for new trial having been overruled, defendant appealed from the judgment and order.

Argument for Appellant.

Wilson & Crittenden, for Appellant.

The findings are not only unsustained by the evidence, or by any particle of evidence, but are in direct conflict with the evidence, and entirely negatived and disproved by it. The main and material error into which the Court fell was that there ever was any understanding or agreement whatever in respect to any right of rescission on the part of Forbes, or any rescission consented to by Forbes. There is no room for doubt or misunderstanding about the meaning of this contract, or the intention and objects of the parties, in entering into it. Montenegro's object was to sell the land for the sum mentioned. Forbes' object was to buy it for that sum, if, after inquiry, he should be satisfied in respect to its quality and the title of the vendor. Neither party contemplated a loan or borrowing of money on the land itself. And afterwards Montenegro actually did sell the land, and executed his deed of it, in which he refers to the contract, and recites that it had been executed in due form.

After the execution of the deed, the contract out of which it grew had no longer any existence. It was then carried into execution, and the parties discharged from all further obligations upon it. The right on the part of Forbes to decline the purchase and demand his money was gone the moment he accepted the deed, and Castro, who had been security for its return, was then absolved from liability. Thenceforth Forbes was the absolute owner of the land.

The title to the land having thus been vested in Forbes, absolutely, how did he ever become converted into a trustee, holding it for the benefit of Montenegro? None of the letters and none of the testimony has any tendency to prove anything of the kind in the remotest degree. The letter of July 1st, 1849, upon which the finding of rescission purports to have been based, was evidently in answer to a proposition made by Montenegro to return the money and take back the land. Forbes by this letter simply expresses assent, and says: "Pay at once and our contract shall be null; pay to James Alexander Forbes. I will advise him to this effect."

John Currey, for Respondents.

In 1848, at the time of making the contract with Forbes, Montenegro was a Mexican soldier in actual service against the United States. He wanted money and he had no security to offer except an imperfect grant to land in a State at that time in the possession of the enemy, and the war actually going on. A mortgage on the property could not be foreclosed, and the contract itself would be void and could not be enforced in California. There remained no way but to give the transaction the character of a sale. They intended to give that character to it, and did, and the transaction is a bargain and sale, and the last instrument is an escritura deventa, and vested in Forbes the title (titulo), but not the estate (dominio).

If the act of sale had been absolute there would have been no object in the provision contained in the instrument itself, that the contract of sale should be annexed to the testimonio. "Consenting that the obligation referred to for what it may import to the purchaser, be annexed to this writing."

It is not proper to call the escritura a deed, because it differs essentially from our deed. Our deed conveys the estate; the Spanish escritura does not; no estate passes by the writing. We call our conveyance properly a deed, because it is not a contract, but an act factum. By its own force it transfers the estate. But under the Spanish law the estate passed by delivery of possession, as it did anciently under the common law by livery of seizin. Both laws were originally the same; the common law has changed, the civil has not. There was no such thing as a deed in the civil or Spanish law. There was no law that required a conveyance to be in writing—a verbal sale of land, accompanied by delivery, passed the title dominio—a written contract would not pass the title without delivery of possession, nor would it pass the title without payment of the consideration money. (Alvarez, Derecho Real, Lib. 2, Part II, Sec. 3; Lib. 2, Tit. I, Part II, Sec. 7; Sala, Ilustracion del Derecho Real, Lib. 2, Tit. I, Sec. 20; Lib. 2, Tit. XVI; Merle v. Matthews, 26 Cal. 673.)

If the sale was complete, Montenegro would have insisted upon the payment of the price. It is admitted in the pleadings, and shown by the evidence, that the two thousand dollars were not paid; that a balance thereof remained unpaid. According to the Spanish law, the title did not pass until the price was paid. This law is as old as the Partidas, and is repeated in every code and text book down to the present day.

The letters and the parol evidence show that the transaction, though in form a sale, was not absolute. Forbes always speaks of the money given to Montenegro as an advance, and never as a payment. He sometimes calls it the debt of Montenegro to him.

Again: Whatever may have been the fact as to the continuance of the original contract or the purpose of the act of sale, there can be no doubt from the evidence that there was a contract between Montenegro and Forbes, by the terms of which Forbes had the right to rescind the contract and demand back his money. And it is plain that Forbes availed himself of his right to rescind, and did rescind, the contract. He said that he would not pay the balance; he demanded a return of his advances; and he annulled the contract. He said, "Our contract remains null;" in other words, our trade is at an end. (See Foster v. Nelson, 2 Peters, 306; United States v. Perchman, 7 Peters, 86.)

The effect of the rescission of the contract by Forbes was to reverse the relation of the parties. Montenegro became the debtor to Forbes for the money advanced, and Forbes became creditor of Montenegro for the same, with a lien on the land for repayment. The relation which was thus created conferred the rights upon each other which pertained to that relation, and neither party could deprive the other of his rights without his consent.

After the cause had been argued and submitted, the Supreme Court directed a reargument upon the following questions:

First—Upon what particular ground of equity jurisdiction, does the complaint here rest?

Second—Was Forbes, in the first, and Morenhout in the second instance, a purchaser from Montenegro of a new (mere) equity?

Third—Supposing Barron to have subsequently obtained the legal title from the United States, as the conferee of this equity, if it was one, what circumstances disclosed it inequitable for him to retain that title for himself?

Fourth—Supposing, however, that the parties dealt with the legal title in the first instance, and that Morenhout was a subsequent purchaser of that title, in good faith, for a valuable consideration, and without notice of the previous conveyance made to Forbes, is he entitled, upon that ground, to maintain this bill for equitable relief?

B. S. Brooks, for Respondents, on reargument, in answer to the first question, made citations from 2 Story's Eq. Jur. 976, 1,059; Bagnell v. Broderick, 13 Peters, 450; Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 272; Garland v. Wynn, 20 How. 8; Townsend v. Greeley, 5 Wallace, 335; Salmon v. Symonds, 30 Cal. 306; Wilson v. Castro, 31 Cal. 434; O'Connell v. Dougherty, 32 Cal. 459; Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 262.

Argument for Appellant.

In answer to the second question, counsel contended that the subject of sale by Montenegro was a Mexican concession under the colonization law, and should be considered as addressed to a Mexican tribunal; and that in a country where the distinction between legal and equitable titles is unknown, no answer could be given to it. He claimed that the right was a legal one, and cited Fremont v. United States, 17 How. 557; 13 Peters, 454; Wilcox v. Jackson, 18 Pet. 516; Wilson v. Castro, 31 Cal. 437.

In answer to the third question, counsel referred to the authorities cited, to the effect that whenever a party has obtained a confirmation of a title or concession which legally or equitably belongs to another, whether that confirmation is obtained innocently or wrongfully, in good faith or in bad faith, a Court of equity holds it to be inequitable for him to retain the title, and will decree him to convey it to the real owner.

In answer to the fourth question, counsel contended that Morenhout would unquestionably be the owner of the land, and that it would be his title which was confirmed; and he cited Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 263.

Wilson & Crittenden, for Appellant, on reargument.

The protection given by equity to a purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice, is invoked in favor of a defendant. The title of such a purchaser has been said to be a shield to defend his own possession, not a sword to attack the possession of others. (Patterson v. Slaughter, Ambler, 292; Strode v. Blackburn, 3 Vea. Jr. 225; Beekman v. Frost, 18 Johns. 544; 1 Cow. 642; 2 Sugd. on Vendors, 572; 2 Leading Cases in Eq. 60; 10 Pet. 210.)

The complaint falls far short of the requirements of a plea setting up such a defense. Among other things, it ignores entirely the deed of August 7th, 1848, executed in pursuance of the prior agreement, and, throughout, places Forbes, and Barron, his successor in interest, in the position of having no other interest in or claim to the land than such as might arise out of the agreement. Instead of stating the title of Barron as it was known to the plaintiffs when the action commenced—that is, instead of alleging that there had been, in 1847, an agreement between Montenegro and Forbes for the sale and purchase of the land, and a year afterwards that agreement had been carried into effect, and a deed made by Montenegro to Forbes; and, claiming under that deed, Forbes had presented the title and procured its confirmation to himself; and then, after setting up the defendants' title truly, proceeding to show the supposed better right of the plaintiffs, and explicitly denying notice of the title of Forbes and Barron, the complaint ignores the deed altogether, and sets up the old contract as still subsisting, and as the only source of right in the defendant. In short, it asserts for the defendant a title not claimed by him, and then proceeds to demolish it.

B. S. Brooks, for Respondents, in reply.

The bill was substantially a bill to redeem. We set forth in detail the history of the transaction; but the substance of the whole is, that the defendant holds a conveyance of the property as security for the repayment of a certain sum due from the late Eugenio Montenegro to defendant's assignor, and the plaintiffs, as assignees of Montenegro, have offered to pay that sum with interest, and all expenses, which the defendant declines to receive. We are ready and willing to pay, and ask that he may be compelled, on receipt of this money, to convey to us. We ask to redeem.

A decree was entered, and a motion for a new trial having been overruled, defendant appealed from the judgment and order.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

One of the questions which the Court proposed to counsel on the reargument was: Upon what particular ground of equity jurisdiction does the complaint rest? In view of the peculiar circumstances of the case, and of the numerous positions taken by the plaintiffs, it was very proper that they should state the ground, or if they proceeded on more than one theory, the grounds on which they claimed relief. Instead of responding directly to the question, they have furnished us with long citations from the opinions in numerous cases in equity, in which questions similar to those discussed by counsel in this case were considered. They have in effect replied: The books furnish an answer to the question.

Whatever may have been the grounds upon which the plaintiffs claimed relief, it is apparent from the findings of fact and conclusions of law that the Court tried the cause, and rendered judgment for the plaintiffs, on the theory that the deed of Montenegro to Forbes, of August 7th, 1848, had been rescinded, and that thereafter Forbes, and, after the conveyance by Forbes to Barron, the latter, held the title (including whatever was acquired by means of the confirmation of the title) in trust for Morenhout and his co-plaintiffs. The case will be considered on that theory.

The grant to Montenegro, whatever may be its character as to being inchoate or imperfect, passed to him a legal title. That is the position of the plaintiffs, and it is not controverted by the defendant. (See Freemont v. U. S., 17 How. 557; Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 270; Wilson v. Castro, 31 Cal. 437.) Indeed, that position is sustained by all the cases in which a recovery in ejectment on Mexican grants has been had.

The contract of August 23d, 1847, of Montenegro with Forbes, for the conveyance of the rancho to Forbes, it is not doubted was in all respects valid, and gave Forbes the right to a conveyance, when he should become satisfied in respect to the quality, situation, and title of the rancho, and pay the remainder of the purchase money. He could, of course, waive the inquiry as to those matters, and take a conveyance of the rancho, if he so elected, without any investigation, or a complete investigation, as to the title, quality, or situation of the rancho, for that provision in the contract was intended solely for his protection.

The deed of 1848 was executed under and in pursuance of that contract. By the execution of the deed all the purposes of the contract were accomplished. It no longer remained as a subsisting contract. The provision in the deed, that the contract should be attached to the deed, did not have the effect to keep the contract on foot. It amounted to no more than would a recital that the deed was made in pursuance and in performance of the terms of the contract. It makes no difference what may have been the understanding of the parties at the time the deed was executed, as to the right of Forbes to make a further examination in respect to the title or situation of the rancho; for it is a matter of legal construction that, upon the execution of the deed, all the title that Montenegro then held passed to and vested absolutely in Forbes.

What has just been said develops a point which, in our opinion, is decisive of the appeal, on the theory on which it was tried by the Court below. The plaintiffs set up the contract of 1847, and allege that prior to Montenegro's return from Tepic to California, which was in 1848, it was agreed between him and Forbes that the latter should inquire into the condition of the title, etc., of the rancho, and if dissatisfied with the title, might rescind the sale; and that Forbes made inquiries as to the title, became dissatisfied therewith, and elected to rescind the sale. The precise date of the agreement mentioned in the complaint, giving Forbes the right to rescind, is not averred, and as no facts are stated by which such agreement can be distinguished from that which is mentioned in the contract of 1847 — that contract in effect giving Forbes the right to rescind, if dissatisfied with the title, quality, or situation of the rancho — the complaint will be construed as referring to the agreement contained in the contract. And the sale, which it is alleged Forbes had the right to rescind, is evidently the sale evidenced by the contract of 1847. This conclusion is strengthened by the admission of the plaintiffs, in one of their briefs, that they did not know of the deed of 1848 until after the commencement of the action. The Court finds the making of the contract of 1847, the execution and delivery of the deed of 1848; that there was an agreement contemporaneous with the execution of the deed by which Forbes had the right to rescind the sale; and that he exercised that right, and rescinded the sale. The finding, both as to the agreement reserving to Forbes the right to rescind the sale, and as to the rescission in fact, cannot be sustained for several reasons. The complaint does not aver the agreement reserving the right to rescind, which is found by the Court. Nor does the complaint aver that the sale, which is evidenced by the deed of 1848, was rescinded; but rather that which is mentioned in the contract of 1847, while the finding evidently has reference to the deed of 1848. A finding is useless and idle, unless the facts found are within the issues; and a judgment based upon such facts cannot be sustained. It is very apparent from the finding, and in some degree from the evidence, that the plaintiffs might, with propriety, have obtained leave to amend, so as to have made their attack upon the deed of 1848, instead of alleging that the contract of 1847 was rescinded — the latter after the execution of the deed being no longer a subsisting contract, and being for every purpose, except to show what were its terms, functus officio. The allegation and proof by the defendants of the deed of 1848 ended all question as to the rescission of the contract of 1847. The deed of 1848 not having been attacked, it is impossible, in the present state of the pleadings, for the plaintiffs to maintain the position that any equity in favor of Montenegro arose out of the rescission alleged in the complaint—the rescission of the contract of 1847.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

B. POPPE v. P. A. ATHEARN, AND P. A. ATHEARN
v. B. POPPE.

FAILURE TO FILE PRE-EMPTION CLAIM.—One who settles on unsurveyed public land as a pre-emptioner, but who fails to file with the Register of the proper Land Office his declaratory statement within three months after the plat of survey of the land is filed in the Register's office, loses his pre-emption claim, as against one who in the meantime has taken the necessary steps to acquire the title to the land.

EVIDENCE OF FILING PAPER.—An indorsement on the plat of the survey of public land, that it was filed in the Land Office on a day named therein, which is not signed by any one, will, in the absence of other evidence on the subject, be taken as fixing the time of filing the plat.

WHO CAN COMPLAIN OF JUDGMENT.—A party to a judgment who has not appealed will not be heard to allege errors in the Court below.

For RHODES, J., NILES, J., concurring:

MAKING HOLDER OF UNITED STATES TITLE TRUSTEE FOR HOLDER OF STATE TITLE TO LAND.—One who purchases public land from the State, as a part of the five hundred thousand acres to which it became entitled by the Act of Congress of April 4th, 1841, cannot claim the benefit of a patent for the same land, issued by the United States to another person as a pre-emption, and make him his trustee holding the legal title.

REGULATIONS FOR DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS.—The Commissioner of the General Land Office has authority to make regulations respecting the disposal of the public lands, and such regulations, when not repugnant to the Acts of Congress, have the force and effect of laws.

CONSENT OF UNITED STATES TO ENTRY OF LAND BY STATE.—A certificate of the Register of United States lands, issued to one who applies to him to locate a State land warrant on public land, that he approves of the location by the State, is a legal and valid consent of the United States to such location, because it is prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It is also correct to surrender to the Register the State land warrant.

SURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS.—The provisions of the Act of May 3d, 1852, for the survey of public land by County Surveyors, apply to such lands only as have not been surveyed by the United States.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

The Court below gave judgment in favor of Poppe in the ejectment suit, and dismissed Athearn's bill in equity against Poppe. Athearn appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice CROCKETT, which is here published.

George Cadwalader, for Appellant, argued that as the State patent to Athearn was issued in accordance with the laws of the State, it was valid, and that it devolved on the State to provide for the selection of lands donated to it, and cited Megerle v. Ashe, 27 Cal. 325; Lester's Land Laws, p. 61, Sec. 8; Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 262; Cooper v. Roberts, 18 Howard, U. S., 176.

G. W. Tyler, for Respondent.

By the Act of April 16th, 1859 (Hittell's Dig. Art. 4044), under which appellant's patent was issued, the patent was not entitled to issue, unless the location was made by the State, with the consent of the Register and Receiver of the United States Land Office (Hittell's Dig. Art. 4045), and the certificate shows that the assent of the Register only was obtained, which was insufficient to warrant the issuance of the patent.

of the township in which the lands in controversy are situated, but the evidence tending to show the time is recited in the finding. That consisted of the unsigned indorsement on the plat: "Filed in Marysville Land Office, December 5th, 1855" — the same indorsement which was in controversy in Megerle v. Ashe, 27 Cal. 322, and the subsequent appeal in the same case. The Court also found that the Register and Receiver, on the 15th of February, 1856, published a notice requiring all persons claiming rights of pre-emption to file their declaratory statements on or before the 15th day of May, 1856. This finding is attacked, as unsupported by the evidence. The record contains no evidence tending to prove that fact. Both parties proceed on the theory that the plat was filed in the Register's office. The indorsement, though slight evidence — as was held in Megerle v. Ashe, 33 Cal. 74 — will, in the absence of other evidence, be taken as fixing the time of the filing of the plat. Poppe's declaratory statement having been filed on the 16th of April, 1856 — which was more than three months after the filing of the plat — came too late to preserve his pre-emption claim as against one who had, in the meantime, taken the necessary steps to acquire the title to the land.

Poppe insists that the indorsement on the plat was not given in evidence; but, as he has not appealed, he is not in a position to allege that the Court erred in reciting the indorsement in the finding.

The purpose of the suit brought by Athearn against Poppe is, to compel Poppe to convey to Athearn the legal title to the premises in controversy, on the alleged ground of fraud on the part of Poppe in perfecting his pre-emption claim, and, in pursuance thereof, in procuring a patent from the United States. A conclusive answer to the position of Athearn is, that he claims not as a pre-emptioner, but as a purchaser from the State; and as such he is not entitled to a patent from the General Government, and, therefore, cannot claim the benefit of the patent issued to Poppe. That suit was properly dismissed.

The questions discussed at the last argument were whether the surrender of the land warrant and the issuing of the Register's certificate were authorized by any law then in force, and whether a location so made authorized the issuing of a patent. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has authority to make regulations respecting the disposal of the public lands, and such regulations, when not repugnant to the Acts of Congress, have the force and effect of laws. In the letter of the Commissioner of the 14th of February, 1854, addressed to the Register of the Land Office at Benicia, he refused to return the warrant to the person who had located it on a tract of land, and directed the Register in such case to issue to the person locating a warrant, a certificate of location. The Commissioner described the form of the certificate, and that form was adopted in this instance, and generally in all other cases of the location of warrants since that time.

Those instructions recognize the surrender of the warrants as the correct practice, and make the certificates issued thereupon by the Register legal and valid. Those certificates of location become the basis of the patents issued by the State. Leaving out of view the question whether the patent should issue before the lands have been listed to the State by the Land Department — as the question has not been discussed in this case — there seems to be no valid ground for saying that the Register's certificate is not sufficient to authorize the proper officers of the State Government to take the requisite steps for the issuing of the patent. The provisions of the Act of May 8d, 1852, for the survey of the lands by the County Surveyor, and all the proceedings founded on such survey, are applicable only to unsurveyed lands. The observance of those provisions would be useless and vain where the lands have been surveyed by the United States.

Judgment in Athearn v. Poppe affirmed, and judgment in Poppe v. Athearn reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

I concur in the judgment on the grounds stated in the opinion which I have heretofore delivered in this case.

Mr. Justice WALLACE being disqualified, did not sit in these cases.

[The opinion to which Mr. Justice CROCKETT refers in his concurring opinion was filed at the April Term, 1868, and was concurred in by SAWYER, C. J., SANDERSON, J., RHODES, J., and SPRAGUE, J. The Court afterwards granted a rehearing, and the foregoing opinion was delivered after reargument. The following is the opinion delivered at the April Term, 1868, and to which reference is made as containing the facts of the case. After a rehearing the first opinion is understood to be no longer the opinion of the Court, unless it is adopted in the subsequent opinion.—REPORTER.]

By CROCKETT, J.:

The respondent, Poppe, brought ejectment against the appellant Athearn to recover a tract of land in San Joaquin County, in which action an answer was filed denying title in the plaintiff, and setting up title in fee in the defendant. During the pendency of this action the defendant filed his bill in equity against the plaintiff, setting forth in substance that the land in contest, which is the southeast quarter of section eleven, township four north, range eight east, was, in the year 1850, in the actual and exclusive occupation of

Opinion of Crockett, J.

Elliott and Loring; that Loring conveyed his interest in the tract to Elliott, and in March, 1852, Elliott conveyed to Vance; that Vance was the owner of a school land warrant issued under the Act to provide for the disposal of the five hundred thousand acres to which this State became entitled under the Act of Congress of April 4th, 1841; that in accordance with the Act of the Legislature, Vance located his warrant on the land in contest; that subsequently the United States caused the land to be surveyed and sectionized, and the plat of the survey was filed in the proper United States Land Office on the 5th December, 1855; that on the 10th March, 1856, Vance applied to the proper United States Register to locate his warrant on the quarter section in dispute; that the location was approved by the Register, who, on that day, issued his certificate to that effect to Vance, and the warrant was thereupon surrendered and canceled; that Vance afterwards assigned the certificate to the appellant Athearn, who, on the 8th January, 1862, obtained a patent from the State; that in 1851 the respondent Poppe occupied for a time a cabin on this tract, as the tenant of Elliott and Loring, but in September, 1852, left the cabin and moved into a house he had built on the adjoining quarter in section ten, where he continued to reside until October, 1855, when he sold his improvements on section ten and moved back to the quarter section in contest on section eleven, into a house he had erected thereon, and on the 16th April, 1856, filed in the proper Land Office a notice of his intention to claim as a pre-emptor the quarter section in contest; that by the laws of the United States he was not entitled to pre-empt the land, and the appellant was entitled to hold it under his school land warrant; but notwithstanding all the facts above stated and with a full knowledge of them, the Secretary of the Interior, in violation of law, awarded the land to the respondent as a pre-emptor, who subsequently, in 1863, obtained from the United States a patent therefor; that the respondent is in possession of forty-seven acres, and the appellant of the remainder of the quarter section, on which he has erected permanent and valuable improvements; that the respondent had commenced an action of ejectment against the appellant to recover the whole quarter section, relying on the patent from the United States as conclusive evidence of title; that said patent is a cloud on appellant's title, and was fraudulently obtained and issued in violation of law. The prayer of the complaint is that the respondent be decreed to release his title to the appellant, and for an injunction against the ejectment suit.

The answer denies the possession of Elliott and Loring, the deraignment of title from them to appellant, the issuing of the school land warrant and the location thereof by Vance; it also denied that the respondent ever occupied the land as the tenant of Elliott and Loring, or that the township plat was filed in the Land Office on the 5th December, 1855, or at any time earlier than March 1st, 1856. In short, it denies every material averment of the complaint, and sets up, as affirmative matter, that he settled upon the land as a pre-emptor and was entitled by law to pre-empt it, and, after complying with the requirements of the law in that respect, obtained his patent therefor; that appellant contested his rights before the Land Department, and that all questions of fact in regard to the settlement, residence, and bona fides of the respondent were heard and decided by the proper officers of the United States; after which hearing the land was awarded to the respondent; and thereafter the appellant, by perjury and fraud, procured a patent to be issued to him by the State of California.

The two actions were heard together before the Court without a jury.

In its findings the Court finds that there was no fraud on the part of Poppe in obtaining his patent, and also the following facts:

Opinion of Crockett, J.

First—That in August, 1851, Poppe settled upon the quarter section in controversy, which was then unsurveyed public land of the United States, and has ever since been in the exclusive possession of about forty-seven acres thereof.

Second—That said land was surveyed by the United States in the Summer of 1855, and the township plat was duly filed in the proper Land Office; that, after the filing of the plat, the Register and Receiver, on the 15th of February, 1856, gave notice through the public press (being the first notice given in the premises), requiring preëmptioners to appear and file their preëmption claims on or before the 15th of May, 1856, and that Poppe filed his notice on the 16th of April, 1856.

Third—That the only evidence produced as to the date at which the township plat was filed in the Land Office was an indorsement on the plat itself of the words: "Filed in Marysville Land Office, December 5th, 1856," which indorsement was not signed by any one, and there was no evidence to show when, or by whom, or by whose authority the indorsement was made; that Athearn was in possession of all the quarter section, except the forty-seven acres in possession of Poppe.

Fourth—That prior to the Government survey, to wit, in December, 1852, Vance being then in possession of one hundred and thirteen acres of the tract, located a school land warrant on that quarter section; and after the survey, to wit, March 10th, 1856, applied to the United States Register for permission to locate it on the same quarter section, and surrendered the warrant to be canceled; whereupon the Register approved the location, and issued his certificate to that effect; after which Vance assigned the certificate to Athearn, who afterward, to wit, on the 8th of January, 1862, obtained a patent from the State.

Fifth—That Athearn and Poppe, pending the proceedings before the United States Land Department, both appeared and litigated their rights, and after the decision in favor of Poppe, a patent was issued to him in October, 1863.

Sixth—That for a long time prior to and ever since the date of the patent to Poppe, Athearn was in the actual possession of the one hundred and thirteen acres, claiming title in himself; and the Court finds the value of the rents and improvements.

As a conclusion of law, the Court finds that Poppe is entitled to judgment for the possession, and for the value of the rents, and judgment was entered accordingly.

The appellant moved to correct the findings, and submitted to the Court a series of findings, which, in the main, were not only different from, but, in some respects, contradictory to the findings of the Court. The Court refused to change or modify its findings, and the appellant excepted.

A motion for new trial was made by appellant, which was denied by the Court, and the case comes here on appeal from the judgment as well as from the order denying the motion for new trial.

The first point to be considered is, whether or not Athearn can appeal to a Court of equity, upon the facts stated in his complaint, to revise the decision of the Secretary of the Interior in respect to the preliminary steps which were necessary to be performed by Poppe to entitle him to a patent on his application for a preëmption.

In cases of fraud there can be no doubt that a Court of equity will give relief, not only when the officers of the Government have been parties to the fraud, but also when they have been made the innocent instruments of perpetrating a wrong by means of the fraudulent practices of others. Hence it has been held that when the United States Register and Receiver have been imposed upon by false affidavits or perjured witnesses, whereby the land has been awarded and patented to the wrong person, the Courts will interfere and redress the wrong. Otherwise there could be no relief in such cases. (Garland v. Wynn, 20 How. 6; Lytle v. State of Arkansas, 22 How. 192.) But even in cases of fraud the Court will not, in a collateral action, go behind the patent to inquire into the regularity or sufficiency of the preliminary proceedings, except at the instance of an adverse claimant, who has acquired an equity in the land which entitles him to protection. Whenever such equities exist, a Court of equity will look behind the patent and award the legal title to the party holding the oldest and best equity.

Even in actions at law, where there are conflicting patents for the same land, the Court will go behind the patents to ascertain which party had the prior equity; and if the junior patent is founded on the prior equity, it will take effect by relation from the time when the equity accrued, and override an older patent founded on a junior equity. (Ross v. Barland, 1 Pet. 655; Bagnall v. Broderick, 13 Pet. 436; Smith v. Athearn, 34 Cal. 506.)

In the case under consideration, Athearn had the oldest patent, founded on his school land warrant, which was located on the 10th of March, 1856, after the lands had been duly surveyed. In the action of ejectment, without the aid of a bill in equity, the production of his patent and proof of the location of the warrant, after the survey, would have established a prima facie case as against Poppe's junior patent, standing alone, and without proof of the preliminary acts on which the patent was founded.

This rendered it necessary for Poppe to support his patent by proof of the preliminary steps, in order to show that, before the location of the school land warrant, he had acquired an equity in the land which exempted it from location under the school land warrant.

It was, therefore, competent and proper for the Court to hear proof on that subject, in order to ascertain which party had the prior equity. To establish Poppe's prior equity, it was incumbent on him to show at what date he commenced to perform the series of acts which culminated in his patent. The patent itself, without further proof, raises a presumption that he possessed the proper status as a pre-emptioner, and had performed the necessary acts to entitle him to a patent; but it raises no presumption as to the time at which the performance of the acts commenced; and all the presumptions arising from the patent were liable to be rebutted by proof.

In respect to the time at which Poppe performed the first act, the Court finds that he "settled upon" the land in August, 1851, and from that time up to the trial had been in the exclusive possession of forty-seven acres of the tract. It does not find that he ever resided on the tract, unless that is to be inferred from the term "settled upon," nor does it find that he erected a dwelling house, or other improvements, or ever cultivated any portions of the premises.

The incipient steps toward a valid pre-emption claim are that the party shall "cultivate and improve the same," and "shall erect a dwelling thereon." This is expressly required by the tenth section of the Act of Congress of September 4th, 1841. Without a performance of these acts there can be no valid foundation of a pre-emption claim.

But although the findings are silent on these points, the "Act to regulate appeals in this State," approved May 20th, 1861 (Stats. 1861, p. 589), which was in force when this case was tried, provides that "in cases tried by the Court, without a jury, no judgment shall be reversed for want of a finding, or for a defective finding of the facts, unless exceptions be made in the Court below to the finding or the want of a finding;" and the statute points out how defective findings may be remedied.

In construing this statute we have repeatedly held that where the findings are silent as to material facts necessary to support the judgment, and no effort is made to correct them, we will presume in aid of the judgment that the necessary facts were proved, unless the contrary appears. (Hidden v. Jordan, 28 Cal. 301; Lucas v. San Francisco, 28 Cal. 591; James v. Williams, 31 Cal. 213; Lyons v. Leimbach, 29 Cal. 139.)

It follows that if Athearn intended to controvert the fact that Poppe had resided upon the land, and erected a dwelling thereon, prior to the time when Vance's equity accrued, and if he believed that these facts were not proved on the trial, he should have moved to correct the findings in that respect; and if the Court refused to find at all on the point, or found contrary to the evidence, the statute points out the remedy.

But as the case is now presented, we must assume, in support of the judgment, that these essential facts were proved, inasmuch as Athearn did not except to the findings in this particular.

In this view of the case it would be our duty to affirm the judgment, if no error had occurred in denying the motion for new trial.

But the Court finds facts sufficient to show that the township plat was filed in the office of the Register and Receiver on the 5th of December, 1855; and it finds as a further fact, that the Register and Receiver, "on the 15th of February, 1856, gave notice through the public press," for the first time, that all persons claiming preëmption rights upon any of the lands in that township should appear and file their notice of preëmption on or before the 15th of May, 1856.

One of the grounds for new trial was that the Court failed to find it as a fact that the township plat was filed in the office of the Register and Receiver on the 5th December, 1855, and that there was no evidence to support the finding that the Register and Receiver published the notice on the 15th of February, 1856, as set forth in the finding.

Opinion of Crockett, J.

These grounds for a new trial were well taken. Instead of finding distinctly, as it should have done on the evidence, at what date the township plat was filed, the Court only reports the evidence on that point; and in respect to the publication of the notice by the Register and Receiver to preëmptioners, we find no evidence whatever in the record to support the finding on that branch of the case. These were material facts, which may be decisive of the action; for if the township plat was filed on the 5th of December, 1855, and notice thereof was immediately given by the Register and Receiver, then the notice of his intention to claim a preëmption, which was filed by Poppe on the 15th April, 1856, came too late. The Act of Congress of March 3d, 1853, regulating the survey of public lands in California, provides that the declaratory statement must be filed within three months after the return of the township plat to the Land Office, and there is no authority in the Land Department to dispense with this condition. (Megerle v. Ashe, 33 Cal. 74.)

It was, therefore, a most material fact to ascertain whether or not Poppe's notice was filed within the proper time; and in order to do this, it is necessary to ascertain with certainty when the township plat was filed, and when the notice to preëmptioners was published — if any such notice was published; of which fact, however, there is no proof in the record.

For the reasons stated above the Court below ought to have granted the motion for a new trial.

The counsel for the respondent has pressed upon our consideration, with much earnestness, the proposition that both the appellant and the respondent having appeared before the United States Land Department, and litigated their respective rights, the appellant is estopped thereby from requiring further proof that the respondent has the prior equity to the land.

Statement of Facts.

We deem it proper to say for the guidance of the District Court on another trial, that we do not acquiesce in his view of the law. The Land Department had no power to adjudicate the rights of the appellant. After his warrant was located and canceled, and the location approved by the Register, the equity of the appellant attached; and it was not in the power of the Land Department to detract from or add to his rights. His appearance before the Land officers of the United States could confer upon them no jurisdiction, where none existed by law. (Megerle v. Ashe, supra.) It follows that their decision was not obligatory upon him, and so far as it affected his rights was coram non judice.

Judgment and order denying a new trial reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

SURVEY OF MEXICAN GRANTS.—The proceedings of the District Court of the United States under the Act of Congress of June 14th, 1860, relative to surveys of Mexican grants of land, are of a judicial nature.

WAIVER OF AN ESTOPPEL.—A party who has a judgment in his favor which would be an estoppel, may waive the benefits of the estoppel, in a case in which it is set up as a bar, by consenting in open Court to a judgment, notwithstanding the estoppel.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Tenth Judicial District, Yuba County.

Ejectment for part of lot number six, in block number six, in the Town of Colusa. The defendant recovered judgment in the Court below, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion, and in Yates v. Smith, 40 Cal. 662; and same case, 88 Cal. 60. The cases of Semple, per se, and L. J. Ashford and Jo Hamilton, for Appellant.

W. C. Belcher, and W. F. Goad, for Respondent.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The opinion in Yates v. Smith, 40 Cal. 662, disposes of all the points made upon this appeal except the fifth, which is that "the Court erred in giving a judgment in favor of defendant, the plaintiff holding the older and superior title." We shall concede, for the purposes of the appeal, that this point is properly presented by the record.

The plaintiff claims under a final decree of the District Court of the United States, made on the 2d day of February, 1861, confirming the survey of the Colus Rancho. The defendant claims under a final decree of the same Court, made on the 6th day of April, 1861, confirming the survey of the Jimeno Rancho, and also a patent from the United States following the decree. The surveys conflict, and the land in controversy is included within the boundaries of both surveys.

The date of the original grant of the Colus Rancho does not appear; nor does the date of the Jimeno grant appear, otherwise than from a recital of the patent which names November 4th, 1844, as the date of the Mexican grant to Manuel Jimeno. We have no information of the proceedings at the adjudication of the Colus survey, or of the parties thereto, except that derived from the fact that the survey was approved and confirmed to the plaintiff on a certain day. During the pendency of proceedings in the District Court upon the survey of the Jimeno Rancho, the plaintiff, to whom the Colus Rancho had then been finally confirmed, intervened and filed exceptions to the survey, alleging, among other facts, that the survey of the Jimeno Rancho presented for confirmation was not properly located; that it covered two leagues of the Colus grant, which had been finally confirmed to him; that he believed that the title to the Colus grant was superior to that of the Jimeno grant to the same land, etc., and praying that the survey be ordered to be returned into Court for its adjudication and decision. On the day of the rendition of the final decree the plaintiff (then intervenor) appeared personally, and in open Court consented to the decree and the official survey.

The decision of the case depends upon the relative values of the several decrees of confirmation. There can be no doubt that the proceedings of a District Court under the Act of Congress of June 14th, 1860, are of a judicial nature. We may admit for the purposes of this case that the decree rendered in the matter of the Colus survey was conclusive as a judgment upon all parties in interest who either did intervene, or who might have intervened, in that proceeding, in accordance with the provisions of the Act; and that the plaintiff could have availed himself of this decree by way of a plea in bar, or as conclusive evidence of title, in the subsequent proceedings for the confirmation of the Jimeno survey. But a party may waive the benefit of an estoppel in his favor; and the failure of the plaintiff to present this plea in his intervention, and his consent in open Court to the decree as entered, was a waiver of this right. (Semple v. Wright, 32 Cal. 668.)

The result is not changed, if we consider the decree of confirmation of the Colus survey as being for all purposes equivalent to a patent from the United States. The holder of the best title is bound to exhibit and prove it in proceedings adverse to that title, and to which he is a party. By withholding his title, and formally consenting to a decree in favor of the claimants under the Jimeno grant, which would be equivalent to a patent in their hands, the plaintiff lost the power to assert his claim, as against them, to the land in controversy.

Judgment affirmed, as of the 1st day of February, 1872.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
FREDERICK W. CLARKE.

CRIMINAL LAW — ORDER RESUBMITTING CASE TO GRAND JURY NOT APPEALABLE.—An order of a County Court directing that a criminal charge ignored by one Grand Jury be submitted to another, is not an appealable order.

CRIMINAL "INTERMEDIATE ORDERS" NOT APPEALABLE.—By the provisions of section four hundred and eighty-four of the Criminal Practice Act, to the effect that intermediate orders or proceedings forming part of the record of a criminal case may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment, it was clearly intended to prohibit a separate appeal from such intermediate orders or proceedings.

CRIMINAL ORDERS, AFTER FINAL JUDGMENT, APPEALABLE.—That portion of section four hundred and eighty-one of the Criminal Practice Act which authorizes an appeal from an order "which affects a substantial right in a criminal case amounting to felony," applies only to orders made after final judgment.

APPEAL from the County Court of Alameda County.

The defendant was arrested in February, 1871, for the murder, in Alameda County, of Zelotes Reed, and held to answer. At the next term of the County Court of that county the Grand Jury investigated the charge, and ignored the bill. The District Attorney afterwards moved to resubmit the charge to another Grand Jury; and the County Court, upon the ground that the defendant had been admitted to testify as a witness on his own behalf, and that the admission of such testimony by the Grand Jury was error, granted the motion. The defendant appealed from the order.

Alexander Campbell and H. S. Brown, for Appellant.

It was suggested in the Court below that the order was not appealable. But no motion has been made to dismiss the appeal on that ground, and we, therefore, infer that the objection is abandoned by the Attorney General. It may, however, be proper to state, briefly, the provisions of law upon the subject, and the construction which, in our opinion, should be given to them. Section four hundred and eighty-one of the Criminal Practice Act provides that "the party aggrieved may appeal to the Supreme Court from a final judgment of the District Court or County Court granting or refusing a new trial, or which affects a substantial right in a criminal case amounting to felony, on questions of law alone." Section two hundred and thirty-one provides that "the dismissal of the charge shall not, however, prevent the charge from being again submitted to a Grand Jury, or as often as the Court shall so direct. But without such direction it shall not be again submitted." The purpose of the law is obvious. It affords the defendant protection against repeated prosecutions after the charge against him has been once fairly investigated by the Grand Jury and dismissed; subject, however, to the power of the Court in the exercise of a legal discretion to resubmit the case whenever circumstances may arise rendering it proper to do so. The dismissal operates as a final judgment in his favor, which can only be reopened for a sufficient reason, and in the exercise of a legal, not an arbitrary, discretion. This view of the case was very properly concurred in by the Court below. (Belt v. Davies, 1 Cal. 134; Dowling v. Polack, 18 Cal. 625; People v. Young, 81 Cal. 563.)

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

Jo Hamilton, Attorney General, for Respondent.

The order in this case was not a final judgment, nor order made after final judgment, and was, therefore, not an appealable order. (Hitt. Dig. 2068; DeBarry v. Lambert, 10 Cal. 503; Moulton v. Ellmaker, 30 Cal. 529; People v. Thurston, 5 Cal. 517; People v. Ah Fough, 12 Cal. 424.)

The County Court had the authority, in its discretion, to order a resubmission of the case to another Grand Jury, and such an order, being one within the discretion of the County Court, is not a subject of review on appeal. And if such an order was made within the discretion of the Court, the reason for the order—being no part of the order—could not be a subject of review on this appeal. (Hitt. Dig. 1818, 1870, 1871, and 1872; Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 23.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The only question on this appeal which it is necessary to consider is, whether an order of the County Court, directing that a charge which has been ignored by a former Grand Jury be submitted to another Grand Jury, is, in any case, an appealable order. Section four hundred and eighty-one of the Criminal Practice Act provides that an appeal may be taken "to the Supreme Court from a final judgment of the District Court of County Court, in all criminal cases amounting to a felony on questions of law alone; also, from an order of the District Court or County Court granting or refusing a new trial, or which affects a substantial right in a criminal case amounting to a felony, on questions of law alone." Section four hundred and eighty-four provides that upon the appeal from the judgment any decision of the Court in an intermediate order or proceeding forming a part of the record may be revised.

In providing that intermediate orders or proceedings forming a part of the record may be reviewed on an appeal from the final judgment, it was clearly intended to prohibit a separate appeal from such intermediate orders or proceedings. Whether the intermediate orders and proceedings referred to are only those which occur between the finding of the indictment and the final judgment, or include also those which are preliminary to the indictment, such as the order appealed from in this case, or an order denying a challenge to a Grand Juror, or of the whole panel, need not be decided on this appeal. It will suffice to say on this point that if such preliminary orders and proceedings can be reviewed by this Court on appeal, it can only be on an appeal from the final judgment. Any other rule would lead to the greatest embarrassment and delay in the administration of justice in criminal cases. That portion of section four hundred and eighty-one which authorizes an appeal from an order "which affects a substantial right in a criminal case amounting to a felony," applies only to orders made after final judgment, which, of course, could not be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment. In several cases we have been called upon to review, on appeal, orders of this character, relating to the time, mode, and manner of executing the judgment. Upon this construction of the statute, its provisions are reasonable and consistent. All orders and proceedings occurring prior to the judgment, which it was intended should be subject to review by this Court, can be corrected on an appeal from the judgment, or from an order granting or refusing a new trial; whilst an order affecting a substantial right of a party, made after final judgment, can be reviewed on a direct appeal from the order. These views are decisive of this appeal, inasmuch as the order appealed from is not appealable.

Appeal dismissed.

HUGH HARVEY v. WILLIAM D. RYAN, JAMES LYNCH, JOHN TANEY, AND MICHAEL BRESNAN.

"MINING CUSTOMS" AS AGAINST WRITTEN "DISTRICT MINING LAWS."

— In an action for possession of a mining claim, where plaintiff relied upon a location under certain written rules adopted by the miners of the district some five years before, which did not require the posting of notices upon the claim at the time of location; and defendant offered to prove that there was a custom in the district requiring the posting of such notices; and the Court excluded the evidence on the ground that the written rules superseded any custom; held, that the exclusion of such evidence was error.

OBSERVED "MINING CUSTOMS" PREVAIL OVER DISREGARDED "DISTRICT MINING LAWS."

— Section six hundred and twenty-one of the Practice Act makes no distinction between the effect of a "custom" or "usage," the proof of which must rest in parol, and a "regulation" which may be adopted at a miners' meeting and embodied in a written local law; and a custom reasonable in itself, and generally observed, will prevail as against a written mining law fallen into disuse.

"DISTRICT MINING LAWS"—WHAT GIVES THEM VALIDITY.

— The rules adopted by the miners of a district acquire validity not from their mere enactment, but from the customary obedience and acquiescence of the miners following the enactment.

EXISTENCE OF "DISTRICT MINING LAW" A QUESTION OF FACT.

— As the "mining law" of a district must not only be established but in force, it is void whenever it falls into disuse or is generally disregarded; and the question whether it is in force at a given time is one of fact for the jury.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Second Judicial District, Butte County.

This was an action to recover possession of certain mining ground in Sawmill Ravine, Cherokee Flat District, Butte County, and five hundred dollars damages for alleged illegal detention. The defendants answered, fully denying the allegations of the complaint, and setting up title in themselves. The cause was tried before a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff for possession of the ground and one cent damages. Judgment having been entered in accordance with the verdict, and a new trial denied, the defendants appealed from the order.

Belcher & Belcher, for Appellants.

On the trial, defendants placed a witness on the stand and offered to prove by him, and several others, that, at the time plaintiff claimed to have located the ground, there was a custom in the mining district which required a party locating to post a notice of his claim upon the ground. The Court refused to permit the testimony to be given, on the ground that there were written rules in the district in force at that time. The evidence was clearly competent for the purpose of showing that a custom existed upon a subject not covered by the written rules, or that one had grown up subsequent to and in conflict with them.

Hammond & Stratton, for Respondent.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

This was an action of trespass involving the right to the possession of certain placer mining claims. The defendants claimed under a location purporting to have been made in May, 1858. The plaintiffs claimed a portion of the same ground under a location purporting to have been made in May, 1866.

It was proven at the trial that at a meeting of the miners of the mining district, held in November, 1861, certain written rules were adopted, regulating the manner of location and size of claims. These rules contained no requirement that notices should be posted upon the claims at the time of location. The defendants offered to prove by several witnesses that, at the time plaintiffs claimed to have located the ground, there was a custom in the mining district that required a party locating to post a notice of his claim upon the ground. The testimony was rejected upon the ground that there were written rules in force in that locality, and that those rules superseded any custom in regard to locating claims.

In this class of cases the statute authorizes proof "of the customs, usages, or regulations established and in force at the bar or diggings embracing such claims," and declares that "such customs, usages, and regulations * * * shall govern the decision of the action." (Practice Act, Sec. 3, p. 621.) No distinction is made by this statute between the effect of a "custom" or "usage," the proof of which must rest in parol, and a "regulation" which may be adopted at a miners' meeting and embodied in a written local law. This law does not, like a statute, acquire validity by the mere enactment, but from the customary obedience and acquiescence of the miners following its enactment. It is void whenever it falls into disuse or is generally disregarded. It must not only be established, but in force. A custom, reasonable in itself, and generally observed, will prevail as against a written mining law which has fallen into disuse. It is a question of fact for the jury whether the law is in force at any given time.

The custom sought to be proven in this case was not even in conflict with the mining laws. It merely prescribed another and not unreasonable act in the series of acts required for a location. The exclusion of the evidence was error.

It is unnecessary to pass upon the validity of the instructions refused by the Court. The testimony comes up to this Court in such confused and unintelligible shape that it is impossible to learn from the record whether the instructions did or did not apply to the proofs presented.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

The certificate is defective because it does not state whether a statement on appeal was filed.

WILLIAM BARBER v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO STREET LAW—PETITION ON APPEAL TO SUPERVISORS.—

Where a petition on appeal to the Supervisors of San Francisco, from a street assessment, based upon the ground that the petitioners did the work in front of their premises in time, and were not allowed therefor, omitted to show that petitioners had obtained the certificate from the Surveyor required by law (Stats. 1867-8, p. 361, Sec. 8, Subd. 11); held, that such petition was not bad on account of such omission, or insufficient to give the Board jurisdiction.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTIONS TO STREET ASSESSMENT ON APPEAL TO SUPERVISORS.—

The San Francisco street law of 1863, in providing for an appeal to the Board of Supervisors (Stats. 1863, p. 530, Sec. 12), does not exact from persons objecting to an assessment the same strictness and precision, in stating their objections, which would be required in a pleading at common law.

RIGHT TO HEAR APPEAL INCLUDES POWER TO DETERMINE IT.—

In case of an appeal to Supervisors, provided for by law, where the proceedings are sufficient to give them a right to hear it, such right necessarily includes the power to determine it.

ON CERTIORARI, ONLY JURISDICTIONAL MATTERS IN QUESTION.—

Where a Board of Supervisors has jurisdiction of a proceeding, and acts upon it, any error it may commit in its conclusions as to facts, not affecting its jurisdiction, cannot be reviewed on certiorari.

THIS was a proceeding on a writ of certiorari issued out of the Supreme Court to the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, for the purpose of reviewing its action on a street assessment appeal. It appears that on January 6th, 1871, the Superintendent of Streets of that city and county made and issued an assessment for the grading of Townsend street, between Second and Third streets. Peter Donahue and J. G. Eastland appealed therefrom to the Board of Supervisors, and, in their petition of appeal, set forth, among other things, that they were the owners of the one hundred vara lot on the southerly corner of Townsend and Second streets; that before the passage of the resolution of intention to grade said Townsend street, they and the Citizens' Gas Company, through whom they deraigned title, graded said street to the official grade in front of said lot; that they were entitled to a credit in said assessment therefor, amounting to more than their proportion of the whole of said work; and that they duly claimed such credit, but said Superintendent refused to allow it.

The plaintiff, and others interested, appeared in the Board of Supervisors and filed objections to the hearing of the appeal, on the ground, chiefly, that the petition did not allege that the certificate of work done by petitioners was filed with the City and County Surveyor in office when the work was done, or was so filed at any time prior to the completion of the grading under the contract. The Supervisors seem to have considered the objections insufficient, and proceeded to hear the appeal; and some evidence was adduced tending to show that there had been a certificate, but that it had not been filed with the Superintendent previous to the completion of the grading. The result of the appeal was a resolution of the Supervisors setting aside the assessment and directing the Superintendent to make out and issue a new one, allowing credits to all parties for the net quantity of material in cubic yards removed by them respectively, or by those under whom they legally claimed title, in front of their property.

This writ of certiorari being afterwards sued out on behalf of Mr. Barber and others, the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors certified up all the proceedings, including the testimony taken on the appeal.

E. J. Pringle, William Barber, and H. B. Jones, for Plaintiffs, claimed that the Supervisors had exceeded their jurisdiction in taking cognizance of the appeal on an insufficient petition; in setting aside the assessment without any evidence that it was erroneous; and in directing a new assessment to be made out in a manner contrary to law. They also claimed that giving credit to a particular property holder for work previously done was equivalent to assessing the cost of such prior work upon all the property holders as if it were a part of the present contract. That certiorari was the proper remedy, they cited Miller v. Supervisors, 25 Cal. 97.

R. P. & Jabish Clement, for Respondents.

The petition for certiorari does not show, neither does the return, that the amount assessed against the premises of petitioners, in the new assessment, is greater than the amount assessed against them in the original; nor that said premises are excessively assessed; nor that they were assessed at all in either assessment.

Petitioners have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law. If the Supervisors had no jurisdiction, no power to act on the appeal, the resolution setting aside the original assessment and ordering a new one is void. Therefore, the assessment made under it is void; and its invalidity may be interposed as a defense to any action upon it. (Practice Act, Sec. 456; Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 512.)

The Supervisors had power to direct the allowance of credits for work done. (Stats. 1862, p. 391, Sec. 12; 1867-8, p. 358, Sec. 8, Subd. 2; 1856, p. 145, Sec. 70.) And the record does not show the allowance of credits not authorized by law.

The Supervisors had jurisdiction of the appeal. (Stats. 1862, p. 391, Sec. 12.) The rulings complained of were not jurisdictional, nor were they erroneous. If they were erroneous, the errors were concerning the merits of the case and the manner of proceeding, not in excess of jurisdiction. (Whitney v. Board of Delegates, 14 Cal. 479.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The petitioners claim that the Board of Supervisors exceeded its jurisdiction in entertaining the appeal of Eastland and Donahue from the assessment made by the Superintendent of Streets, and also in setting aside the assessment and ordering a new one to be made. Section twelve of the Consolidation Act as amended in 1863 (Stats. 1863, p. 530) authorizes any person interested in the work, who objects to the correctness or legality of the assessment, to appeal to the Board of Supervisors, stating briefly in writing the objections to the assessment; and it is made the duty of the Board to hear and determine the objections. It is further provided that the Board may correct, alter, or modify the assessment in such manner "as to them shall seem just, and may instruct and direct the Superintendent to correct said warrant, assessment, or diagram in any particular, and to make and issue a new warrant, assessment, and diagram, to conform to the decisions of said Board in relation thereto, at their option." The decisions of the Board, after hearing and notice, are made final and conclusive on all persons entitled to appeal, "as to all errors and irregularities which said Board could have remedied and avoided." The only reason urged by the petitioners why the Board did not acquire jurisdiction to hear and determine the appeal is that the petition of Eastland and Donahue, stating their objections to the assessment, omitted to show that they had obtained the certificate of the City and County Surveyor, as required by subdivision eleven, of section eight, of the Act as amended in 1868. (Stats. 1867-8, p. 361.) But I think the petition was sufficient to entitle the Board to entertain the appeal. The statute does not exact from persons objecting to an assessment the same strictness and precision in stating the objection which would be required in a pleading at common law. On the contrary, the proceeding is intended to be summary, and all that the statute requires is that the objection be "briefly" stated in writing. In other words, the nature of the objection may be stated in general terms, without specifying minutely all the particulars. In this case the petition stated that a portion of the work of grading the street in front of the premises of the petitioners had been done by them or their predecessors in interest, before the publication of the notice of intention to grade the street, and that they were entitled to a credit on the assessment for the work so done; but that no credit was allowed them in the assessment, which was therefore incorrect and illegal. This objection was sufficiently explicit within the purview of the statute to enable the Board to take jurisdiction of the appeal; and the right to hear it necessarily included the power to determine it. The Board, therefore, had jurisdiction to entertain, hear, and determine the appeal upon the proofs introduced; and, if it committed an error in its conclusions as to the facts, the error would not affect their jurisdiction, and could not be reviewed on certiorari. The return of the Board to the writ purports to contain the evidence given on the hearing of the appeal, but there is nothing in the record to show what facts the Board considered proved, and if there was, and if we should be of opinion that the Board found the facts contrary to the evidence, we could not correct the error in this form of proceeding. We cannot ascertain, from anything that appears in this record, that the Board did not decide and determine that Eastland and Donahue had obtained the proper certificate from the City and County Surveyor, and had done all that the law required to entitle them to the credit which they claim. These were facts which the Board had authority to ascertain and decide, and we cannot inquire, in this proceeding, as to the sufficiency of the evidence on which it acted. It is sufficient that it did act, and decided, on the facts proved, that Eastland and Donahue were entitled to the relief claimed, and that the assessment was therefore incorrect. Whether its decision was right or wrong it did not exceed its jurisdiction in making it. It is said, however, that if the Board had the authority to correct the assessment it had no jurisdiction to direct a new assessment to be made, of the character specified in its resolution, setting aside the first assessment. The objection urged against the new assessment which was ordered, is that Eastland and Donahue are to be credited with the cost of all the excavation made by them, without charging them with the cost of removing any embankments which they may have made above the official grade, or filling up excavations made by them below the official grade. The answer to this objection is that it was for the Board to determine whether there were any such embankments to be removed or excavations filled up, and we cannot review, in this form of proceeding, the action of the Board on that subject. There is nothing in the record to show that the Board has exceeded its jurisdiction in any of the matters complained of, and the writ is therefore dismissed.

So ordered.

PETER DECKER AND J. H. JEWETT v. M. D. HOWELL, BENJAMIN HAYNES, AND R. M. TURNER.

STRICT PARTNERSHIP IN MINES AS DISTINGUISHED FROM "MINING PARTNERSHIP," SO CALLED.—Where two persons entered into an agreement to engage together in a mining adventure, under a firm name, and to share the profits and losses equally, and as a firm they purchased a mine, and paid a note given in the firm name for a portion of the price; held, that the contract was one of partnership, in the ordinary sense, as distinguished from what is known as a "mining partnership," and that either partner had the same authority to bind the firm as if it were an ordinary trading partnership.

EXCEPTIONAL RULE AS TO "MINING PARTNERSHIPS" CHANGES WHEN REASON THEREFOR CHANGES.—The rule that in "mining partnerships" one partner has no authority to bind the firm by a promissory note is based upon the reason that in such partnerships there is no delectus personarum, and that, consequently, the membership is continually subject to changes beyond the control of the partners; but there is nothing in the nature of mining which forbids a contract of strict partnership; and when it appears that the confidential relations of an ordinary partnership are established, and the firm not subject to the intrusion of other partners at will, the reason of the rule falls, and with the reason the rule itself.

PROMISSORY NOTE OF STRICT MINING PARTNERSHIP.—Where Howell and Haynes entered into a strict partnership for the purpose of purchasing, holding, and working a mine, and while such partners Howell gave a firm note for money borrowed in the name and for the use of the firm, and afterwards conveyed all his interest to Haynes; held, that the note was valid as a firm note, and could be collected of Haynes.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Tenth Judicial District, Yuba County.

This was an action upon a promissory note for three thousand dollars, made in the name of "Howell & Haynes" to R. M. Turner, and by Turner indorsed to plaintiffs. Howell and Turner made default. Haynes answered separately, setting up, among other things, that "Howell & Haynes" was a partnership formed for the sole and exclusive purpose of mining, and that Howell had given the note without Haynes' knowledge or authority, and in fraud of his rights. On the trial the Court below found the facts substantially as stated in the opinion; but in addition thereto found that after the making of the note Howell conveyed all his interest in the partnership to Haynes, in consideration that he would pay certain claims, including the note in question. As conclusions of law the Court found:

First—That the defendants Howell & Haynes were co-partners in the working and management of their mines and mill.

Second—That a copartner in a mining partnership has not in any case implied authority to borrow money on the credit of the partnership, nor to execute or deliver a promissory note in the partnership name for any purpose, and, consequently, that the defendant Howell had no implied authority to execute or deliver a note in the partnership name to the plaintiffs for the money borrowed from them, and that the fact that the money borrowed was used to pay the wages of the laborers on the mine, and for supplies therefor, can make no difference.

Third—That the defendant Haynes, by his ratification of the acts of the defendant Howell in the making and delivery of the note in suit became, and now is, liable to pay to plaintiffs the amount due on said note.

As a further conclusion of law, the Court found that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment in the sum of four thousand nine hundred and sixty-four dollars and twenty-five cents, for principal and interest on the note, and rendered judgment accordingly. Defendant Haynes moved for a new trial, which being denied, he took this appeal from the judgment and order.

James C. Cary and Charles E. Filkins, for Appellants.

The issue raised by the pleadings was as to the power of Howell, by the execution of the note in suit, to bind the firm of Howell & Haynes. The Court below found that he could not. On this finding the defendant Haynes was entitled to judgment; but the Court proceeded to work out a judgment against him by raising another issue, not made by the pleadings or the parties. The finding upon which the judgment was based was excepted to; and we contend that there was no issue or evidence to sustain it.

It is, however, contended that the partnership between Howell and Haynes was a trading or commercial partnership, as distinguished from a mining company, and that Howell, therefore, had implied authority to borrow money and give notes. But it is submitted that this is not an open question, for the reason that the Court below found upon the whole case that the business of Howell & Haynes was mining, and that Howell had no authority as a copartner in the company to borrow money and execute notes. No exception was taken to this finding, and it cannot now be questioned.

The plaintiffs well knew the nature of the business of Howell & Haynes; and when Howell proposed to give this note for borrowed money, and pledged the credit of the firm for its payment, they were put upon inquiry as to his power. Had they made inquiry, they would have found that the mode in which the business of Howell & Haynes had been conducted was against the right of Howell to borrow money in the name of the firm; that he never had exercised or assumed that right in any one instance; that he had never made but one note in the firm name, and that was for the purchase money of the mine, and under instructions to arrange for the payment as best he could; that when money was required for the mine he drew on Haynes' agent for it, and in his own name; that the mine was to be worked on a cash basis; that Haynes was able to supply all the money needed, without borrowing; that the mines had failed at the time Howell made his application for a loan, and that he was insolvent.

The finding that Howell had no power or authority to give a note in the name of the firm, was fully sustained by the decisions in Skillman v. Lachman, 23 Cal. 206; Bradley v. Harkness, 26 Cal. 76; Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 577; and Settembre v. Putnam, 30 Cal. 490.

W. C. Belcher and G. N. Swezy, for Respondent.

It makes no difference whether the conclusions of law of the Court below are correct or not, if the facts of the case and the conclusions which the law itself makes, and which the Court ought to have made as applicable thereto, warrant and sustain the judgment.

That the first conclusion is correct, so far as it goes, is beyond controversy. When two or more parties are engaged together in working mines for their joint account, it is no longer an open question whether or not the associates are copartners, and constitute a copartnership. They may own the mine as tenants in common, and in unequal interests, and divide the profits and share the losses of working in proportion to their several interests, but the moment they begin the working for their joint account they become copartners. This copartnership may be general or special, and whether general or special, will depend upon the circumstances of each case. (See Story on Part. Sec. 82; Bainbridge on Mines, 332; Arundel on Mines, 27; Rockwell on Mines, 576; Collier on Mines, 88; Collyer on Part. Sec. 8.)

The above authorities would seem to leave no doubt that two or more persons may form a partnership for the business of mining, in which they might have all the benefits, enjoy all the rights and privileges, and subject themselves to all the liabilities of commercial partnerships—in which there should be found all the characteristics, and to which should be attached all the incidents of commercial partnerships.

Argument for Respondent.

Such a partnership may be created by deed, by parol agreement, or "by just presumption from the acts of the parties." And if it be possible that a partnership possessing all the characteristics, and subject to all the liabilities of commercial partnerships, can be created for a mining adventure, then we think that the partnership between the defendants, Howell and Haynes, was one of that class. If there is any one element wanting, we do not know what it is.

The delectus personæ, so frequently mentioned as an essential element in commercial partnerships, and as distinguishing them from certain kinds of joint stock and mining associations, is not wanting here. Indeed, it was the chiefest inducement with Haynes, to engage in this business with which he was personally unacquainted, that he could be associated in the business with Howell, and have the benefit of his skill and experience.

The cases of Skillman v. Lackman, 23 Cal. 198; Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 569; Dougherty v. Crary, 30 Cal. 290; Settembre v. Putnam, 30 Cal. 491, and McConnell v. Denver, 35 Cal. 385, do not determine that a mining partnership cannot be a commercial partnership, or that mining partners do not and cannot have implied authority to borrow money or give notes in the name of the partnership. All these cases carefully preserve the distinction that the partnership of which they treat are the ordinary mining partnerships in which the controlling element — the delectus personæ — is wanting, in which the shareholders are generally numerous, and may, at their pleasure, transfer their interests and introduce new members. Not one of them holds or intimates that a mining partnership may not be formed which would in all respects be governed by the rules of commercial partnerships, and in which the members should possess all the rights, and be subject to all the liabilities of such partnerships.

The Court below was wrong in its second conclusion of law, and should have found that Howell had implied authority to borrow the money and make the note in the name of the partnership. The finding was, doubtless, based upon the authority of Skillman v. Lachman, and kindred cases; but, as we have shown, the doctrines there laid down are applicable to a different class of partnerships, and not to what the facts here presented and found by the Court show this of Howell & Haynes to have been.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The defendants, Howell and Haynes, entered into an agreement to engage together in a mining adventure, under the firm name of "Howell & Haynes," for the purpose of purchasing, holding, and working certain mines. The profits and losses were to be shared equally. Howell, a practical miner, was to contribute his skill and personal services in the conduct of the business; Haynes was to contribute money. The mine was purchased by and conveyed to the partners. A note of the firm was given for a portion of the purchase money, and afterwards paid without objection by either. The mine was worked for a year under the management of Howell, who then conveyed his interest to Haynes. Prior to this conveyance, Howell borrowed of the plaintiff, in the name of the firm and for its use, the money for which the note in suit was given.

The main question in this case is whether Howell had authority, either express or implied, to make the note in suit.

It is well settled that in the case of an ordinary trading partnership either party may bind the firm by note.

It is equally well settled by the decisions of this Court that no such authority exists in the case of an ordinary mining partnership. The decision in Skillman v. Lachman, 23

Cal. 206, and the subsequent cases, place this exception to the recognized rule as applicable to trading partnerships, upon the ground that in mining partnerships the delectus personarum does not exist, and the membership is continually subject to changes beyond the control of the partners. But it is no disparagement to the salutary doctrine of these cases to hold that a strict partnership may exist in the working of a mine which shall be subject to the incidents of a trading partnership. There is nothing in the nature of the business of mining which forbids such a contract. If by the terms of a contract of mining partnership it appears that the confidential relations of an ordinary partnership are established, and that the firm is not subject to the intrusion of other partners at will, the reason of the rule that restricts the powers of a single partner fails. The parties are strictly partners, not by reason of their common ownership of the mine, but as the result of their own agreement. The cases of Bradley v. Harkness, 26 Cal. 76, and Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 587, recognize this principle.

In Bainbridge on Mines, 439, the author says: "But there are mining concerns which are carried on by partners, few in number, subject to mutual selection, and therefore more closely connected by mutual confidence. * * * There may be no difference between firms of this kind and those engaged in any other distinct business as general partners, and those who are not working partners may not be the less liable to the general consequences of such a partnership."

I am of opinion that the agreement between Howell & Haynes was a contract of partnership in the ordinary sense. Each exercised his choice in the selection of the other as his copartner. If either had conveyed his interest in the mine to a stranger, the purchaser would not, by virtue of the sale, be subrogated to his rights under the agreement. The purchaser and remaining partner would then become tenants in common of the mine and in its working, subject to the rules applicable to an ordinary mining partnership.

JOSEPH M. WOOD v. REUBEN E. RAMOND ET ALs.

NONSUIT MAY BE WAIVED AND JUDGMENT TAKEN ON MERITS.—A defendant, conceiving that the plaintiff has failed to prove his case, may waive a motion for a nonsuit, and proceed to prove his own case, and have judgment on the merits.

JUDGMENT ON MERITS NOT TO BE TAKEN AFTER NONSUIT.—If a defendant move for a nonsuit, and it be granted, he cannot have judgment on the merits.

NONSUIT ON MOTION OF DEFENDANT.—A nonsuit granted on motion of the defendant is equivalent in its operation on the action to a dismissal with the consent of the defendant, even if the defendant has set up new matter and asked for affirmative relief in his answer.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The appeal was taken from the judgment, from "the order allowing the plaintiff to take a nonsuit, and also from the order refusing to allow the defendants to make proof of the facts set up in defendants' cross-complaint, and from all the orders and errors specified," etc.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

G. F. & William H. Sharp, for Appellants.

The defendants should have been allowed to prove the allegations of their cross-complaint. No distinction in pleading exists under the code, whether the relief sought be legal or equitable. The old rules are superseded. (Smith v. Baie, 4 Cal. 6; Cordies v. Schloss, 12 Cal. 147; Higgins v.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

McDonald, 18 Cal. 302; Reddler v. Baker, 13 Cal. 302.) The affirmative matter stated in the answer was properly the subject of a cross-complaint, and under the code it was admissible. (Secs. 37-46, 49, and 64 of Practice Act.) Under our code, legal and equitable relief may be obtained in the same action — the pleader may join in the same complaint legal and equitable causes of action. For instances of such joinder, and as illustrative of the general doctrine, see Morenhout v. Higuera, 32 Cal. 294. The averment of ouster was properly the subject of cross-complaint, whether this action be treated as legal or equitable. (See Moore v. Massina, 32 Cal. 595; Gates v. Keiff, 7 Cal. 125.) Equitable title may be interposed as a defense in ejectment, and if this be true, the rule must be true e converso. (Cadiz v. Meyers, 33 Cal. 288; Carpentier v. City of Oakland, 30 Cal. 438; Lorain v. Long, 6 Cal. 452; Getty v. Hudson River R. R. Co., 6 Howard's Pr. 269.) The matter set up in the answer related to the general subject matter of the action, and was responsive to the complaint. (Practice Act, Sec. 47; Van Sandvord's Pleadings, 50, 51; Pralus v. Jeff. S. Mfg. Co., 34 Cal. 558.)

Wood & Harding, for Respondent.

The appellants appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, granted on their own motion. They were not the parties aggrieved, and have no right to appeal. (Pr. Act, Sec. 335; Insly v. Beard, 6 Cal. 666; Sleeper v. Kelly, 22 Cal. 456; Ely v. Frisbie, 260.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The plaintiff commenced this action under the two hundred and fifty-fourth section of the Practice Act, to quiet his title to certain premises. The defendants after denying most of the material allegations of the complaint, set up what is claimed as new matter, and upon it demanded affirmative relief. Upon the hearing, the Court, on the defendants' motion, ordered a judgment of nonsuit. The defendants, thereupon, offered to prove their allegations of new matter. The Court refused them permission to introduce evidence. This is alleged as error, and is the sole ground of the appeal.

A defendant, conceiving that the plaintiff has failed to prove his case, may waive a motion for a non-suit, and proceed to prove his own case, and have judgment on the merits. But if he move for a nonsuit, and the nonsuit be granted he cannot proceed and have judgment on the merits; because, by reason of the nonsuit, the plaintiff is virtually out of Court. A nonsuit, granted on the motion of the defendant, is equivalent, in its operation on the action, to a dismissal with the consent of the defendant.

PLEASANT D. LOGAN v. JOHN S. HALE, M. LEVENSOHN, AND J. B. GALLAND.

SUBROGATION OF JUDGMENT DEBTOR TO INTEREST OF JUDGMENT DEBTOR IN LAND.—If A. makes a verbal contract with B. to sell him a tract of land, and puts B. in possession thereof, judgment creditors of B. do not thereby, by virtue of the lien of their judgment or the levy of an execution, acquire such an interest in the land as to entitle them to be subrogated to B.'s rights, and to compel A. to make a conveyance to them upon paying him the purchase price which B. was to pay.

LIEN OF JUDGMENT CREDITOR.—If A. makes a verbal contract with B. to sell him a tract of land, and B. goes into possession, B.'s judgment creditors acquire no interest in the land except a lien on his interest to be enforced by sale on execution.

PARTIES TO SUIT IN EQUITY.—If A. makes a verbal contract with B. to sell him a tract of land, and puts him in possession, B. is a necessary party to an action commenced by the judgment creditors against A. to be subrogated to B.'s rights in the land.

Statement of Facts.

THE COURT MUST SUPPLY OMISSIONS IN FINDINGS.—If the findings of a Court omit material facts in the cause, it is the duty of the Court to supply the omissions when its attention is called to the subject by proper exceptions to the findings.

LEVY UPON LAND, WHEN IRREGULAR.—When the judgment debtor has, or claims, an interest in only a small, well defined parcel of a much larger tract of land, it is extremely irregular, to say the least, to levy the execution upon his interest in the general tract instead of the particular parcel he claims.

ENJOINING SALE ON EXECUTION.—If the owner of a large tract of land contracts to sell a part of it, and the judgment creditors of the party with whom he contracts attempt to sell the whole tract on execution, the Court intimates that the owner may enjoin the sale, except as to the part contracted to be sold.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Second Judicial District, County of Tehama.

Action to enjoin the sale of land under an execution. In 1867 the plaintiff, being the owner in fee of a large tract of land, consisting of two thousand five hundred and forty-two acres, made a verbal agreement with one Robinson to sell him a parcel of about one hundred and twenty-five acres, out of the northeast corner of the tract, at two dollars per acre. Robinson built a dwelling house upon the tract, and occupied it with his family; inclosed the land with a fence, at a cost of over two hundred dollars; and cultivated it for two years, but did not pay any portion of the purchase money. In November, 1869, Robinson became embarrassed in his finances, and fearing that his interest in the land might be interfered with by his creditors, by attachment or otherwise, on the fifteenth of the month he made a verbal arrangement with the plaintiff, surrendering his right to purchase the land. The plaintiff hired a man to do three days' plowing upon the land, but Robinson's family still remained upon the premises. On the 22d of November, 1869, Levensohn and Galland, who are defendants in this action, brought suit against Robinson, and levied an attachment on the interest of Robinson in the entire tract of two thousand five hundred and forty-two acres. Judgment for one thousand two hundred and sixty-five dollars and costs was rendered against Robinson, and, under the execution, the creditors levied upon Robinson's interest in the whole tract. The plaintiff brought this suit to enjoin the defendant Hale, as Sheriff, from making the sale. In their answer, the defendants plead that, by virtue of their judgment against Robinson, they became subrogated to his rights under the contract of purchase with the plaintiff, and offer to pay the amount of purchase money which they allege to be due, whenever the plaintiff shall convey the title to them. They ask judgment that the Robinson tract be sold, that the purchase money coming to the plaintiff be paid to him out of the proceeds, and the balance be applied on the execution under the judgment in the former action. The case was tried by the Court without a jury. The Court held that the defendants were entitled to be subrogated to the equities of Robinson under the agreement of purchase, and decreed that, on the payment to the plaintiffs of two dollars per acre for the one hundred and twenty-five acres, the plaintiff convey the legal title to the defendants. From this judgment the plaintiff appealed.

Beatty & Denson, for Appellant.

Either Robinson had or had not an interest in the land capable of being levied on and sold. If he did not have such interest, of course there could not be such a decree as was rendered in this case. If he did have such interest, the decree is equally erroneous. How could the Court tell what that interest was worth? It might be worth ten thousand dollars — it might not be worth ten dollars. After the land was conveyed to the creditors of Robinson, what would become of the judgment and execution? Would it be satisfied in whole or in part? Or would the creditors have Robinson's land, and Robinson still owe the entire debt? A levy does not divest a man of his property; it only creates a lien. The final divestiture of the property only arises when a sale shall have taken place. How, then, came the creditors of Robinson to be entitled to the conveyance from Logan? Neither Logan, Robinson, nor the Sheriff had sold them any land. But, perhaps, it may be said Robinson is not appealing, and the decree can do the appellant no harm, because it makes no difference to him whether he deeds the land to Robinson or his creditors. If Robinson was before the Court in this proceeding, so as to bind him by the decree, and it was, on proper investigation, determined that the plaintiff, on his receiving two hundred and fifty dollars, was bound to convey one hundred and twenty-five acres of land, it would make but little difference to him to whom he made the conveyance. But that is a mooted point, and it is one which cannot be determined without bringing Robinson into Court. He is not a party to this action. Suppose the plaintiff were, in accordance with the terms of the decree in this case, to deed one hundred and twenty-five acres of land of Robinson's creditors. If Robinson were afterwards to sue for a specific performance, or damages in lieu thereof, if performance could not be had, it would be no answer to the complaint for Logan to say: "I have already deeded the land to your creditors." Robinson could well say: "I was no party to that proceeding; I am not bound by it; my interest in this particular land has never been sold; I either want the land or full compensation for it."

G. P. Braynard, for Respondents.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

Waiving the question whether the levy of the defendants' attachment and execution, and the threatened sale under the execution, created a cloud upon the plaintiff's title, and whether the plaintiff had such a possession of the land sold to Robinson as would enable him to maintain an action to quiet his title under section two hundred and fifty-four of the code, I proceed to inquire whether the defendants are entitled to the relief awarded to them by the Court below. Allowing to the pretensions of the defendants Levensohn and Galland the widest latitude, the utmost that they can rightfully claim on the facts disclosed by the record is that, by reason of their judgment, attachment, and execution, they have acquired a lien, for the security of their debt, upon whatever interest Robinson had in the land purchased from the plaintiff. But I am unable to discover on what possible theory of the facts contained in the record the Court arrived at the conclusion that the execution creditors were entitled to a conveyance of the land from the plaintiff. The levy of their execution did not entitle them to be subrogated to all of Robinson's rights, but only to a lien on his interest in the land, to be enforced by a sale under the execution. Robinson was not a party to the action, and is not bound by the judgment. If the plaintiff should submit to the judgment, and convey the land, as he is ordered to do, to the execution creditors, the judgment would be no bar to a subsequent action by Robinson, against the plaintiff, to compel a conveyance. Moreover, the land may be worth four times the amount of the judgment, and it may be that, under the parol agreement for a rescission of the contract between Robinson and the plaintiff the latter would be entitled to the surplus proceeds of the sale, even though it be conceded that Robinson had an interest in the land which is subject to the execution. In any view of the case, that portion of the judgment is erroneous which directs the plaintiff to convey the land to the judgment creditors.

The Court also erred in refusing to amend its findings on the request of the plaintiff. The findings, as filed, omitted to find upon several of the material issues in the cause, and the Court should have supplied the omission when its attention was called to the subject by the plaintiff's exceptions to the findings.

It was admitted at the trial that the plaintiff was the owner, in possession, of the whole of a tract containing over twenty-five hundred acres, except a small parcel in one corner thereof, containing about one hundred and twenty-five acres, which it was claimed he had sold to Robinson by a verbal contract. It was not pretended that Robinson had any interest, whatever, except in the small parcel above referred to, and yet the Sheriff levied upon and advertised for sale Robinson's interest in the whole tract. When the judgment debtor has, or claims, an interest in only a small, well defined parcel of a much larger tract, it is extremely irregular, to say the least, to levy the execution upon his interest in the general tract, instead of the particular parcel which he claims. I am strongly inclined to think, but do not express a positive opinion on the point, that upon an irregular levy of this character, and a threatened sale under it, the plaintiff, in possession of the larger tract, would be entitled to enjoin the sale, except of the smaller parcel claimed by the judgment debtor.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

[No. 2,854.]SEWELL v. PLACER COUNTY.

SALARY OF COUNTY CLERK OF PLACER COUNTY.—The Act of February 25th, 1858, concerning the office of County Clerk of Placer County (Stats. 1858, p. 29), does not limit the salary of the Clerk to the amount of fees received by him; and if the fees collected for any one month do not amount to the salary to which he is entitled, he can recover the difference from the county.

Argument for Appellant.

STATUTE REQUIRING OFFICERS TO PAY OVER FEES, LESS SALARY.—

Where a statute concerning the office and fixing the salary of a County Clerk provided that he should collect all official fees, and at the first of every month pay the same over to the County Treasurer, "less his salary for the next preceding month;" and the fees for several months being less than the salary, it was claimed that the salary was only payable out of the collected fees; held, that he was entitled to his full annual salary, and that there was no legislative intention to limit the salary to the amount of fees received.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

This action was brought to recover one thousand five hundred and forty-four dollars and forty-one cents, being the amount due the plaintiff during his term of two years. The complaint averred that the plaintiff paid into the County Treasury during his term of two years two thousand five hundred and sixty-eight dollars and fifty-six cents, and that during the same time there was drawn out of said sum for Deputy Clerk, the sum of one thousand four hundred and thirty-seven dollars. The defendant demurred to the complaint; the demurrer was overruled, and judgment by default rendered in favor of the plaintiff.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

H. H. Fellows, District Attorney of Placer County, for Appellant.

Payment of the salary is to be made out of such fees as shall have been received by him as County Clerk, and not otherwise. (Vide Stats. 1868, pp. 29, 30.)

The first and subsequent sections of the Act referred to provide that the money for the payment of the same shall be collected from the fees of the office. No other source for the payment of the salary being provided, the Clerk must bear the consequences. He entered upon his duties as Clerk with full knowledge of the law, and if the fees have not amounted to a sum^e equal to his salary he ought not to complain.

Hale & Craig, for Respondent.

The maxim expressio unis est exclusio alterius directly applies, and as a consequence the statutory expression of a limitation of the county's liability to the Deputy Clerk for salary to moneys coming to the Treasury from the fee fund, is in effect an exclusion of the like or any other limitation of the county's liability to the County Clerk for the full sum of his salary as fixed by law.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The plaintiff's right to recover depends upon the construction of the Act of February 25th, 1858, "concerning the office of County Clerk of Placer County." (Stats. 1858, p. 29.)

Section one of the Act provides that the County Clerk shall "receive, for all services required of him by law in his said office, * * * a salary at the rate of three thousand five hundred dollars per annum, which salary shall be in full for all services required of him. * * * And the money for the payment of the same shall be collected and retained by said Clerk in the manner hereinafter provided."

Section three provides that the Clerk shall collect all official fees, "and upon the first Monday in each and every month shall pay the same over to the County Treasurer of said county, less his salary for the next preceding month."

The plaintiff was County Clerk, and during several months of his term the receipts for official fees did not equal the amount of his salary proportioned to those months; but the receipts for the entire year exceeded the amount of his salary. The Board of Supervisors refused to allow the plaintiff's claim for the difference between the receipts for fees and the salary for these months, and the plaintiff sues to recover it.

The defendant claims that the salary of the Clerk is only payable from the fund arising from collected fees. This is a forced construction of the statute. The provision of section one, that "the money for the payment of the same (the salary) shall be collected and retained by the Clerk," and that of section three, requiring him to pay over the surplus of collected fees to the Treasurer, were evidently intended to secure to the county the revenue derivable from the excess of fees over salary upon the one hand, and to provide a convenient method for the payment of the salary upon the other. But they were not intended to lessen the amount of the annual salary as fixed by the Act.

This construction of these sections is aided by a consideration of the second section of the Act. This section authorizes the employment by the Clerk of a deputy, at a certain salary, but provides that the salary of the deputy shall not be allowed by the Board, "unless there shall have been paid over to the County Treasurer, by the County Clerk, a sum or sums equal to, or greater, than the sum claimed to be due for services rendered by the said Deputy Clerk." This restriction upon the allowance of the deputy's salary, and the absence of any restriction in the case of the Clerk, shows satisfactorily that it was not the intention of the Legislature to limit the salary of the Clerk to the amount of fees received by him.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

Ejectment to recover one hundred and fifty acres of land in the County of Los Angeles. The answer was a general denial. The plaintiff claimed under the Act entitled "An Act prescribing the mode of maintaining and defending possessory actions on public lands in this State," commonly known as the Possessory Act.

He offered in evidence his affidavit of location filed with the County Recorder May 1st. 1869.

He offered further testimony showing that about the 10th or 15th day of July, 1869, he hauled some lumber upon the premises with which he intended to build a house. On the next day he visited the premises and found that the lumber had been removed and placed in the road. He endeavored to replace it upon the land, but was stopped by a number of armed men, among whom was one of the defendants, who forbade his entry and drove him away by threats of violence.

The defendants moved for a nonsuit "for the reason that plaintiff has not shown such a possession of the lands in question, nor such improvements on said lands, nor such a compliance with sections three and four of the Possessory Act as entitled him to recover."

The Court refused the motion, and this ruling is assigned as error.

The second section of the Act declares that "no person shall be entitled to maintain any such action for possession of or injury to any claim unless he or she occupy the same and shall have complied with the provisions of the third and fourth sections of this Act."

Section three provides for the filing and record of the affidavit of the claimant.

Section four provides, that "within ninety days after the date of said record the party recording is hereby required to improve the land thus recorded to the value of two hundred dollars, by putting such improvements thereon as shall partake of the realty, unless such improvements shall have been made prior to the application to record," etc.

The provisions of the statute are plain and positive. It does not undertake to confer any title to the land. It gives to the claimant at most a constructive possession, and a corresponding right to protect it against a naked trespasser. Dehors the statute claimant would have no rights in the premises. It prescribes a series of acts, upon a complete performance of which his possession and right of action accrues. The performance of a single required act gives him no right. The filing of the affidavit is valueless until the other equally essential act — the placing of the required improvements — shall have been performed. When this is done, the right of the claimant will take effect, by relation, from the date of the first act of the series.

The necessity of a strict compliance with the provisions of this statute has been frequently declared by this Court. (Sweetland v. Froe, 6 Cal. 145; Wright v. Whitesides, 15 Cal. 47; Hicks v. Whitesides, 23 Cal. 408.)

It does not affect the question that the plaintiff in this case was prevented from making the improvements by force, whether exercised by the defendants or by others. The Legislature has given to citizens a right unknown to the common law, which it declares shall be available only when the citizen shall have performed certain acts. These acts are conditions precedent to the acquisition of the right. The statute does not provide for the contingency of an unavoidable failure to perform. The Courts cannot provide for it by construction.

The nonsuit should have been granted, because the plaintiff failed to prove that he placed the required improvements upon the land within the time prescribed by the statute.

This view of the case renders the consideration of other points unnecessary.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for new trial.

NATHAN BARBOUR v. LEWIS PIERCE, AND LEWIS PIERCE v. NATHAN BARBOUR.

RIGHT OF WAY BY LICENSE.—Where a party uses a way over land belonging to another, by agreement with the owner of the land, and the land is sold to a third party without notice of the arrangement as to the right of way, the third party is not bound by the arrangement.

IDEM.—In order to maintain a right of way, acquired by parol license, as against a purchaser from the one who gave the license, the one claiming such right of way must show a right based on prescription.

SAME, NOW RIPENED INTO PERFECT TITLE.—The use of a way which began under a parol license, may, by prescription, ripen into a perfect title; but in such case the user must have been exercised under a claim of right for the period prescribed for the Statute of Limitations.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

In January, 1870, Nathan Barbour commenced an action to enjoin Lewis Pierce from obstructing a private road and right of way, which he claimed to have acquired by prescription over the land owned by Pierce. In March of the same year Pierce commenced an action to restrain Barbour from using the way. The two cases were tried together by the Court without a jury. In the first case the Court filed the following findings of fact and conclusions of law.

Statement of Facts.

"1. That in 1861 Alfred Alford was the owner and in possession of a tract of land in Solano County, including the strip of roadway in suit.

"2. That in said year plaintiff attempted to secure a private road over the premises of Alford, on the east side of the creek, to his (plaintiff's) premises, in pursuance of the law of this State and took such steps as secured the appointment of viewers by the Supervisors.

"3. That while the viewers were upon the ground, the project of opening a road where plaintiff wanted it—to wit: on the east side of the creek—was abandoned, for the reason that neighbors interfered, and a compromise (the terms of which do not clearly appear) was effected, and a road was agreed to be opened at the point in dispute.

"4. That on the advice and at the suggestion of one of the viewers, Alford (who was the plaintiff's father-in-law) proffered to give him a roadway on the west bank of the creek—to wit: the strip in suit; that plaintiff accepted the offer, and, with the consent and permission of Alford, entered into the enjoyment of said right and roadway, and built a bridge at the point where said roadway terminates at the main public road, and also some fencing along the line of the roadway, the bridge and fencing amounting in value to six hundred dollars. The said improvements were necessary to the enjoyment by plaintiff of his way, and do not appear to have been of any value to Alford, or any advantage to his property.

"5. That plaintiff continued to use and pass over said roadway, with the knowledge of Alford, and without objection, until 1869, when Alford sold and conveyed the premises, over which said roadway ran to defendant, Pierce, who had no notice of the verbal arrangement between Alford and the plaintiff.

"6. That plaintiff, at various times while using said roadway, asked Alford to convey the same, and the strip of land covered thereby, to him by deed, and that Alford always declined and refused to do so.

Statement of Facts.

"7. That defendant, Pierce, after his purchase, closed said roadway at the point where it intersected the main public road."

And as conclusions of law:

"1. That plaintiff took his interest in said roadway, and used the same by the permission and with the consent of Alford; that his rights therein were acquired and held by license merely, and that plaintiff did not and could not acquire any rights by reason of such use, by prescription or otherwise, which he could enforce against Pierce.

"2. That whatever rights plaintiff had in said roadway were held at the will of Alford, and terminated with his conveyance to Pierce."

In the second case the Court found similar facts, and made the following additional findings:

"4. That after Pierce purchased the premises, he caused the said roadway to be closed up, by fencing it at the point where it terminated in the main public road; that defendant removed said fence, which was replaced by plaintiff, and removed by defendant, repeatedly and continuously up to the time of the commencement of this suit.

"5. That there was no other agreement between Alford and Barbour than as above set forth, and that Pierce had no notice of any right claimed by Barbour in the premises, aside from the fact that said road was used by Barbour in the manner found above."

As conclusions of law, the Court finds:

"That the right of defendant to the use of said road rested in license from Landy Alford, and that said license terminated with the conveyance to plaintiff.

Argument for Appellant.

"That no adverse claim or right was held by Barbour in or to said roadway as against Alford, and that he acquired no rights under said license by use, prescription, or otherwise."

Judgment was rendered against Barbour in each case and he appealed therefrom.

M. A. Wheaton and John Currey, for Appellant.

By the agreement entered into between Alfred Alford and Nathan Barbour, and the acceptance by Barbour of the gift or grant from Alford of the right of way on the west bank of the creek, and his entry therein, and his continued and uninterrupted use and enjoyment of the way given and granted, with the knowledge and acquiescence of Alford, for over eight years, Barbour acquired an absolute right of way, in and over the land particularly described, in the complaint of Barbour. (Statute of Limitations, 2 Hit. Dig. 4348, 4349; American Company v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 366, 367; Washburne on Ease. 84, 85; Eldredge v. Knott, 1 Cowper, 214; Campbell v. Smith, 3 Halsted. 141; Morse v. Copeland, 2 Gray, 302; Sherwood v. Burr, 4 Day, 244; 1 Greenleaf's Ev. Sec. 17; Wash. on Ease. 19.)

The abandonment by Barbour of the proceeding to open a road on the east bank of the creek, and the expenses paid out by him in building a bridge, etc., was a sufficient consideration, together with his subsequent possession and use of the roadway, to support his right of way over said land, as a purchaser thereof. (Miller v. Drake, 1 Cain's R. 45; Converse v. Kellogg, 7 Barb. 590.)

As a gift, with its acceptance, and use and enjoyment of the roadway, as already mentioned, for over five years, Barbour acquired an absolute right to such way. (Peck v. Brummagim, 31 Cal. 440; Dow v. Gould & Curry S. M. Co., 81 Cal. 652, 653.)

Argument for Respondent.

A parol grant or gift of the right of way or easement, followed by possession, use, and enjoyment of it, with the knowledge and consent of the grantor or donor, for over five years, invests the grantee or donee with an absolute title to the right of way or easement. (Wash. on Ease. 160, 88; Ashley v. Ashley, 4 Gray, 197; Sumner v. Stevens, 6 Metc. 337, and the cases therein cited; Arbuckle v. Ward, 29 Vt. 43, 52.)

The possession, use, and enjoyment of the easement by Barbour were adverse to Alford for over eight years. (Wash. on Ease. 88; 6 Metc. 337; 29 Vt. 43, 52; Cannon v. Stockman, 36 Cal. 538, and the cases therein cited; Averill v. Wilson, 4 Barb. 185.)

W. H. Patterson, for Respondent.

The Court found that Alford gave a parol license to Barbour to use the land as a roadway—during the will of Alford—for which no consideration passed.

The acceptance by Barbour of the parol license, and acting under it, prevented the Statute of Limitations from commencing to run. (38 New York, 111; Parker v. Foot, 29 Wend. 313; 14 New York, 249.) B.'s repeated application to A. for a deed precludes the idea of a grant, or holding adversely.

The license was revocable at the pleasure of his successor. (Miller v. The Auburn and Syracuse R. R. Co., 6 Hill, 61; Mumford v. Whitney, 15 Wend. 380; Bridges v. Purcell, 1 Dev. & Batt. 492; Noyes v. Chapin, 6 Wend. 461, 464; Thompson v. Gregory, 4 Johnson, 81; Jamison v. Millemun, 3 Duer, 355; Dexter v. Hazen, 10 John. 246; 5 Barbour, 379; Wood v. Leadbetter, 13 M. & W. 838; 10 Barbour, 333.) And was revoked by the conveyance to Pierce. (6 Hill, 64; Jackson v. Babcock, 4 Johnson, 418; Hittell's Digest, 3150, Sec. 6, Stat. of Frauds.)

Wm. S. Wells and W. W. Pendegast, also for Respondent.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

It is found that Pierce purchased the land over which the road in controversy ran, from Alfred Alford, without notice of the arrangement between Alford and Barbour respecting the road. Pierce, therefore, is not bound by the arrangement, as such; and Barbour, in order to succeed in maintaining his claim to the right of way, must show a right based upon adverse possession — or, as it is usually denominated, when applied to a way, prescription. That the right may become perfect by prescription, where the use began under a parol gift, is abundantly shown by the authorities cited by the appellant's counsel. The authorities also sustain the position that the user, which had its origin in license or permission, may by prescription ripen into a perfect title; but in such case the user must have been exercised for the period prescribed by the Statute of Limitations, under a claim of right. This qualification is of course applicable also where the right has its origin in a parol gift or sale.

It was found by the Court in the first case that Barbour, "with the consent and permission of Alford, entered into the enjoyment of said right and roadway;" and it is also stated, among the conclusions of law, that Barbour "took his interest in said roadway, and used the same by the permission and with the consent of Alford; that his rights therein were acquired and held by license merely; and that plaintiff did not and could not acquire any rights, by reason of such use, by prescription or otherwise, which he could enforce against defendant, Pierce." This latter, though found among the conclusions of law, is a fact, or perhaps more than one fact. Whether Barbour took or held his interest by grant, gift, or license, are questions of fact; and whether he acquired a right by prescription is also a question of fact. That the question of adverse possession or of prescription is a question of fact there can be no doubt. It would not assist the appellant, Barbour, to leave that finding where the Judge of the Court below improperly placed it, for the Court neither found the prescription claimed by Barbour nor the elements going to compose it. The user is found; but it is not found that it was exercised under claim of right, or adversely to Alford.

In the second case the findings are substantially the same as in the first, in the respects we have mentioned. Not only has the Court not found for Barbour on the issue of prescription, but has found against him in this as in the first case, though here again the finding is improperly called a conclusion of law. In the first case, the finding that he took and held by license merely negatives the possibility of an adverse holding; and in the second case the finding is directly against the adverse claim, and right by prescription, on the part of Barbour. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the appellant, Barbour, is not entitled to judgment, in either case, on the findings.

Judgment in each case affirmed.

JANUARY TERM, 1872.

REPORTS OF CASES
DETERMINED IN
THE SUPREME COURT
JANUARY TERM, 1872.

ABRAHAM POWELL v. JOHN MAGUIRE.

CONTRACT TO FORM A PARTNERSHIP — REMEDY FOR BREACH.—Where two persons made an agreement to form a partnership, but such partnership was never launched, and one of the parties proceeded to conduct the enterprise in his own name, at his own cost, and for his own exclusive benefit, excluding the other, and repudiating the partnership agreement: Held, that an action by the latter to establish his right as a partner, and for an accounting, would not lie—his only remedy in such case being an action at law for breach of contract.

SECRET AGREEMENT OF PARTNERSHIP IN FRANCHISE TO BE PROCURED, NOT ENFORCEABLE.—When Powell and Maguire verbally agreed to procure a franchise in the name of Maguire, and to run a ferry, each party to be equally interested in the franchise and business, and after the procurement of the franchise Maguire refused to transfer one half to Powell, or to recognise any interest in him: Held, that public policy forbade the enforcement of such secret understanding between the parties.

RIGHT OF FRANCHISEE TO SELECT ASSOCIATES.—When the Legislature grants a franchise to a particular person, his associates and assigns, it delegates to him the right to select the person thereafter to be associated with him in the enterprise.

Statement of Facts.

PUBLIC POLICY AS TO OWNERSHIP OF FRANCHISE.—If several persons, under an agreement of mutual interest, see fit to obtain a franchise from the Legislature in the name of one only, public policy requires that they should be made to rely solely upon his good faith in carrying out the agreement; and if he repudiates the contract on obtaining the franchise, equity will not grant relief.

WHAT AGREEMENTS TO SHARE FRANCHISE ARE ENFORCEABLE.—The rule adopted in Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 335, that an agreement of partnership in a franchise might be enforced by a person who had been let into possession, and expended money under an agreement to that effect after the granting of the franchise, is not to be extended beyond the facts of that case.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Napa County.

This action was originally commenced in the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District for Solano County, but was afterwards transferred to Napa County. On February 1st, 1869, a judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, that he should be let into equal participation and enjoyment with the defendant in the franchise and ferry business between Vallejo and Mare Island, and ordering a reference to the Court Commissioner to state an account as to the expenses and receipts of said ferry. The Commissioner reported that the expenses from the time of the granting of the franchise up to May 26th, 1869, amounted to twenty-one thousand three hundred and twenty-six dollars and sixty-eight cents, and the receipts during the same time, to twenty-one thousand one hundred and forty-four dollars and forty-six cents. Upon this report final judgment was rendered on June 18th, 1869, that upon plaintiff's paying to defendant ninety-one dollars and eleven cents, he should be admitted into a full and equal participation and enjoyment with defendant in the ownership of said ferry, its franchise, business, and property. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was overruled, and he then took this appeal from the judgment and order.

Argument for Appellant.

McAllisters & Bergin, for Appellant.

There never was any partnership between the parties. The plaintiff contributed no time, labor, or money towards the enterprise. It was only after the franchise was granted that he claimed any interest; but not even then did he contribute, or offer to contribute, to the expenses of building boats and putting the ferry in running order. His whole claim was based upon the influence, or pretended influence, exerted by him upon the State Senator from that district in procuring the passage of the bill; but there is nothing to show anything like a partnership between the parties. On his own statements the most he could claim was a half interest in the franchise for "lobby service;" but not even that as a partner. (Wheeler v. Farmer, 38 Cal. 203, and cases cited; Hasketh v. Blanchard, 4 East, 184; Harding v. Foxcraft, 6 Greenl. 77; Thorndike v. DeWolf, 6 Pick. 120; Parsons on Part. 548.)

But even admitting, for the sake of the argument, that there was a clear and binding agreement of partnership entered into between Powell and Maguire, that Maguire afterwards repudiated it, and himself proceeded and embarked his means in the proposed business of the partnership, and that Powell never contributed time, attention, means, or labor to the business Maguire thus carried on in disregard of the partnership agreement, is there any principle of law or equity that will make the individual means of Maguire partnership funds, and the increase, partnership profits, or entitle Powell to a division? We know of no such principle or rule. Upon general principles, in the case supposed, Maguire would only be liable for a breach of contract, for which he would be bound to render compensation. What would the compensation be? Clearly not half the profits and stock of the business to which the supposed excluded partner never contributed either. In the ordinary case of an employment for a definite period of time, if the employer wrongfully dismiss the employé, he is liable for damages; but these are not the full compensation for the unexpired term of service, but merely an indemnity for the damage sustained. (Clark v. Marsiglia, 1 Den. 318; Martin v. Wilson, id. 605; Spencer v. Halsted, id. 608; Owen v. Frink, 24 Cal. 178; Shannon v. Comstock, 21 Wend. 459; Hecker v. McCrea, 24 Wend. 309; Ashburner v. Balchen, 3 Seld. 264; Durkee v. Mott, 8 Barb. 428; Holmes v. Davis, 19 N. Y. 494; Giles v. Morrison, 50 Barb. 50; Utter v. Chapman, 38 Cal. 659.)

There were many errors of law committed on the trial. Among others it was error to admit parol evidence to establish the pretended contract, which, if there ever was any, was void under the Statute of Frauds. It was not to be performed within a year. Besides this, a franchise of this character is embraced within the term "lands, tenements, and hereditaments," as used in the statute, prohibiting any estate, or interest therein, or trust or power relating thereto, to be created, granted, assigned, surrendered, or declared, except in writing. (Rausch v. Van Hagan, 17 Cal. 122; Wait v. Van Allen, 22 N. Y. 322; Yturbide v. U. S., 22 How. 290; Ray v. Wilson, 13 Ind. 12; 13 Wend. 279; 23 Ill. 370.)

Again, there was error in denying the defendant's motion for nonsuit, and on this among other grounds—the subject matter of the alleged contract was not a legal subject matter of contract. The rights asserted by plaintiff were founded in illegality, in that they were based upon a combination to exercise improper influence on the Legislature in the discharge of its duty; and, also, because the Legislature, in the exercise of its bounty, and in the discharge of its sovereign duty, granted the franchise to the defendant alone, and those whom he might afterwards, by instrument in writing, associate with him in the performance of the duties imposed; and parol evidence was incompetent to control, qualify, or in any manner vary the terms of the Act itself—the express language of the statute being the only legal means of ascertaining who are the intended recipients of the legislative bounty. In other words, the alleged contract was void as against public policy. (Mills v. Mills, 36 Barb. 474; Brown v. Brown, 34 Barb. 388; Rose v. Trax, 21 Barb. 361; Harris v. Roof, 10 Barb. 494; Gill v. Williams, 12 La. An. 219; Clippenger v. Hepbaugh, 5 W. & Serg. 315; Hartsfield v. Gurden, 7 Watts, 152; Bryan v. Reynolds, 5 Wisc. 200; Powers v. Skinner, 34 Verm. 274; Wood v. Cann, 6 Dana, 366; Frost v. Inhabitants of Belmont, 6 Allen, 152; Magill v. Burnett, 7 J. J. Marsh. 640; Cunningham v. Cunningham, 18 B. Monroe, 19; Eddy v. Caperton, 4 R. I. 394; Fuller v. Dame, 18 Pick. 472; Gulick v. Baily, 5 Halst. 87; Pingry v. Washburn, 1 Aiken, 264; Spence v. Harvey, 22 Cal. 366; Swan v. Chorpenning, 20 Cal. 182; Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 387; Devlin v. Brady, 32 Barb. 518; Devlin v. Brady, 36 N. Y. 681; Davidson v. Seymour, 1 Bosw. 92; Satterlee v. Wade, 37 Cal. 168, and cases cited.)

We are not unaware of the decision of this Court in Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 335; but in that case the agreement, upon which it was held that Miles was entitled to one half the franchise, was subsequent to the grant, and he actually did reconstruct and repair the subject matter of the franchise under the agreement. All that was said in the opinion as to the validity of the original agreement to procure the franchise was obiter, and at best questionable doctrine. According to the test there expressed, there is scarcely a “lobby” arrangement ever made that would not be legal. The true rule, in the language of Justice FIELD is that “all agreements for a share in the result of legislation suggest the use of sinister and corrupt means for the accomplishment of the end desired, and are therefore void."

Hartson & Burnell, and Thomas P. Stoney, for Respondent.

A partnership must in all cases exist in advance of its business. Before the partnership business can be launched, there must be an association of the partners for the purpose of embarking in the enterprise. It is hard to conceive of a business which does not require preparations preliminary to its practical operation, and the coöperation of partners in making these preparations is as legitimately within the scope of the partnership as their acts after the principal business has actually been commenced. (Smith v. Tarlton & Finley, 2 Barb. Ch. 336.) Our position then is, that Powell and Maguire were partners, and that as such they coöperated in all that was done to procure the franchise, and that the franchise was applied for and obtained by them under the express agreement that it was to be used by them as partners in carrying on the proposed ferry business. The evidence shows that they associated themselves together as partners, and as such applied for and obtained the franchise, and we insist that neither of them can exclude the other from a share of the acquisitions of the association, merely because by the terms of the partnership it was to continue for a longer period than the law would recognize as obligatory upon either of them.

Being such partners, the grant of the franchise to "Maguire and his associates" rendered Maguire a trustee, holding for himself and Powell. (Beaumont v. Whitney, 20 Maine, 413; Collyer on Part. 135; 2 Black. Com. 244; Bouvier Law Dic. "Purchase.") The franchise being essential to the copartnership business, as soon as it was acquired it vested by operation of law in the partnership. (Forster v. Hale, 5 Ves. 308; Leach v. Leach, 18 Pick. 68; Featherstonhough v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 298; Dart on Vendors, 434; Collyer on

Argument for Respondent.

Part. 181; Tiffany & Bullard on Trust. 189; Marcy v. Herrick, 18 Penn. St. 128; see, also, Jenkins v. Frink, 30 Cal.

Granting that a prospective legislative grant of a franchise such as this was a mere jus precarium and not susceptible of being contracted for, yet the franchise when obtained was property, and as such might be the subject of an implied trust. There is nothing in a ferry franchise, as such, which can prevent an assignment of it. If it is inequitable for a partner to exclude his copartner from a share in the franchise, and the law allows him to associate his copartner with him in its enjoyment if he desires, why would not equity compel him to do that justice which the law does not forbid his doing voluntarily? The grant here was not to John Maguire alone, but to him "and his associates" already selected, or to be selected. It was not a personal trust reposed in him, but was made expressly assignable by the use of the words "and assigns."

There is nothing illegal or contrary to public policy in a joint effort of partners to procure for themselves a franchise from the Legislature. There is and can be no illegality in seeking what the Legislature can lawfully grant. If such franchises are given to and may be enjoyed by more than one, why cannot two or more persons unite in praying for them? If all legislation must be the "spontaneous act of the legislative department," it would be equally unlawful for one man, as for several, to petition for and use his influence to obtain a legislative grant for himself. Unless the law, out of tender regard for the weakness of legislators, prohibits all application to them for franchises, there was no impropriety whatever in the combination of Maguire and Powell to obtain theirs from the Legislature. The case of Miles v. Thorn, 38 Cal. 335, is an authority directly in point and fully supports this position.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

In the year 1866 the Legislature granted to the defendant, "his associates and assigns," a franchise authorizing him or them to establish, and for twenty (20) years to maintain, a steam ferry between Vallejo and Mare Island. Shortly after obtaining the franchise the defendant constructed a steam ferry-boat at his own expense, and in the Spring of 1867 commenced, and has ever since continued, to use her as a ferry-boat between said points. The plaintiff claims that, before the franchise was obtained, he and the defendant had entered into a parol agreement, to the effect that they would jointly, at their mutual expense and for their mutual benefit, establish and operate a steam ferry between said points; and as a part of said agreement, it was further understood and agreed that they would, if practicable, obtain from the Legislature, for their joint and mutual benefit, a franchise authorizing the establishment of said ferry, with the right to operate the same; that it was agreed between them that the franchise should be obtained in the name of the defendant and his associates, and the plaintiff, through his friendly relations with the Senator from that district, was chiefly or wholly instrumental in procuring the franchise to be granted; that immediately after the franchise was obtained, he applied to the defendant to convey or assign to him one half of it, in accordance with their previous agreement; that the defendant at first promised to make the transfer, but evaded doing so from time to time, and finally expressly refused; and commenced, and has ever since continued, to operate the ferry for his own emolument, denying the plaintiff's right to participate therein. The action is brought to establish the plaintiff's right to one half the franchise and ferry, and for an accounting. The answer explicitly denies that there was any understanding or agreement to the effect that the plaintiff was to have any interest whatever in the franchise or ferry, or that he is entitled to participate in any manner therein. At the hearing the Court decided the issues in favor of the plaintiff, and after an accounting was had entered a judgment accordingly. The defendant appeals, as well from the judgment as from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Upon the plaintiff's own showing the contract was, at most, but an agreement to form a partnership, to take effect when the franchise was obtained; but it clearly appears that the partnership was never launched. On the contrary, the defendant proceeded, shortly after obtaining the franchise, to construct a steam ferry-boat, at his own expense, and for his own exclusive use, and has ever since used her for maintaining the ferry, at his own cost and for his exclusive benefit, denying the plaintiff's right to participate therein, and excluding him from the management and control thereof. Upon these facts, it is obvious that if the plaintiff's rights rested solely on a verbal agreement, to the effect that he and the defendant would establish and maintain the ferry at their joint expense, and for their joint benefit, without reference to the franchise, the plaintiff's only remedy would be an action at law for a breach of contract. He would have no right to participate in the profits of an enterprise to which he had contributed nothing, and could claim no interest in a boat constructed by the defendant, at his own expense, and for his own use, nor in the earnings thereof. In such cases it is well settled that, when the partnership was never launched, and when one of the copartners has proceeded to conduct the enterprise in his own name, at his own cost, and for his own exclusive benefit, excluding the other party therefrom, and repudiating the partnership agreement, the only remedy of the injured party is an action at law for a breach of contract. There would be in such a case, no existing partnership, but only an agreement to form one, which was never consummated by launching the enterprise. But it remains to be considered whether the plaintiff stands upon a better footing, because there was coupled with the contract a further agreement that, in furtherance of the enterprise, they would obtain, as they afterward did, the ferry franchise in the name of the defendant, his associates and assigns, for their joint benefit. Upon this branch of the case the first inquiry is, whether a Court of equity, upon the facts stated in the complaint, will decree the defendant to be a trustee, holding the legal title to a moiety of the franchise for the use of the plaintiff. In Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 335, we had occasion to consider a somewhat similar question. In that case it appeared that Thorne, at his own expense, had constructed and maintained a wagon road for public travel; but the road having gotten out of repair, he desired to obtain from the Legislature a franchise authorizing him to reconstruct the road, and to collect tolls thereon; and with this view he agreed with Miles, that if the latter would prepare a proper bill for that purpose, and present it to a member of the Legislature for introduction into that body, he would convey to Miles one half the franchise, when obtained. It further appeared that after the franchise was obtained in the name of Thorne, the agreement was renewed, and Miles was placed in possession of one half the road, which he repaired at his own expense—Thorne repairing the other half, and collecting tolls on the whole road. The action was brought to compel a conveyance of one half the franchise, and for an accounting. On these facts, we held that the contract was not contra bonos mores, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief demanded. But, in the case at bar, the facts are quite different—the plaintiff has not been let into possession, nor expended any time, labor, or money under the franchise, but rests solely on his naked right under the antecedent verbal agreement, to compel the defendant to convey to him a moiety of the franchise. In my opinion, principles of public policy forbid that a Court of equity should enforce such a trust, resting wholly on an antecedent agreement, that some one else beside the beneficiary named in the statute was to participate in its benefits, in virtue of a secret understanding between the parties to that effect. Such a practice, if sustained by the Courts, would naturally lead to powerful combinations to procure vicious and corrupt legislation in the name of the least obnoxious of the parties, on an agreement of the confederates to divide the spoils between them. When the Legislature grants a franchise to a particular person, his associates and assigns, it delegates to him the right to select the person thereafter to be associated with him in the enterprise. After obtaining the franchise, if he shall then, by a new contract upon a proper consideration, and in due form, agree to convey a portion of it to another, or if he shall afterwards ratify an antecedent contract otherwise unobjectionable, as in Miles v. Thorne, and shall let the party into possession, thereby causing him to expend his time, labor, or money in furtherance of the enterprise, as was done in that case, there can be no doubt that a Court of equity would enforce such a contract. But if several persons desiring to obtain a franchise from the Legislature, in which they are all to be mutually interested, see fit to ask it in the name of only one, public policy requires that they should be made to rely solely on his good faith in carrying out the agreement; and if he repudiates the contract on obtaining the franchise a Court of equity will grant no relief. It may be that, if the Legislature had known beforehand who the real parties in interest were, they would not have made the grant; and if the Courts could be appealed to, to enforce such secret antecedent agreements, unsupported by any subsequent acts of the ostensible beneficiary, it is evident that powerful secret combinations would be formed to procure vicious legislation under false pretenses. What might appear to be a harmless or beneficial enterprise under the control of one person of good character, might prove to be a very dangerous and pernicious scheme in the hands of twenty secret associates of bad character, and to whom the Legislature might have refused to make the grant, if their interest had been disclosed on the face of the bill. I think the rule adopted in Miles v. Thorne ought not to be extended beyond the facts of that case; and I am, therefore, of opinion that a Court of equity ought not to enforce the verbal agreement set up in the complaint, to the effect that it was agreed before the franchise was obtained that the plaintiff was to be equally interested in it with the defendant. In my opinion the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with an order to the Court below to dismiss the action.

RHODES, J., concurring:

I concur in the foregoing opinion and judgment, and I am of the opinion that the franchise in question is real estate; that in its transfer it is to be governed by the rules applicable to the transfer of title to other real estate — the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, and the rules in equity, respecting the creation of trusts — and that the evidence in this case fails to show the creation of a trust in favor of the plaintiff within those rules.

Mr. Chief Justice SPRAGUE did not participate in the foregoing decision.

OLIVER IRWIN v. A. P. TOWNE AND SAMUEL H. TOWNE.

ORDER OF SUPREME COURT AS TO NEW TRIAL.—Where the Supreme Court reverses an order of an inferior Court denying a motion for a new trial and remands the cause for further proceedings, in accordance with the opinion given in the case, which opinion does not indicate that the proceedings should be different from the proceedings that would have followed the granting of the motion for a new trial in the first place, the order of the Supreme Court places the case, in point of the mere procedure to be followed, in the same situation as though the Court below had directed a new trial.

THE appeal in this case was decided at the October Term, 1871, and is reported in 42 Cal. p. 381. The defendants applied to the Supreme Court for a modification of the judgment.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

In reversing the order denying the motion for a new trial an opinion was filed in which a construction was given to the descriptive calls in the deed under which the plaintiff claimed, but the opinion intimated nothing as to what particular proceedings were to be had on the return of the cause to the Court below. It concluded as follows: "Order denying a new trial reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion." Had the Court below sustained the motion of the plaintiff for a new trial, no question could have arisen as to the proceedings to follow in the cause. Had no appeal been taken from such an order a new trial must have been the result, unless the plaintiff had dismissed the action. The order of this Court reversing the order denying the motion and remanding the cause for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion filed, places the case, in point of the mere procedure to be followed, in the same situation as though the Court below had itself directed a new trial, for, as we have said, there is nothing to be found in the opinion filed which would indicate that the proceedings to be had should be different from the proceedings in any other case in which an application for a new trial had been allowed.

The application for a modification of the order entered here is denied and the remittitur will issue forthwith.

DEFECTIVE CERTIFICATE OF CLERK.—A Clerk's certificate, filed in support of a motion to dismiss an appeal under Rule Four of the Supreme Court, is defective, if it fail to state the fact, or the date of the service of the notice of appeal, or the character of the evidence of service.

CERTIFICATE TO SHOW STATEMENT WAS SETTLED.—Where a statement on appeal has properly been filed, the Clerk's certificate must show that the statement was settled.

Query.—Whether a statement on an appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial would in any case be necessary or proper.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

The plaintiff had judgment and the defendant appealed.

George W. Tyler, for Appellant.

Terry & Carr, for Respondents, moved to dismiss the appeal upon a Clerk's certificate.

[The certificate is not on file.—REPORTER.]

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

Motion to dismiss the appeal, upon a Clerk's certificate, under Rule Four.

Points decided.

The certificate is defective because it does not state either the fact or the date of the service of the notice of appeal, or the character of the evidence of service. It is certified that a statement on appeal was filed, that amendments were filed, but that the statement has not been settled. It is certified that the appeal is taken from an order granting a new trial. Whether a statement on an appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial would in any case be necessary or proper, it is unnecessary at this time to decide; but it has repeatedly been announced by this Court, that in cases where a statement on appeal had properly been filed, the certificate must show that the statement had been settled, otherwise the certificate would not comply with Rule Four, and the respondent would not be entitled to have the appeal dismissed on his ex parte motion.

Motion denied.

SANFORD BENNETT v. WILLIAM C. WALLACE, JUDGE OF THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE SEVENTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

WHEN THE WRIT OF CERTIORARI LIES.—The writ of certiorari lies only in those cases in which, in the exercise of judicial functions, an excess of jurisdiction has occurred and in which there is no appeal, nor in the judgment of the Court any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

CERTIORARI WILL NOT LIE WHERE AN APPEAL MIGHT HAVE BEEN TAKEN.—In a case where an appeal from the judgment might have been taken, but the time for taking it was suffered to elapse, the case does not thereby become one in which "there is no appeal," within the meaning of the Practice Act, Sec. 456.

SUBJECT OF THE PRACTICE ACT AS TO CERTIORARI.—The Practice Act, as to the writ of certiorari, was intended to supply a remedy where none existed in the first instance, and not to supplement one lost through the laches of the party himself.

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, C. J.

CERTIORARI to the Judge of the Seventh Judicial District.

The petition represents that on the 26th day of September, 1867, the District Judge, at his chambers, signed a decree in the case of Susan Bennett against the petitioner, in which it was adjudged and decreed that the bonds of matrimony existing between the parties be dissolved; that the petitioner pay to Susan Bennett the sum of five hundred dollars for her costs, and thirty dollars per month for the support of an infant child; that the said Susan have the care and custody of the child, and that said decree be entered as of the last day of the proceeding June Term of the Court. The petitioner further states that there was no stipulation or consent of the parties that the cause should be heard at chambers, or that the decree should be entered as of the June Term, and he asks the Supreme Court to set aside the decree on the ground that the District Judge exceeded his jurisdiction. It does not appear that any attempt was made to take an appeal.

A. Thomas, for Petitioner, cited In Re Presentments Co., 14 Mayo Jr. C. L. R. 392; People v. Supervisors of Alleghany, 15 Wend. 198; People v. City of Rochester, 21 Barb. 656; Matter of Mount Morris Square, 2 Hill, 14 (19 N. Y. 531).

J. B. Southard, for Respondent, cited Milliken v. Huber, 21 Cal. 166; People v. Shepard, 28 Cal. 115; Clary v. Hoagland, 13 Cal. 173.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The writ of certiorari lies only in those cases in which, in the exercise of judicial functions, an excess of jurisdiction has occurred — and in which “there is no appeal,” etc. (Pr. Act, Sec. 456.) Unless the case be brought within both these conditions, the writ must be dismissed.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

It is not denied on the part of the petitioner that the final judgment and the orders of the District Court in question might have been examined here upon appeal taken in time for that purpose; but it is insisted that, as the time limited by statute for the taking of the appeal has been suffered to elapse, the case has thereby become one in which there is no appeal, and is thus brought within the terms of the statute referred to. This view is answered by the case of Milliken v. Huber, 21 Cal. 166. The statute was intended to supply a remedy where none existed in the first instance, and not to supplement one lost through the laches of the party himself.

follows, viz: That judgment and dismissal were rendered and entered in this action in favor of defendants, together with defendants' costs and disbursements incurred in said cause, amounting to the sum of nineteen dollars and seventy-five cents, on the 28th day of July, A. D. 1870. That on the 19th day of January, A. D. 1871, plaintiffs filed a notice of appeal in said cause, wherein they appealed to the Supreme Court of the State of California, from the said judgment therein made and entered on the 28th day of July, A. D. 1870, in favor of defendants and against plaintiffs, and from the whole thereof, and that said notice of appeal was served upon the respondent on the 19th day of January, 1871, as appears from the endorsement thereon in the following words and figures: 'Service of within made on plaintiff this 19th January, 1871. Pringle & Pringle, attorneys for plaintiff.' That an undertaking on appeal, in due form of law, was filed in said cause on the 19th day of January, A. D. 1871. That no statement on appeal has been filed in said cause. That the appellants have not requested the Clerk of said Court to make, or to certify to, a correct transcript of the record in said cause. In witness whereof," etc.

The certificate fills the requirements of Rule Four, and is sufficient both in form and in substance.

Many of the certificates presented to this Court are radically defective, and the above certificate is inserted in order to give the Clerks and counsel a convenient and accurate form. It can readily be varied to suit a different state of facts.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA
v. CYRUS SANFORD.

INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENT CHARGE OF DEATH.—In an indictment for murder it was charged that the accused, "on the fourth day of September, A. D. 1870, at the county and State aforesaid, did feloniously, willfully, maliciously, and of his malice aforethought, shoot, kill, and murder one Enoch Barnes:" Held, to be a sufficient charge of the death of Barnes.

OBJECTION TO JUROR.—Where, in a criminal case, a juror whose name is on the poll tax list only, is sworn to try the cause, and the defendant receives the juror without objection as to his competency, he cannot be heard, after the verdict is rendered, to object that the juror was lacking in this particular.

POINT CONSIDERED AS WAIVED.—In a criminal case the defendant's counsel offered to question a witness as to her husband having, at her instance, approached the defendant's friends for the purpose of obtaining money from him. The proffer was denied by the court "for the present." No exception was reserved, the proffer was not subsequently renewed, and no effort was made to obtain an ultimate decision on the point: Held, that it must be considered as waived.

TESTIMONY OF WITNESS NOT AN EXPERT AS TO SANITY.—A witness, even though not an expert, who details a conversation had between himself and another, may also, in connection therewith, state his opinion, belief, or impression as to the state of the mind of such person as these seemed to the witness at the time of the conversation.

RELIGIOUS BELIEF OF WITNESS—DYING DECLARATIONS.—No person is to be held incompetent to be a witness in this State on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief. This rule applies to dying declarations. The common law rule in this respect is abrogated.

ORAL INSTRUCTION IN CRIMINAL CASE.—The giving of an oral instruction to the jury, in a criminal case, without the consent of the defendant, is error; and the consent of the defendant cannot be presumed from his presence and failure to make the objection when the oral instruction is given.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventeenth Judicial District, County of Los Angeles.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Haven & Howard, for Appellant.

The indictment does not state that Barnes died within a year and a day. (People v. Michel, 34 Cal. 211.)

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, C. J.

The conviction was invalid because not found by a competent jury. The statute requires the juror to be assessed on the last assessment roll of his township or county, on real or personal property, or both. (Hit. Dig. 3870.) One juror was on the poll tax list only.

The Court erred in not permitting the defense to prove by the witness Dolores Orosco—the principal witness for the prosecution—that at her instigation her husband approached parties for the purpose of procuring money from the defendant to enable them to avoid her being a witness. Such testimony would have weakened, if not entirely destroyed the value of her evidence.

The Court erred in allowing the witness Burns, who was not an expert, to testify in regard to the condition of mind of the deceased at the time he made purported dying declarations. (24 N. Y. 298; 34 id. 190; 36 id. 276.) The proof does not show that the deceased was under a sense of immediate or impending dissolution, and it does show that he was not under any religious feeling when he made the purported dying declarations. Such declarations must not only be made under a sense of impending dissolution, but of his "accountability to his Maker, and the deep impression that he is soon to render to him the final account." (1 Greenl. Ev. 157.)

The Court erred in charging the jury orally. (People v. Payne, 8 Cal. 34; People v. Bealer, 6 Cal. 246; People v. Demint, 8 Cal. 423; People v. Ah Tong, 12 Cal. 345; People v. Charles, 26 Cal. 78.)

Attorney General Jo Hamilton, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder in the second degree, committed in the felonious killing of one Enoch Barnes; and from the judgment rendered, and an order of the Court denying his motion for a new trial, he prosecuted this appeal.

First—The first point made challenges the sufficiency of the indictment, which, after the usual caption, is as follows:

“The said Cyrus Sanford is accused by the Grand Jury of the County of Los Angeles, State of California, by this indictment, found this eighth day of September, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and seventy, of the crime of murder, committed as follows: The said Cyrus Sanford, on the fourth day of September, A. D. eighteen hundred and seventy, at the county and State aforesaid, did feloniously, willfully, maliciously, and of his malice aforethought, shoot, kill, and murder one Enoch Barnes, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the State of California.”

It is objected that “the indictment does not state that Barnes died within a year and a day,” etc. This objection rests upon the circumstance that the time of the death is not specially stated; and if there be anything in the objection, it might have been extended further, as it is not specially stated that Barnes died at all. But the averment in substance is that he died on the fourth day of September, 1870, for it is alleged that on that day the prisoner, of his malice aforethought, did kill and murder him—and this, under the provisions of the Criminal Practice Act, is sufficient. (People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 191.)

Second—There is nothing in the objection to the competency of the juror. It was the duty of the defendant in the first place to have examined him as to his competency in the respect referred to at the time the jury was impaneled. He does not seem to have made any objection to his competency even afterwards, but took his trial before him with a knowledge of the fact that his name was on the poll tax list only, and not on the real or personal property tax list. Having deliberately taken his chance of a favorable verdict, he cannot be heard to object now that a juror of his own choosing was lacking in a qualification of this technical character. (People v. Stonecifer, 6 Cal. 405.)

Third—The record does not make it apparent that the Court definitively refused to permit the prisoner's counsel to interrogate the witness, Dolores Orosco, as to her husband having, at her instance, approached the prisoner's friends for the purpose of obtaining money from him. The proffer upon that point was denied by the Court "for the present," and no exception was reserved. The cross-examination of the witness was thereupon continued at considerable length upon other points; but the proffer was not subsequently renewed, nor was any effort made to obtain the ultimate decision of the Court thereon; and the point must, therefore, be considered as waived.

Fourth—The next point relied upon concerns the admissibility of the evidence given by Burns, the Sheriff, by whom the prosecution were permitted to prove certain dying declarations of the deceased. The witness was asked by the prosecution to state the condition of mind of the deceased at the time—whether it was clear or confused. This was objected to by the defense, because the witness was not a medical man, etc.; but the objection was overruled, and the witness answered in substance, that judging from the conversation of the deceased at the time, his mind was clear. It is said here, for the prisoner, that this was the expression of a mere opinion, by a non-expert witness, and should have been excluded on that ground. We do not think so. We understand the rule on this point to be that a witness, even though not an expert, who details a conversation had between himself and another, may also, in connection therewith, state his opinion, belief, or impression as to the state of the mind of such person, as these seemed or appeared to the witness at the time of the conversation. The impression made upon the mind of Burns, to the effect that the mental condition of the deceased was unobstructed, was an impression he had formed by personal observation. He had heard the utterances of the deceased; these he could repeat, or substantially repeat, to the jury; but he had also observed his tone, gesture, appearance, and his general demeanor at the time; these he could not be expected to reproduce to the jury as he saw and observed them; nor could he even describe them in giving his evidence, without in some degree indicating his own opinion or impression of what they were—and this, it is said, he may not be permitted to do. We think, however, that this cannot be said to be an expression of the mere opinion of the witness in the objectionable sense. In the language of Judge GASTON: "It approaches to knowledge, and is knowledge, so far as the imperfection of human nature will permit knowledge of these things to be acquired; and the result thus acquired should be communicated to the jury, because they have not had the opportunities of personal observation, and because in no other way can they effectually have the benefit of the knowledge gained by the observations of others." (2 Ired. 78.)

Fifth—It clearly appears by the evidence that at the time he made his statement to Burns of the circumstances under which the prisoner inflicted the wound upon him, the deceased had no hope of recovery. This is not seriously controverted, but it is said that at all events "it is obvious that the deceased when he made the purported dying declarations was not under any religious feelings." Burns, the witness, said: "I saw no change in his actions, only such as one would show suffering from pain. He did not speak of a future state—he gave no dying words to carry to his family."

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, C. J.

The rule by which dying declarations are admitted is set down in the authorities as constituting an exception to another rule—the general one, by which hearsay evidence is rejected. “The persons whose declarations are thus admitted are considered as standing in the same situation as if they were sworn; the danger of impending death being equivalent to the sanction of an oath.” (1 Greenl. Ev., Sec. 157.) It is true that the author immediately adds that where it appears that the declarant is wanting in religious sense of accountability to his Maker his dying declarations are not admissible. The result is that if the declarant, while living, would have been incompetent to testify as a witness in the case, because of want of a religious sense of accountability, then his dying declarations, if he remained in the same condition of mind on that point, must, under the rule of the common law, have been excluded. That in this State, however, the common law rule in that respect has been abrogated, and that no person is to be held incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief, is clear. (Const., Art. I, Sec. 4; Hitt. Genl. Laws, Sec. 5330; 17 Cal. 605.) It mattered not, therefore, upon the point of the mere competency of the evidence, even had it appeared that the deceased had no religious belief. But however this may be, it did not in anywise appear what the views of the deceased, in fact, were upon the subject of a future state, or of his accountability to his Maker. Burns states that he said nothing on that subject, and Burns is the only witness who refers to it at all. But the mere silence of the deceased in that respect would not indicate the particular state of his mind upon such matters. We are of opinion, therefore, that the objection of the prisoner to the proof of the dying declarations of the deceased were correctly overruled.

Sixth—The evidence being in and the argument of counsel concluded, the Court proceeded to charge the jury. In respect to the charge the bill of exceptions states as follows:

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

"The Court read from the statute several sections of the criminal code, but requested the Clerk to note the sections read as part of the instructions given at the instance of the District Attorney, and occupied some length of time in making to them oral remarks; observing, among other things, that they were exclusive judges of the fact; that they could reject the whole or part of the evidence; if the Court erred there was a higher tribunal to which the defendant could resort; that there was a deep responsibility resting upon them; that they must discard from their minds all bias, and regard the testimony and make a conscientious decision." There was no consent upon the part of the prisoner that the charge might be given in any other manner than in writing.

The amended statute of May, 1855, in reference to the charge of the Court in criminal cases, provides as follows: "Such charge shall be reduced to writing before it is given; and in no case shall any charge or instructions be given to the jury, otherwise than in writing, unless by the mutual consent of the parties." (Stats. 1855, p. 275.) In The People v. Beder, 6 Cal. 246, it was held that "the rule prescribed by the statute is mandatory and not directory;" and the judgment was reversed because the statute had not been observed by the Court below. In People v. Payne, 8 Cal. 341, an instruction had been given in writing, but a verbal qualification had been added, and the judgment there was reversed. In People v. Demint, 8 Cal. 423, the judgment was reversed upon the sole ground of non-compliance with the statute in respect to reducing the charge of the Court to writing before it was given to the jury. In People v. Ah Fong, 12 Cal. 345, the judgment was reversed here on the same ground, BALDWIN, J., delivering a somewhat elaborate opinion to the effect that a charge given, not in writing at the time, amounts, per se, to an error for which the judgment will be reversed, and that an offer to reduce it to writing after it had been given, would not cure the error. In People

v. Shaw, 26 Cal. 78, a written charge had been delivered, and the jury had retired; they subsequently came in and were orally instructed by the Court in explanation of the charge already given in writing—the defendant neither consenting or objecting to the oral explanation. The judgment was reversed, the Court saying: “The cases are numerous and uniform to the point that the giving of an oral charge or instruction to the jury, in a criminal case, without the consent of the defendant, is error, and that his consent cannot be presumed from his presence and failure to make the objection when the oral instruction is given.”

For upwards of fifteen years this statute has been in force, and during all that time the decisions here have been uniform, not only as to the meaning and most obvious intent of the Act itself, but also as to the consequences certain to follow here upon its non-observance in the trial Court.

We hope that we have seen the last case brought here upon this point.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

CROCKETT, J., concurring especially:

I concur in the opinion of the Chief Justice, except in so far as it holds that in this State dying declarations are admissible in evidence, even though it affirmatively appears that the dying person had no religious faith whatever, or any sense of future accountability. If it be conceded that his opinion in matters of religious faith, or his belief as to a state of future accountability, do not affect the competency of a witness testifying under oath, it by no means results that the same rule is applicable to dying declarations. The law has provided proper penalties for perjury, which are supposed to afford a sufficient guaranty that persons testifying under oath will speak the truth; and the only ground on which dying declarations are admitted in evidence is, that a person who is about to die and is conscious of that fact, has at least as strong a motive to speak the truth as a witness testifying under oath, who may be visited with a prosecution for perjury if he testifies falsely. But a dying person who is wholly devoid of religious faith, and who does not believe in a state of future accountability, has no other motive to speak the truth than his mere abstract sense of right and wrong. If he believes that he is in no danger of punishment, either in this world or the next, if his declarations should be willfully false, there would be nothing left but a mere abstract sense of right and wrong compelling him to speak the truth. If this alone be sufficient to justify the admission of his declarations, there is no reason why the same rule should not be applied to a witness in good faith. If I correctly understand the reason of this rule which admits dying declarations in evidence, it is that in the solemn hour of death a dying person who is about to enter upon a future state of existence in which he is to be, in some manner, held accountable for his acts in this life, has at least as strong a motive to speak the truth as if he were acting under oath, and for this reason the oath is dispensed with. But there would be no such motive if he did not believe in a future state.

RIGHT TO THE USE OF FLUME FOR TAILINGS.—A party mining upon a ravine which runs into another ravine is not clothed, by virtue of his right to use the ravine upon which he is mining as an outlet for his tailings, with the general right to break in, at any point he may select, upon the tail-race of another constructed upon the other ravine.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Second Judicial District, County of Butte.

In an action to enjoin the defendants from using the plaintiff's tailrace judgment was rendered for the defendants. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial. The motion was denied, and they appealed from the judgment and from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

appropriated a portion of it for a special purpose, and by their labor and industry rendered it useful. We fail to see why the maxim, Qui prior est in tempore, portior est in jure, does not apply to the particular right they claimed. The claim is not to the exclusive use of Campbell's Ravine, but to the exclusive use of their own cut and flume. The next miner who came along could exercise the same privilege that plaintiffs did, i. e., make a cut and flume down the same ravine; and the testimony shows that from the defendants' claims to Sawmill Ravine a cut and flume similar to plaintiffs could be constructed cheaper than plaintiffs' was, and without any interference whatever with plaintiffs' improvements.

George Cadwalader, for Respondents.

The facts show: First — That an artificial mouth for Anderson's Ravine was constructed and used before plaintiffs' rights accrued in Campbell's Ravine. Second — That it had been used eight, and perhaps ten, years before the commencement of this suit; that the defendants bought the use of this outlet for ten years, and the plaintiffs afterwards purchased the remaining interest — that is, subject to the defendants' ten years right — which had not expired at the beginning of this suit. Third — That the running into Campbell's Ravine was invited, and attended with profit, and not loss, to the plaintiffs and their grantors.

It must follow from these facts that the Court below was not wrong in refusing the plaintiffs an injunction.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The mining grounds of the plaintiffs are near "Campbell's Ravine" — those of the defendants lying southerly, and near "Anderson's Ravine." The general course of Campbell's

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

Ravine is rather westerly, and that of Anderson's Ravine southwesterly, until the latter empties into the former, after which both run into "Sawmill Ravine," still further in a westerly or southwesterly direction. The controversy arises out of the conflicting claims of the litigants, respectively, to the use of these ravines, "Anderson's" and "Campbell's," so called, as means of carrying off the tailings from their respective mining grounds.

The plaintiffs had constructed a cut, flume, and tailrace, which, running along the general course of, and near to, Campbell's Ravine, crossed it twice — the defendants afterwards dug a cut some eight feet in depth, which, starting from a tunnel of theirs, and not running along the general course of Anderson's Ravine to, or near to, its mouth, but turning rather sharply to the southward, struck the tailrace of the plaintiffs at a point some three hundred yards above, where Anderson's Ravine naturally debouches into Campbell's Ravine; and through a flume laid in this cut the defendants pour their tailings into the race of the plaintiffs. These facts, by their mere statement, dispose of the principal defense upon which the defendants rely to justify their appropriation of the plaintiffs' flume and tailrace. The defendants say, in substance, that their mining claims are situate on Anderson's Ravine; that the "natural outlet" for their tailings is through that Ravine into Campbell's Ravine, which they, therefore, have the right to follow over and through any flume or other structure erected by the plaintiffs, upon the line of this "natural outlet;" but the answer is, that even if this claim to follow the "natural outlet" be conceded, and the consequent right to use the race of the plaintiff, at the mouth of Anderson's Ravine, be thereby established, it clearly does not clothe them with the general right to break in upon the tailrace of the plaintiffs at any point the defendants may select along its entire line — even PREMATURE FILING OF DECLARATORY STATEMENT.—The filing of a declaratory statement in the Register's office before the surveyor General files the plat of the survey, is premature and of no effect.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Eighth Judicial District, County of Humboldt.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

The plaintiff had judgment and the defendant appealed.

H. W. Havens and Elisha Cook, for Appellant.

Charles Westmoreland, for Respondent.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

It appears from the cross-complaint that the parties were contesting preëmption claimants of the land in controversy; that the plat of the survey was filed with the Register of the proper Land Office, on the 26th day of April, 1856; that the defendant filed his declaratory statement February 20th, 1856; that the plaintiff filed his declaratory statement October 11th, 1858; that after a hearing of the contest before the Register and Receiver of the local Land Office, and before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and finally before the Secretary of the Interior, the right of preëmption was awarded to the plaintiff, and subsequently a patent was issued to him. There are allegations in the cross-complaint, the purpose of which is to show that the decision of the Secretary of the Interior was procured by fraudulent acts and practices of the plaintiff; but that portion of the case need not be considered, as there is one point upon which the Court below was clearly right in sustaining the demurrer to the cross-complaint. The defendant's declaratory statement was filed before the Surveyor General had filed the plat of the survey in the Register's office. The declaratory statement was filed prematurely, and was therefore a nullity. Such is the current of the decisions of the Land Department, though there is one case, and perhaps more, to the contrary. It would seem to be no more unreasonable or illogical, to hold that the filing of a complaint, before the cause of action had accrued, would be valid, as the first step in the commencement of an action, than to hold that the filing of a declaratory statement, before the time authorized by law, was valid as a preëmption claim. The defendant had no standing in the contest before the officers of the Land Department, as he did not show that he occupied the status of a preëmption claimant, and he now claiming no right to the land, except in the capacity of a preëmption claimant, cannot be heard to aver that the plaintiff holds the land in trust for him.

Judgment affirmed.

ELLEN R. VAN VALKENBURG v. ALBERT BROWN.

STATUS OF CITIZENSHIP NOT CONFERRED BY RECENT AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.—No white person born within the limits of the United States and subject to their jurisdiction, or born without those limits and subsequently naturalized under their laws, owes his status of citizenship to the recent amendments to the Federal Constitution.

PURPOSE OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.—The purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States was to confer the status of citizenship upon a numerous class of persons domiciled within the limits of the United States who could not be brought within the operation of the naturalization laws because native born, and whose birth, though native, had at the same time left them without the status of citizenship. Such persons were not white persons, but in the main were of African blood, who had been held in slavery in this country, or having themselves never been held in slavery, were the native-born descendants of slaves.

Argument for Appellant.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF CITIZENSHIP—Under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States are guaranteed and protected in every State beyond the operation of State laws.

THE ELECTIVE FRANCHISE NOT AN IMMUNITY OF CITIZENSHIP.—The elective franchise is not one of the immunities or privileges intended in the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

POWER OF STATE TO DETERMINE WHO MAY VOTE NOT CURTAILED.—The mere power of the State to determine the class of inhabitants who may vote within her limits, is not curtailed in the Fourteenth Amendment.

FEMALES NOT MADE VOTERS BY THE FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT.—The Fifteenth Amendment took away the authority of the State to discriminate against citizens of the United States on account of either race, color, or previous condition of servitude; but the power of exclusion upon all other grounds, including that of sex, remains intact.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, County of Santa Cruz.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Albert Hagan, for Appellant.

The office of the Fourteenth Amendment is not to simply secure to all persons equal capacities before the law, but it grants to all persons who are citizens the broadest rights which attach themselves to every citizen of the Republic. (Live Stock Association v. Crescent City, 1 Abbott, 396.)

Suffrage is a fundamental right—one of the privileges of the citizen by virtue of citizenship in a free government. As soon as one is raised to the dignity of a citizen he can claim the right of suffrage as one inherent in a Republic and fundamental in its nature. (Abbott v. Bailey, 2 Kent, Sec. 72; Corfield v. Correll, 6 Pick. 42.)

California yet retains the word "white" in her organic law prescribing the qualifications of electors, yet the negro votes here by virtue of the Constitution of the United States. If the right of suffrage belongs to every citizen, by virtue of the organic law of the Union, then no State can prohibit any citizen from voting. It needs no prohibition in the Constitution of the United States to prevent States from disfranchising any citizen, for, if once invested with the fundamental right to vote, no State can destroy, no Legislature can abolish it.

To say that the Fifteenth Amendment goes far to interpret the Fourteenth Amendment and to thereby grant or imply that the States may restrict the right of suffrage as to other than male citizens, is an admission that the Fourteenth Amendment by its terms does away with the right of the several States to any restriction over the right to vote. States may regulate the manner of voting, but cannot take away the right to vote, if the latter is conceded to be a fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

Albert Heath, for Respondent.

The respondent admits that the appellant is a citizen of the United States, over the age of twenty-one years, but denies that under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, the Clerk of Santa Cruz County is authorized to place upon the Great Register of said county the name of a female, and refers the Court to the following authorities, viz: Sec. 1, Art. II, of the Constitution of the State of California; Sec. 2 of the Registry Act, and the amendments thereto, approved March 30th, 1868.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The plaintiff applied to the Court below for a writ of mandamus against the defendant, who is the County Clerk of the County of Santa Cruz, to compel him to inscribe her name in the Great Register, and enroll her as a legal voter of said county. Judgment having been rendered refusing the writ, she brings this appeal.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

It appears that she is "a white female resident and citizen of the United States and of the State of California, over the age of twenty-one years, and for more than one year last past a resident of Santa Cruz County," and was born within the limits and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

The Court below held that by reason of her sex she was disqualified to exercise the elective franchise; and it is admitted that if her claim in that respect is to be determined alone by the Constitution and laws of this State, excluding, as they do, persons of her sex from the exercise of the elective franchise, the judgment below is correct, and should be affirmed here.

But it is claimed that she is entitled to registration as a voter by reason of the first section of the recent amendment to the Federal Constitution of July 20th, 1868, known as the Fourteenth Amendment. That section is in the following words:

"Article 14, Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

1. It is claimed that the plaintiff is a citizen of the United States and of this State. Undoubtedly she is. It is argued that she became such by force of the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment, already recited. This, however, is a mistake. It could as well be claimed that she became free by the effect of the Thirteenth Amendment, by which slavery was abolished; for she was no less a citizen than she was free before the adoption of either of these amendments. No white person born within the limits of the United States, and subject to their jurisdiction, or born without those limits, and subsequently naturalized under their laws, owes the status of citizenship to the recent amendments to the Federal Constitution. The history and aim of the Fourteenth Amendment is well known, and the purpose had in view in its adoption well understood. That purpose was to confer the status of citizenship upon a numerous class of persons domiciled within the limits of the United States, who could not be brought within the operation of the naturalization laws because native born, and whose birth, though native, had at the same time left them without the status of citizenship. These persons were not white persons, but were, in the main, persons of African descent, who had been held in slavery in this country, or, if having themselves never been held in slavery, were the native-born descendants of slaves. Prior to the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment it was settled that neither slaves, nor those who had been such, nor the descendants of these, though native and free born, were capable of becoming citizens of the United States. (Dred Scott v. Sanford, 19 How. 393.) The Thirteenth Amendment, though conferring the boon of freedom upon native-born persons of African blood, had yet left them under an insuperable bar as to citizenship; and it was mainly to remedy this condition that the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted.

This is recent history — familiar to all.

2. It is next claimed that, by whatever means the plaintiff became a citizen of the United States, her privileges and immunities as such citizen cannot be abridged by State laws; and this is true. The purpose and the effect of the amendment, in this respect, is to place the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States beyond the operation of State legislation. Those immunities and privileges, what ever they may be, are guaranteed and protected in every State by this clause in the Federal Constitution.

3. It is urged that, among these privileges and immunities, is included the privilege of the plaintiff to exercise the elective franchise within the limits of this State, even in disregard of the Constitution and laws of the State, which unquestionably exclude persons of her sex. And this brings us to inquire what is meant by the phrase "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States," as used in this amendment.

This phraseology was known in our history anterior to the formation of the present Federal Union. In the articles of confederation between the American States it was provided "that the free inhabitants of each of these States (paupers, vagabonds, and fugitives from justice excepted) shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of free citizens of the several States, and the people of each State shall, in every other, enjoy all the privileges of trade and commerce, subject to the same duties, impositions, and restrictions as the inhabitants thereof respectively," etc. (Art. IV.) The term "privileges and immunities" was therefore not a new one when, in the second section of the fourth article of the Federal Constitution, as originally ratified, it was declared that "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States." The words "privileges and immunities" had at that time acquired a distinctive meaning and a well-known signification. They comprehended the enjoyment of life and liberty, and the right to acquire and possess property, and to demand and receive the protection of the Government in aid of these. They included the right to sue and defend in the Courts, to have the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus, and an exemption from higher taxes or heavier impositions than were to be borne by other persons under like conditions and circumstances.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

The Federal Constitution went into operation in March, 1789, and within a few years thereafter — in 1797 — a question came before the General Court in Maryland in respect to the meaning of the words “privileges and immunities” as thus employed in that instrument. The question was argued by the most eminent counsel in the State, and among them was the celebrated Luther Martin, then Attorney General. At this point the Court said: “Privilege and immunity are synonymous, or nearly so. Privilege signifies a peculiar advantage, exemption, immunity; immunity signifies exemption, privilege. The peculiar advantages and exemptions contemplated under this part of the Constitution may be ascertained, if not with precision and accuracy, yet satisfactorily. By taking a retrospective view of our situation antecedent to the formation of the first General Government, or the Confederation, in which the same clause is used verbatim, one of the great objects must occur to every person, which was the enabling of the citizens of the several States to acquire and hold real property in any of the States, and deemed necessary, as each State was a sovereign and independent State, and the States had confederated only for the purposes of general defense and security, and to promote the general welfare. It seems agreed from the manner of expounding or defining the words ‘immunities and privileges’ by the counsel on both sides, that a particular and limited operation is to be given to those words, and not a full and comprehensive one. It is agreed it does not mean the right of election, the right of holding office, the right of being elected. The Court are of opinion it means that the citizens of all the States shall have the peculiar advantage of acquiring and holding real as well as personal property, and that such property shall be protected and secured by the laws of the State in the same manner as the property of the citizens of the State is protected," etc. (Campbell v. Morris, 3 Harr. & McH. 554.)

The expression, "privileges and immunities," had been found in the Constitution for a period of nearly eighty years prior to the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, and had never been supposed to include the right to the exercise of the elective franchise. Notwithstanding the citizens of each State were, during all that time, entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States, it was never supposed that the citizen of any State might, upon his removal into any other State, lawfully claim to vote there because he had exercised that privilege in the State from which he had just emigrated.

In point of fact the States have generally conferred the privilege of the elective franchise upon such of their male inhabitants as had become citizens of the United States, if of the requisite age, etc. This circumstance has given rise to a notion in some quarters that the privilege of voting and the status of citizenship are necessarily connected in some way—so that the existence of the one argues that of the other. But the history of the country shows that there was never any foundation for such a view. Thus citizens of the United States, resident in the State of Virginia, were prevented by State law from voting there, unless seized of a freehold estate; and citizens of the United States, resident in Massachusetts, were by the laws of that State denied the privileges of the elective franchise, unless owners of personal property to a designated amount. While the privilege of voting was thus, by State laws, withheld in those States from persons who were citizens of the United States, the elective franchise was in other States of the Union conferred by State laws upon persons who were not citizens. In New York and North Carolina, for instance, at an early day the privilege of voting was conferred upon negroes, persons of African descent, under certain conditions. These were not citizens of the United States, nor then even capable of becoming such. In Wisconsin and Michigan, though negroes were excluded, persons of the Indian blood were admitted; and in Indiana, Illinois, Minnesota, and other States, unnaturalized foreigners were by State laws allowed to vote — following in this respect the early policy of the Federal Government, who, in the ordinance of 1787, for the government of the Northwestern Territory, had permitted the elective franchise to the unnaturalized French and Canadians, of whom the population of that Territory was then largely composed. It will be found that from the earliest periods of our history the State laws regulated the privilege of the elective franchise within their respective limits, and that these laws were exactly such as local interests, peculiar conditions, or supposed policy dictated, and that it was never asserted that the exclusion of any class of inhabitants from the privilege of voting amounted to an interference with the privileges of the excluded class as citizens. As was well said by Judge MILLS, of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky: "The mistake on the subject arises from not attending to a sensible distinction between political and civil rights. The latter constitute the citizen, while the former are not necessary ingredients. A State may deny all her political rights to an individual, and yet he may be a citizen. The rights of office and suffrage are political purely, and are denied by some or all the States to part of their population, who are still citizens. A citizen, then, is one who owes the Government allegiance, service, and money by way of taxation, and to whom the Government, in turn, grants and guarantees liberty of person and of conscience, the right of acquiring and possessing property, of marriage and the social relations, of suit and defense, and security of person, estate, and reputation. These, with some others which might be enumerated, being guaranteed and secured by Government, constitute a citizen. To aliens we extend these privileges by courtesy; to others we secure them — to male as well as female — to the infant as well as the person of hoary hairs." (1 Litt. R. 342.)

4. But the language of the second section of the Fourteenth Amendment itself demonstrates that the elective franchise is not one of the "privileges or immunities" mentioned in the first section, and as such not to be abridged or taken away by State laws.

The second section of the amendment (so far as material upon this point) is in the following words:

"Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States, according to their respective numbers. But when the right to vote * * * is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States * * * the basis of representation therein shall be reduced" * * * etc.

It will thus be seen that by this second section of the Fourteenth Amendment it is expressly provided that if the State law shall deny the elective franchise to the citizens of the United States therein mentioned, the basis of Federal representation to which such State would otherwise be entitled shall be thereupon and in consequence of such denial readjusted and reduced in a designated ratio. If the power of the State to deny the elective franchise to a citizen of the United States had been absolutely taken away by the first section, then a State law enacted for that purpose would necessarily be absolutely void — as a bill of attainder passed or ex post facto law enacted, would be void, as being in contravention of the inhibitions of Article I, Section 10, of the Federal Constitution. But by the second section of the amendment under consideration it is provided that the action of the State authority denying the right of citizens of the United States to vote, so far from being null and void, shall furnish a new basis of Federal numbers in the State, upon which a new apportionment of representation in Congress is to follow. It is inconceivable that such constitutional consequences are to follow the doing of an act which the Constitution had just forbidden to be done at all.

5. The Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution was adopted nearly two years after the Fourteenth. It provides that the right of a citizen of the United States to vote shall not be denied on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. If, under the Fourteenth Amendment already adopted, the right of a citizen to vote was not to be denied upon any ground whatsoever, what necessity or propriety in subsequently providing that it should not be denied upon either of three enumerated grounds? It will be seen that the construction claimed for the Fourteenth Amendment by the counsel for the plaintiff would leave nothing for the Fifteenth to operate upon.

Many other and hardly less cogent reasons might be mentioned going to show that the elective franchise is not one of the immunities or privileges secured by the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment. The mere power of the State to determine the class of inhabitants who may vote within her limits was not curtailed in the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Fifteenth Amendment took away her authority to discriminate against citizens of the United States on account of either race, color, or previous condition of servitude; but the power of exclusion upon all other grounds, including that of sex, remains intact.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA
v. DAVID McAUSLAN AND FRANK McAUSLAN.

ERROR WILL NOT BE PRESUMED.—The presumption in the Supreme Court is that the proceedings below are correct, except in so far as the record manifests the contrary.

APPEAL FROM ORDER SETTING ASIDE VERDICT.—If, in a criminal case, the verdict of a jury be set aside on the ground that it is contrary to the evidence, and an appeal be taken from the order setting aside the verdict, the record must show what the evidence was, or the question as to the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence cannot be considered.

APPEAL from the County Court of Sutter County.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Attorney General Jo Hamilton, for Appellant.

J. O. Goodwin, for Respondents.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The defendants were tried, and, by the verdict of the jury, found guilty of the crime of assault with intent to commit murder.

They subsequently moved the Court below to set aside the verdict and grant them a new trial; the motion was sustained, and from the order granting the new trial the people have appealed.

The motion was made upon several grounds: that the verdict was found by unfair means and was not a fair expression of opinion on the part of the jury; misconduct of the jury in clandestinely procuring and drinking ardent spirits in the jury-room while deliberating upon their verdict; that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence; newly discovered evidence, etc. The order of the Court setting aside the verdict does not indicate upon what particular ground it was based.

Points decided.

It is hardly necessary to repeat that the judgments and orders made below are not to be disturbed here, unless error is, in some way, made to appear by the record. Error will not be presumed; on the contrary, the intendment here is, that the proceedings below are correct, except in so far as the record manifests the contrary.

One of the statutory grounds of a motion for a new trial in a criminal case (Section 440) is that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. That was one of the grounds upon which the defendants moved below. For aught we can see, it is the ground, or one of the grounds, upon which the motion was granted. The record being entirely silent as to what was the evidence given on the trial, it is obvious that we have no means of considering the question of its sufficiency or insufficiency, or of determining the propriety of the action of the Court below in setting aside the verdict on that ground.

Order affirmed.

JACOB C. HINCKLEY v. LUCIUS C. FOWLER.

GOOD DESCRIPTION IN APPLICATION TO PURCHASE TIDE LAND.—F. filed an application under the Act to provide for the sale of certain lands belonging to the State (Stats. 1863, p. 591), in which he described the land for which he applied as "the one half mile water front donated to the San Francisco and Marysville Railroad Company, by an Act of the Legislature of the State of California, approved April 24th, 1858." Held, that the description was in every respect in accordance with law.

DESCRIPTION OF TIDE LANDS IN APPLICATION TO PURCHASE.—The Act of 1863, supra, only requires the applicant to describe the land applied for, and a description which the County Surveyor can understand is sufficient. The survey, which it is his duty to make, ought to fix the lines with the requisite precision.

APPLICATION TO BUY TIDE LAND CONFERS A RIGHT TO BE LOST ONLY BY THE FAULT OF THE APPLICANT.—An application to buy tide land, made in accordance with law, confers a right to purchase upon the applicant which, as against the State and all subsequent applicants, can be lost only by the failure of the applicant to pursue the further steps prescribed by the statute—not through the fault of any officer.

RIGHT OF APPLICANT WHERE LESS THAN THE TRACT APPLIED FOR IS APPROVED.—Where a party makes an application in accordance with the Act of 1863, to purchase a certain piece of tide land, but the County Surveyor actually surveys but a small portion of it, and such survey is approved by the Surveyor General, and subsequently under the advice of the Surveyor, the applicant makes a payment upon the tract approved, and then files a new application for the balance of the tract, he is not precluded from insisting upon his rights under the first application.

CONTEST, HOW ADJUDICATED.—Under the twenty-seventh section of the Act of 1863, for sale of tide land, when a contest is referred to the Courts for settlement, it is to be determined upon the principles of law and equity involved. The Court is to exercise its judicial authority in adjudicating the entire case as presented, and is not confined to the measure of relief which the Surveyor General might award.

SURVEYOR GENERAL TO DETERMINE FACTS ONLY.—The Surveyor General is to determine only those contests about the purchase of lands in which the survey, "or purely a question of fact," is involved.

QUESTION OF LAW TO BE REFERRED TO THE COURTS.—When a question of law only is involved, or one of law and fact, in relation to purchase of tide lands, the parties are to be referred to the Courts for the settlement of such questions.

RULES AS TO PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE IN CONTESTED CASES.—The ordinary rules of pleadings and of evidence are to be observed, and judgment is to be rendered as in ordinary adversary proceedings.

Further, the application made by Fowler, on the 13th December, 1866, admitting that he filed the original with the County Surveyor, is a nullity in the eye of the law, because it describes no land. The third section of the Act under which the grant is sought to be obtained requires the application to describe the land. The description here is by reference to a certain Act of the Legislature.

Fowler acquired a vested right to all the tide lands described in his application and oath on the 13th day of December, 1866. (Section 29 of Tide Land Act of April 27th, 1863; *Armour v. The State selects her officers to make the surveys, and she guarantees the honesty and fairness of their acts.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The controversy in this case is a contest arising under the provisions of the twenty-seventh section of "An Act to provide for the sale of certain lands belonging to the State." (Acts 1863, p. 591.)

It appears that in December, 1866, Fowler presented to the County Surveyor of Solano County an application for certain tide lands in that county, which were described as "the one half mile water front donated to the San Francisco and Marysville Railroad Company by an Act of the Legislature of the State of California, approved April 24th, 1858." Upon receiving this application, the Surveyor noted the same in his book of applications thus: "L. C. Fowler, Solano County: No. 8. Township 3 north, Ranges 3 and 4 west, Sections 19 and 24; fractions in east half of 24; fractions in west half of 19; Mount Diablo meridian." A copy of the description, as thus noted, was indorsed upon the affidavit of Fowler, pursuant to sections 28 and 29, and filed, along with the affidavit itself, in the office of the Surveyor of the county. It is claimed, however, by the appellant, Hinckley, that the paper thus filed in the Surveyor's office was a certified copy of the affidavit of Fowler, and not the original; but an examination of the evidence shows it to be substantially conflicting upon this point, and the finding of the Court below, that the original, and not the copy, was filed in the office of the Surveyor, will, therefore, not be disturbed here. The land described in the application, and of which note was thus made in the application book of the County Surveyor, embraced some sixty-five acres, and it was the duty of that officer within thirty days thereafter to make the survey and transmit a duplicate of it, and of the plat and field notes, and a copy of the application and affidavits in its support, to the Surveyor General for approval. In March, 1867, Fowler discovered that the County Surveyor, instead of surveying the land embraced in his application, had surveyed only a long narrow strip of it, which was of less than six acres in superficial area, and had returned that survey to the Surveyor General, who had approved the survey as thus made. Upon discovering this fact, Fowler complained to the County Surveyor, and called his attention to the omission, but that officer declined to correct it, or to take any further steps in relation to it, on the ground that his authority over the subject was at an end. He, however, on the 18th day of March, 1867, advised Fowler to make a new application for the land omitted from the survey, and this new application was accordingly made upon the first day of April following, and a new survey was made thereunder and transmitted to the Surveyor General, including the narrow strip shown by the first survey, and some fifty-eight acres besides. On the 13th day of March, 1857, however, the appellant, Hinckley, made an application to the same County Surveyor, in the usual form, for certain tide lands, including the lands which had been omitted from the Fowler survey on the first application; this application of Hinckley was entertained by the Surveyor, who, on the 15th day of March, completed the survey for Hinckley thereunder, and on the next day transmitted a duplicate of it, with plat, field notes, affidavits, etc., to the Surveyor General, by whom they were received on the 19th of March.

Subsequently the County Surveyor transmitted to the Surveyor General the new survey he had made for Fowler, under his second application of April, 1867, along with a copy of the plat, field notes, etc., accompanied by a notice to the Surveyor General that some fifty-nine acres included therein had been also embraced in the survey for Hinckley already transmitted. Fowler afterwards filed a protest in the office of the Surveyor General against the approval of the Hinckley Survey, on the ground that under his original application he was himself entitled to purchase the whole of the land included in that survey; and the contest thus made up was thereupon referred to the Courts for decision.

1. There is no doubt that the application of Fowler, made in due form on the 13th day of December, 1866, to purchase these lands, was in every respect in accordance with law.

Its validity is assailed upon the ground that a copy of the application, and not the original, was filed by Fowler in the office of the County Surveyor; but that objection has been disposed of already.

2. It is said that the first application of Fowler describes no lands whatever, and is, therefore, a nullity. We have seen already that it was an application for the water front, which had been donated to the railroad company by the Act of April 24th, 1858. A more exact description could hardly have been given, for the tract itself had been already accurately surveyed and platted by the railroad company, under the provisions of the Act; and the survey and plat so made constituted a record at the time of Fowler's first application existing in the office of the County Recorder of Solano County. That it was a description well understood in the office of the County Surveyor is evident, for he proceeded to act upon it without objection or hesitation. The Act of 1863 only requires the applicant to describe the land applied for—and a description which the Surveyor can understand is description enough; the survey which it is his duty to make ought to fix the lines with the requisite precision.

3. The application of Fowler, thus made in accordance with law, gave him, as against the State, and, so long as the statute remained in force, a privilege to purchase the land he applied for. As against the officers of the State, and all applicants for the same land subsequent in point of time, it conferred upon him a right to purchase, which could only be lost by his own failure to pursue the further steps which the statute had prescribed. The malfeasance or misfeasance of any of the officers could not deprive him of the benefit of his application, nor operate to postpone him to the claim of a subsequent applicant.

4. It is argued, however, that Fowler is concluded to claim the larger tract, because he knowingly accepted, as it is said, the first survey of five acres and a little more. The facts are, that upon discovering that instead of the sixty-five acres, for which he had applied, only some five acres and a little upwards had been surveyed, Fowler applied to the County Surveyor to correct the survey, and the latter declined the request, on the ground that he had done all the law required him to do, and, in connection with this refusal, the County Surveyor advised Fowler to begin de novo—and that, in his opinion, nothing else could be done. Subsequently, and in May, 1868, he paid to the County Treasurer a portion of the principal and interest upon the five-acre location. He testified that this was done because he had learned that the County Surveyor was advising other parties to enter upon the five-acre tract in default of the payment of this money to the County Treasurer. I see nothing, however, in this which would preclude Fowler from insisting upon his rights under the first application. It was only a very natural endeavor to avoid the possible loss of all that he had so far been able to obtain. It was the best that he could do under the circumstances. At that time his new application, made under the advice of the County Surveyor, was already pending and undetermined.

5. It is next insisted that the Surveyor General having approved the first application of Fowler to the extent of five acres and upwards only, it results that the contest here is confined to the application of Hinckley made in March, and the last application of Fowler made in April, 1867, and that Hinckley's, being the prior of these two, should be held to be superior to Fowler's. There is nothing in this point. Under the twenty-seventh section of the Act, when a contest is referred to the Courts for settlement, it is to be determined upon the principles of law and equity involved. The Court is to exercise its judicial authority in adjudicating the entire case as presented. It is not confined to the narrower measure of relief which the Surveyor General, in the exercise of mere quasi-judicial functions, in determining mere matters of fact, might award. Such was not the intent of the statute. Its purpose was to provide for the settlement of the rights of the parties litigant, at once and forever. The jurisdiction of the Court is as broad and effective as though one of the parties had already obtained a title to which the other had the better right. The Surveyor General is to determine only those contests in which the survey, "or purely a question of fact," is involved. But when a question of law only is involved, or one of law and fact, the parties are to be referred to the Courts for its determination, and in the Courts the ordinary rules of pleading and of evidence are to be observed, and judgment is to be rendered as in ordinary adversary proceedings.

Other, but minor, points are made which it is not necessary to notice in detail.

It is clear that Fowler by force of his application of December 13th, 1866, became entitled to purchase the land in controversy—that nothing since then has occurred to postpone him to the subsequent application of Hinckley—the circumstances of the case presented are indeed such that had the latter even succeeded in obtaining the certificate, he must have been compelled by the decree of a Court of equity to surrender it to Fowler. These circumstances are those which characterized the conduct of the County Surveyor concerning the first application of Fowler made December, 1866, and the evident concert between that officer and Hinckley, the subsequent applicant, and to which it is not necessary, in view of the conclusion reached upon other grounds, to advert in detail.

The judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

HENRY B. WILLIAMS, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF EDWARD MOTT ROBINSON, DECEASED, v. O. P.
SUTTON.

TENANCY IN COMMON—EFFECT OF JUDGMENT “QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT” AGAINST ONE TENANT.—Where Woods, being the owner of a lot in San Francisco, conveyed an undivided quarter which passed to Williams, and a quarter to Hastings, and a quarter to Haskell; and afterwards Sutton, claiming title under a Colton grant, brought trespass quare clausum fregit against Woods, Hastings, and Haskell for alleged interference with his possession, and recovered judgment, and also obtained an injunction against their interference with his possession: Held, in ejectment by Williams against Sutton, that the effect of the judgment was merely to estop Woods, Hastings, and Haskell from asserting title as against Sutton, not to transfer their title to him or make him a tenant in common with Williams; and that such judgment could not prevent Williams from recovering the whole property.

RIGHT OF TENANT IN COMMON TO RECOVER ENTIRE ESTATE.—A tenant in common is seized per se et per totum, and has an interest in the whole, which entitles him to the enjoyment of the entire estate as against every one except his cotenant.

Statement of Facts.

JUDGMENT IN TRESPASS AGAINST ONE TENANT IN COMMON NO ESTOPPEL AGAINST ANOTHER.—Where a judgment in trespass quare clausum fregit was recovered by Sutton against Woods, Hastings, and Haskell, who were tenants in common with Williams: Held, that though Woods, Hastings, and Haskell were estopped from asserting title as against Sutton, there was no such estoppel as against Williams' claiming and recovering the whole property.

JUDGMENT IN TRESPASS "QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT" NO TRANSFER OF DEFENDANT'S TITLE.—A plaintiff, who recovers in trespass quare clausum fregit, does not thereby become invested with the title, or succeed to the interest, which the defendant in such action may have had in the property.

TITLE UNDER STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS DIFFERENT FROM ESTOPPEL UNDER JUDGMENT IN TRESPASS.—In ejectment by Williams against Sutton, where it appeared that Williams was a tenant in common of the property demanded, with Woods, Hastings, and Haskell; and that Sutton had recovered judgment in trespass quare clausum fregit in reference thereto against Woods, Hastings and Haskell, which judgment he set up to prevent Williams from recovering more than one undivided fourth: Held, that the rule invoked by Sutton (that if one of several tenants in common be under such disability as would preserve his rights under the Statute of Limitations, this would not save the rights of his cotenants against whom the statute had fully run), was not applicable, for the reason that the title of a disseisor under the Statute of Limitations was a new title, corresponding with that on which the disseisin operated, while Sutton acquired no new title by disseisin or otherwise, but could simply rely upon his judgment as concluding the defendants therein from asserting title against him.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action of ejectment for a fifty-vara lot at the northeast corner of Montgomery and Lombard streets, in the City of San Francisco. The plaintiff owned an undivided one fourth of the property, but demanded possession of the whole. The defendant set up by way of bar or estoppel the recovery of a judgment in 1853 in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, instituted by him in the Superior Court of the City of San Francisco against I. C. Woods, John Hastings, D. H. Haskell, and J. N. Briceland, the three first of whom were tenants in common in the property with the grantor of plaintiff, and claimed that by virtue of such recovery defendant became a tenant in common with plaintiff, and that no recovery in the action could be had against him.

It appeared that on June 20th, 1851, I. C. Woods was the owner of the fifty-vara lot in controversy, deriving his title under a grant to Jacob D. Hoppe, by Alcalde Leavenworth, on March 23d, 1848. On January 29th, 1853, Woods conveyed an undivided one fourth of the lot to Flint, Peabody & Co., which passed to plaintiff. Woods conveyed another undivided fourth to Hastings, and another fourth to Haskell. The defendant held and claimed under a grant by Justice of the Peace Colton, dated December 18th, 1849. It further appeared that in 1853, and while defendant claimed to be in possession, Woods, Hastings, Haskell, and Briceland entered and began excavating and carrying away ground from a portion of the lot for the purpose of filling up other lots in the vicinity. Sutton thereupon commenced the suit referred to in the Superior Court against them, and obtained a judgment therein for fifteen dollars damages sustained by reason of their trespasses; and the same judgment proceeded to enjoin them from any further excavations, or from in any manner interfering with Sutton's possession of the property.

The Court below seems to have regarded the record in Sutton v. Woods et als., as operating as an estoppel so far as three fourths of the property was concerned and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the possession of only an undivided fourth, and costs. The plaintiff, being dissatisfied therewith, appealed from the judgment.

J. G. McCullough and John T. Doyle, for Appellant.

The judgment in Sutton v. Woods works no estoppel upon this plaintiff in favor of this defendant. The plaintiff was not a party to that proceeding, nor does he claim under any of the parties to it as such. His title passed out of Woods before that action was commenced, and is, therefore, entirely independent of the parties to that action. Assuming then that Woods and his other grantees are estopped by the judgment in the suit against them, still plaintiff and his grantors not being parties or privies to that record, it cannot be used against them for any purpose whatever. It could not be used either in bar or as evidence, because the parties are not the same. As evidence it does not go beyond proving that in a certain action between himself and Woods and others it was adjudged that Sutton had a better title then to the lands than Woods and others; but the judgment did not give title to Sutton in fee simple or otherwise, nor did it constitute him a cotenant of Flint, Peabody & Co.

The plaintiff, being the owner in fee of the undivided one fourth of the premises and not in any manner affected by the alleged judgment, is entitled to recover the demanded premises entire as against all persons, except his cotenants and persons holding under them. (Hardy v. Johnson, 1 Wallace, 371; Treat v. Riley, 35 Cal. 129.) The defendant does not come within either class. It may, however, be claimed that as we have brought ejectment, which goes to the question of the right of possession, it is a sufficient answer if defendant shows that Woods, Hastings, and Haskell were entitled to the possession, and that he obtained judgment against them to the effect that his right of possession was better than theirs, on the ground that as we could not oust them we cannot oust him. But this argument is fallacious. Sutton does not claim under Woods, Hastings, and Haskell, but against them. (Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489.) The judgment relied on might in a proper case prove that Sutton has a better title to the lands than Woods and others whenever they sue him; but it cannot prove that he has a better or as good a title as the plaintiff.

Winans & Patterson, for Respondent.

The plaintiff, while he concedes that on his own behalf he is only entitled to the fourth interest in the lot which the

Argument for Respondent.

Court below awarded to him, seeks, by appeal, to recover the whole lot, on the ground that as tenant in common, if he obtains judgment at all, he is entitled to be let into possession of the whole on behalf of his cotenants as well as himself. He ignores the doctrine that Woods, Hastings, and Haskell are barred or estopped as to their three fourths ownership in the lot by the former adjudication, and claims that if they were, the proceedings were irregular and do not amount to an estoppel.

The former adjudication in the Superior Court was an estoppel and a bar to the recovery by plaintiff of the three quarter interests of Woods, Hastings, and Haskell. It put in issue and determined the very title here in controversy. Sutton then averred and relied on title in himself, and Woods, Hastings, and Haskell denied his title and set up ownership in themselves under the very title upon which the plaintiff founds his present suit. The judgment was in his favor and against them on the question of title; and it materially strengthens his case that a perpetual injunction was also awarded against Woods and his cotenants there defending from interfering with the premises or in any manner disturbing Sutton or those holding under him in the possession thereof.

Again, the judgment was conclusive upon plaintiff and his grantors as an estoppel, because a former recovery settles every question which was adjudicated, or which might have been adjudicated in the case. The plaintiff, so far as the three quarters formerly belonging to Woods, Hastings, and Haskell are concerned, stands in their shoes advocating their claims, and whatever defense would conclude them would be valid against him. He would, in short, be to all intents and purposes a party, and, therefore, directly within the application of the rule. It is plain that if plaintiff could recover for his coöwners their three fourths, they in turn could recover the same interest from him if he refused to let them into possession, and thus by this circuitous mode of proceeding they could gain from the defendant, Sutton, that which the law denies their right to have.

The theory that a party who proves himself a tenant in common can recover the entire possession of the land in which he has but a partial interest, because he represents his cotenants and may enter for them as well as himself, is overruled here by still another maxim of the law than that above referred to, viz: that when the reason upon which a legal principle is founded ceases to exist, the principle itself must fall. Cessante ratione cessat ipsa lex. Furthermore, the doctrine that one tenant in common may recover the whole is only applicable when the defendant in possession is a wrongdoer as against all the tenants in common. (Collier v. Corbett, 15 Cal. 183; Clark v. Huber, 20 Cal. 196; Hart v. Robertson, 21 Cal. 346.) Hence, if the defendant could defeat the other tenants in common, either by adverse possession or a former adjudication, the plaintiff can only recover his proportion.

Again, defendant, who has been in the actual adverse possession of the whole lot for ten years and more, holding it in express hostility to the claim of Woods, Hastings, and Haskell, has acquired thereby a title to the three quarters interest which is sued for, on their behalf, by plaintiff. Hence the judgment in this cause could only lawfully be that which was rendered, that plaintiff be let into possession of an undivided one quarter interest in the premises as tenant in common with defendant. Plaintiff can only recover for himself, because the theory on which he claims a right to recover the share of his cotenants Woods, Hastings, and Haskell, is negatived or overruled by the fact that their rights are barred by the statute and defeated by the adverse holding of defendant. (Wade v. Johnson, 5 Humph. 117; Langdon v. Rowleston, 2 Taunt. 46; Pendergrast v. Gullatt, 10 Geo. 218; Jordan v. Thornton, 7 Geo. 517; Bowyer v. Judge, 11 East, 287.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The plaintiff derails title to one undivided fourth of the premises in controversy under a valid alcalde grant, and is entitled to recover the possession of the whole property as against the defendant, who has shown no title, unless the judgment in the case of Sutton v. Woods et al. shall have the effect to limit his recovery to the one undivided fourth only. Neither the plaintiff or his grantors were parties to that action, or in privity with the defendants therein; and it is conceded that his rights are unaffected by the judgment. But it is said that Woods, Hastings, and Haskell, the defendants in the former action, who were then cotenants in common with the plaintiff's grantors, are concluded by the judgment, and are estopped thereby from setting up title or a right to the possession, as against the present defendant, who was the plaintiff in that action; and hence that the present plaintiff is not entitled to recover the possession of the three undivided fourths formerly claimed by them, and to which it has been argued the present defendant has the better title, as against Woods, Hastings, and Haskell. But one of the incidents of a tenancy in common holding the title, is that each of the cotenants is entitled to the exclusive possession of the entire property, as against the whole world, except his cotenants. A person without title and wrongfully in the possession, cannot gainsay the right of each of the tenants in common to the possession of the whole. As between tenants in common and a trespasser, each tenant in common is better entitled to the possession than a wrongdoer. The former is seized per mi et per tout, and has an interest in the whole, which entitles him to the enjoyment of the entire estate as against every one except his cotenants. Is the defendant a cotenant with the plaintiff? If so he must have acquired that status by means of the judgment in the former action, in which it was adjudged that as between him and

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

Woods, Hastings, and Haskell he had the better title and the better right to the possession. But he did not thereby become vested with their title or succeed to their interest in the property. On the contrary the Court decided that they had no title, and left Sutton in possession under such claim of title as he had under the Colton grant. The judgment added nothing to his former title, but left it as it was before; and the point decided was that his was better than the title of his adversaries. I do not comprehend how all this can have the effect to convert the defendant into a tenant in common with the plaintiff's grantors, who were not parties to the action, and were unaffected by the judgment. Notwithstanding the judgment, the defendant, so far as it concerns the plaintiff and his rights, is as much a trespasser now as when he first entered on the lot; and I am not aware of any exception to the rule that as against a trespasser one of several tenants in common is entitled to the possession of the entire property. The judgment, it is true, estops Woods, Hastings, and Haskell from asserting title as against the defendant. But they are not asserting it in this action, nor are their rights in question here. On the contrary the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the whole property, not on the strength of their title or right of possession, but of his own as one of several tenants in common, having a better right as such to the entire property than a mere intruder without-title. Nor can it be doubted that the plaintiff and Woods, Hastings, and Haskell are still tenants in common notwithstanding the judgment in the former action. As already stated the judgment did not have the effect to divest whatever title the defendants in that action had, nor to transfer it to Sutton, and consequently did not disturb the relation of tenancy in common before then existing between them and the plaintiff's grantors. The only effect of the judgment was to estop the defendants therein from asserting the title which they claimed against Sutton, the present defendant, and the Court did not attempt to interfere with the relation of a tenancy in common then existing between them and the plaintiff's grantors. No question of that kind was before the Court, and of course it had no power to deal with it, if it had attempted to do so. As between the several tenants in common their relations towards each other were therefore wholly unaffected by the judgment. But it is said that if one of several tenants in common be under such disability as will preserve his rights under the Statute of Limitations, this will not save the rights of his cotenants against whom the statute has fully run; and this rule of law is invoked to maintain the proposition urged in this case that if Woods, Hastings, and Haskell are estopped by the judgment, the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of his separate undivided interest only, and no more. But whilst fully admitting the soundness of the rule, I think it has no application to this case. The rule itself is founded on the proposition that when the statute has fully run, and has become effectual to bar an adverse title, the disseizor acquires a new title founded on disseizin. He does not acquire or succeed to the title and estate of the disseizee, but is vested with a new title and estate, founded on and springing from the disseizin; and the title of the disseizee, if not wholly extinguished, has at least become inoperative in law, and is without a remedy to enforce it. (Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 381, and authorities there cited.) The new title thus acquired by the disseizor must of necessity correspond with that on which the disseizin operated, as he could not acquire by disseizin a greater estate than that held by the disseizee. If the latter held only an undivided interest as tenant in common with another, the disseizor would acquire by disseizin a similar undivided interest; for it was only that on which the disseizin operated and took effect. The disseizor of one of several tenants in common acquiring a title by disseizin therefore becomes himself a tenant in common with the other cotenants; and hence in an action by one or more of them against him for the possession, the recovery is limited to the particular interest of the plaintiff, and does not include the whole property. But the reason on which the rule is founded has no application to this case. The defendant here has acquired no new title by disseizin or otherwise, but simply relies on the former judgment as concluding the defendants therein from the assertion of title as against him. But he is not a tenant in common with the plaintiff, as against whom he has neither title nor right of possession, and therefore does not come within the reason of the rule which he has invoked. Not being entitled to the possession of any portion of the premises, as against the plaintiff, it does not concern him to inquire what may be the effect of restoring the possession to the plaintiff, as between him and Woods, Hastings, and Haskell. If the technical bar of the former judgment shall thus be practically avoided as to them, no injustice will result therefrom, inasmuch as it now appears that for more than twenty years the defendant has been wrongfully in possession without title.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

In my opinion the judgment ought to be reversed, and a new trial awarded.

Mr. Justice WALLACE, being disqualified, did not sit in this case.

THOMAS F. POTTER v. J. P. AMES, ALEXANDER GORDON, AND JAMES BYRNES.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF SAN MATEO ROAD LAW.—The provisions of the San Mateo County road law (Stats. 1867-8, p. 283), in reference to the notice to be given of a proposed alteration of a public road, and requiring persons claiming compensation for land to be taken to present their claims within a certain time, or be deemed as waiving all right to damages, do not violate section eight of Article I of the Constitution.

COMPENSATION FOR LAND TAKEN FOR PUBLIC USE—POWER OF LEGISLATURE TO PRESCRIBE STEPS.—It is competent for the Legislature to prescribe the several steps to be pursued in the assertion of a right to compensation for land appropriated for public use; but the prescribed procedure must not destroy or substantially impair the right itself.

ALTERATION OF ROAD IN SAN MATEO COUNTY—"PARTICULARITY" OF NOTICE.—Where a statute for the alteration of a public road required as a preliminary, the publication of a notice stating, with particularity, the starting point, and the course and terminus of the proposed alteration, and that those claiming compensation for land to be taken should present their claims within a certain time thereafter, or be barred (Stats. 1867-8, p. 283): held, that a notice of an alteration to run northerly from one point to another, "over the most practicable route for a road," was insufficient.

DAMAGES FOR TAKING LAND FOR ROAD ON INSUFFICIENT NOTICE—JUDGMENT ON FINDINGS.—Where a public road in San Mateo County was altered, and the owner of land taken therefor brought suit against the township trustees for damages, quare clausum fregit, and it appeared on the trial, and the Court found, that the notice of the proposed alteration required by law (Stats. 1867-8, p. 283) was such that plaintiff could not ascertain therefrom the amount and character of his land which would be affected by the proceedings, and that his damages, if such notice was insufficient to authorize the alteration, amounted to five hundred dollars: held, that plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the findings for that amount.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, San Mateo County.

Potter, Ganegan, and O'Conner; thence northerly over the most practicable route across the lands of Martin and Delany, Peter Seban and F. Wella, intersecting the present Half-moon Bay Road, at the crossing of the Lobitas Creek."

The Court below found, among other facts:

"3. That the damages done to said premises [of the plaintiff], by said digging and excavating, if the said proceedings gave defendants no authority to open a public road through said land, and on the line of said excavation, was and is the sum of five hundred dollars."

"14. No other description of the land through which said proposed road was to run, nor of the amount, quality, or quantity of land to be taken from any persons through whose land the same was to run, nor of the amount or character of the land affected by said proposed road, except the description thereof contained in the notice and petition, was made, until the report of said road viewers was made to said Board on the 7th of April, 1869."

"15. The plaintiff could not ascertain the amount or character of the land belonging to him, which would be affected by such proposed road, until after said survey was made."

There having been a judgment for the defendants, the plaintiff appealed.

John Reynolds, for Appellant.

It is found that the premises upon which the trespass was committed were owned and possessed by the plaintiff, and that the amount of damages done to the same is five hundred dollars. If the defendants were not justified the plaintiff is entitled to judgment in his favor for this sum.

It is claimed that under the statute the plaintiff waived his claim for damages, and dedicated his land to the public, by not presenting his petition for damages on the day appointed in the notice. To this proposition there are these answers: 1. The notice was such as to render it impossible to comply with the requirements of the law. 2. The notice was not such as is required by law. 3. If the statute is to receive a liberal construction, so as to enable the public officers to effect the purposes designed by it, such liberality of construction must also extend to the claimant whose land it is proposed to take from him.

It is not competent for the Legislature to declare that a person shall be deemed to have dedicated his property to public use without any act on his part, from which it can be judicially determined that a dedication has been made. (Beatty v. Kurtz, 2 Peters, 566; Hunter v. Trustees of Sand Hill, 6 Hill, 411; Chotard v. Pope, 12 Wheat. 585; 3 Kent Com. 450.)

A law which proposes to take private property for public use must be strictly construed, and followed with exactness. (Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 241.) Here the proceedings were irregular and inoperative, because the notice and petition were insufficient. They did not state with particularity the course of said road, or the proposed alterations, so as to enable the property owner to state the amount and character of the land thereby affected.

Edward F. Head, for Respondents.

The defendants opened the road in question, in pursuance of an order to them from the Supervisors of San Mateo County. The statute provides that, on receiving notice from the Supervisors, the Trustees shall proceed to open the road. No discretion is left with them. The statute is mandatory. Whenever the law imposes a duty upon a public officer it protects him in its discharge. (Vanderheyden v. Young, 11 Johna. 150; Heney v. Lowell, 16 Barb. 268; Sheldon v. Van Buskirk, 2 N. Y. 473; Hutchinson v. Brant, 5 N. Y. 208.) They are expressly protected by statute in this State. (Hitt. Gen. Laws, 6896.)

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, C. J.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This is an action of trespass, quare clausum fregit, brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for the digging and injury of his land, done by the defendants, who justify as being the Trustees of the Fifth Township, in the County of San Mateo, in which township the premises are situate.

The defendants justify under certain proceedings instituted before the Board of Supervisors of San Mateo County altering, or attempting to alter, a public highway in that county, and whereby they claim that a public road was legally opened through the premises of the plaintiff.

The statute of 1867-8, p. 283, concerning roads and highways in the County of San Mateo, provides, in substance, that any person intending to apply to the Board of Supervisors for the alteration of any highway shall give notice of such intention by posting notices that, at some designated regular meeting of the Board, to be held not less than fifteen days thereafter, an application for that purpose will be made, which notice must state, with particularity, the starting point and the course and terminus of the proposed alteration. (Section 2.)

It is further provided that any person owning lands to be affected by the proposed alteration, and who desires to apply for damages in consequence thereof, shall make application by petition to the Board, on the day on which the application shall be made, according to the notice, and that said petition shall set forth the particular road referred to, the amount and character of the land affected thereby, and any other circumstances having relation to the subject of damages to such land, and that, failing to present such petition at the time and in the manner prescribed, he shall be considered as waiving all right to damages, and as dedicating the lands affected by the proposed alteration to the public use as a highway, etc. (Section 4.)

The right of a party whose lands are appropriated to the public use to receive compensation therefor is undoubted under the provisions of the Constitution. (Article I, Section 8.) While it is unquestionably competent to the Legislature to provide the several steps to be pursued in the assertion of his claim for compensation, the prescribed procedure must not destroy or substantially impair the right itself. A reasonable opportunity must be afforded him to claim and receive his damages; then, if being so afforded, it be not availed of, the statute may provide that such failure shall constitute a bar to his claim.

I think that the provisions of the statute under consideration, in these respects, are free from constitutional objection, and that, if the steps therein prescribed be observed, the proceedings would be valid.

The first step to be taken is to give the notice, describing, with particularity, the termini and course of the proposed alteration. "Particularity," in these respects, is exacted. The reason is, that on the return day of the notice the party whose lands are to be taken must, upon pain of losing his claim, be prepared to present, and must then actually present, a petition to the Board, describing the particular road involved in the proceedings, and setting forth the amount and character of his land which will be affected by the taking, and other circumstances relating to the question of damages. He is held to particularity in time, subject matter, and circumstances. Of course, if the notice given be itself radically insufficient — if it be merely general, and practically indefinite as to the land to be taken, the owner cannot comply with the requirement of the statute — and being unable to comply, his property is taken without just compensation, which is just the thing the Constitution forbids to be done. The notice given in initiating the proceedings under consideration would seem to be insufficient on its face. The proposed alteration in the road is to run northerly from one point to another; but it is also to run "over the most practicable route for a road," and what route that means cannot be known to the owner until after his day to present his claim for damages has already passed by — not till the viewers shall have made their report. Then he can learn, for the first time, how much damage he is to sustain, and how much he might have claimed had he known it in time. In other words, he can then learn the extent of the loss he has sustained.

However, even if the sufficiency of the notice of application here on its face were debatable, the Court below has expressly found that the plaintiff could not ascertain from it the amount or character of his land which would be affected by the proceedings.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to render judgment for the plaintiff on the findings.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA
v. JOHN W. TAGGART.

TWO OFFENSES IN SAME INDICTMENT.—Burglary and breaking and entering a dwelling house, in the day-time, are intended by the law (Act of 1858 concerning crimes, and the Act of February 27th, 1864) to be two distinct offenses, and they cannot be made to constitute one and the same offense by means of an averment in an indictment to that effect.

A DEMURRER TO AN INDICTMENT, on the ground that it charges two offenses, is permitted by Section 289 of the Criminal Practice Act.

APPEAL from the County Court of Sonoma County.

The Grand Jury found the following indictment against the defendant:

“John W. Taggart is accused by the Grand Jury of the County of Sonoma, State of California, by this indictment found the 3d day of October, A. D. 1871, of the crime of burglary, committed as follows: The said John W. Taggart, on the 13th day of July, A. D. 1871, at the county and State aforesaid, at about the hour of nine o'clock in the night-time of said day, with force and arms the house and tenement of William Withrow, then and there situate, feloniously and burglariously did break and enter with an intent then and in said house and tenement to commit petit larceny — that is to say, with intent to steal, take, and carry away one claw-hammer, worth one dollar; one spokeshave, worth seventy-five cents; one two-foot rule, worth fifty cents; and one monkey-wrench, worth one dollar, of the goods and chattels of William Withrow and John Charlton. And by way of setting out the above burglarious entrance in a different count and in a different form, the said Grand Jury further accuses the said John W. Taggart of entering said house, in the day-time, with intent to steal, committed as follows: The said John W. Taggart, in the said County of

Argument for Appellant.

Sonoma, on the said 13th day of July, 1871, at about the hour of six o'clock p. m., and in the day-time of said day, the shop and building of William Withrow willfully and maliciously did enter, with intent to commit petit larceny therein—that is to say, with intent to steal, take, and carry away one claw-hammer, worth one dollar; one spokeshave, worth seventy-five cents; one two-foot rule, worth fifty cents; and one monkey-wrench, worth one dollar, of the goods and chattels of William Withrow and John Charlton. And the Grand Jury further say that the two foregoing counts in this indictment are descriptive of one and the same transaction, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute," etc.

The defendant demurred to the indictment, the demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff appealed.

Barclay Henley, District Attorney, for Appellant.

While our Criminal Practice Act prescribes rules governing criminal pleading widely variant from those of the common law, yet in regard to the insertion of two counts in an indictment, the Legislature has made no change, except such as it will be seen this indictment exactly conforms to. (The People v. O'Connor, 17 Cal. 354.) The only difference in that particular between the rule under our code and the rule of the common law, is that under the former all of the counts, taken either separately or together, must appear to embrace but one transaction, and there must be an allegation to that effect (The People v. O'Connor, supra; The People v. Thompson, 28 id. 216), in the indictment, while under the latter, the common law rule, each count must profess to charge a distinct and independent crime. (1 Bish. Crim. Pro. Secs. 181, 182, 201, 202, 208.)

Wm. Ross, for Respondent.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The first count in the indictment charges the defendant with the commission of the crime of burglarly, as defined by Section 58 of the Act concerning crimes and punishments, as amended in 1858. The second count charges him with the commission of the crime of breaking and entering a dwelling house, etc., in the day-time, with the intent to steal, as defined in the Act of February 27th, 1864 (Stats. 1863-4, p. 104.) Those are, and are intended by the law to be, distinct offenses, and they cannot be made to constitute one and the same offense by means of an averment in the indictment to that effect.

The defendant demurred to the indictment on the ground that it charges two offenses, and the demurrer was sustained. The defendant is permitted, by Section 289 of the Criminal Practice Act, to demur to the indictment on that ground and there being two offenses charged, the demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

JAMES LICK v. JAMES RAY AND JAMES H. RAY.

ACTION TO REMOVE "CLOUD UPON TITLE"—CIRCUMSTANCES AUTHORIZING RELIEF.—Where Lick held a Sheriff's deed to certain property under a judgment and execution, in an attachment suit against James H. Ray, and James Ray held another Sheriff's deed to the same property, under another judgment and execution, against James H. Ray, the latter judgment and deed being earlier in date than the former, but not so early as the attachment lien in the former suit, and it appeared by averment that James Ray held his deed in trust for his father, James H. Ray, and it was conceded that Lick's was the superior title, but Ray claimed that his deed did not amount to a cloud: held, that the apparent title held by Ray under his deed was a cloud, and that Lick was entitled to relief in equity to remove it.

Argument for Appellants.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A "CLOUD UPON TITLE."—If a title against which relief is prayed as a cloud be of such a character that, if asserted by action and put in evidence, it would drive the other party to the production of his own title in order to establish a defense, it constitutes a cloud, which the latter has a right to call upon equity to remove.

WHAT IS NOT A "CLOUD UPON TITLE."—If a title be void on its face, if it be a nullity, a mere feble de es, when produced, so that an action based upon it would "fall of its own weight," it does not constitute a cloud; and an action cannot be maintained to remove it as such, except upon a showing of special circumstances entitling the party to relief.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The trial of this cause in the Court below resulted in a judgment in favor of, and as prayed by, plaintiff—to the effect that the deed to James Ray was a cloud upon the plaintiff's title; that it was null and void; that it should be delivered up and canceled, and enjoining defendants from asserting any right, title, or interest, under or through it, to Santa Catalina Island.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

The defendants appeal from the judgment.

S. F. & L. Reynolds, for Appellants.

To any action that might have been brought on the deed held by Ray, Lick would have had a perfect legal defense through the prior judgment of Hawkshurst. His proofs would have been those in any ordinary action of ejectment, a paramount legal title. He would prove the Hawkshurst judgment, execution, sale under it, and the Sheriff's deed to Hawkshurst, and then the deed to himself. That would have placed the paramount legal title in him, and as completely displaced such title out of Ray, the purchaser, as out of Ray, the judgment debtor and original owner, if the action had been against him. That would have been a complete answer and defense to Ray's action, and the result would have been a judgment in favor of Lick.

Argument for Respondent.

An inspection of the two deeds, and the proceedings upon which they are based, show clearly that no cloud is upon, or danger to, the title of the plaintiff. A Court of equity will not entertain a bill to remove a cloud from the title to real estate, or for the cancellation of a written instrument, when it is apparent from an inspection of the deed or writing that no danger to the title or interest of the plaintiff is to be apprehended. (Cox v. Clift, 2 Comst. 118.)

Williams & Thornton, and C. H. Sawyer, for Respondent.

The record here consists only of the judgment roll, and all presumptions and intendments of law are in favor of the decree. It will be presumed that there was sufficient evidence of all the averments of the complaint to justify the action of the Court below; and if no error appears in the judgment roll, the decree will be affirmed. (Ritter v. Mason, 11 Cal. 214; People v. Quincy, 8 Cal. 89; Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 415; Waldie v. Doll, 29 Cal. 556.)

The deed to James Ray is a cloud on plaintiff's title, and the true test to ascertain the fact is this: would the owner of the property, in an action of ejectment founded on the deed, be required to offer evidence to defeat a recovery? (Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 132; Fulton v. Harlow, 20 Cal. 484; England v. Lewis, 25 Cal. 357; Warrener v. Smith, 27 Cal. 652; Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 388; Thompson v. Lynch, 29 Cal. 190; Peirsoll v. Elliott, 6 Pet. 98; Ward v. Chamberlain, 2 Black, 444; 2 Story's Eq. Sec. 700.)

This is not an action to quiet title under section two hundred and fifty-four of the Practice Act. It is a bill in equity, seeking the cancellation of a deed fraudulent and void, but which casts a cloud on plaintiff's title. It is, therefore, not necessary either to aver or prove possession of the land. (Hager v. Schindler, 29 Cal. 57; Thompson v. Lynch, 29 Cal. 190.) Fraud is not a necessary ingredient in this form of action. It is sufficient if the deed sought to be avoided in a cloud on plaintiff's title. (Stewart v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 263.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

This appeal is brought from a judgment by which it was determined that a deed made to the defendant James Ray by the Sheriff of the County of Los Angeles of an undivided three eighths of the island of Santa Catalina, formerly owned by the defendant James H. Ray, and sold by said Sheriff under a judgment rendered against the latter in favor of Benjamin Wood, was null and void as against Lick, who claims to have acquired the said three eighths interest of the defendant James H. Ray through another deed made by the Sheriff of said county, by which he conveyed said three eighths to Walter Hawkshurst upon a Sheriff's sale under a judgment which the latter obtained against the defendant James H. Ray. It is conceded that the title to these three eighths is vested in Lick, but it is claimed that he cannot maintain this action to remove the cloud which, as he alleges, is cast upon his title by the existence of the Sheriff's deed to James Ray. The case, it is to be observed, is not brought under the provisions of Section 254 of the code, nor is it averred that Lick was at the commencement of the action in possession of the island or of any part thereof either by himself or his tenant.

It appears that the defendant James Ray, who holds the Sheriff's deed, under the Wood sale, is the son of his co-defendant James H. Ray, and the complaint sets out the fact that Hawkshurst brought an action against the defendant James H. Ray to recover the sum of money due to the former from the latter, and avers that in that action a writ of attachment was issued in the usual form against the property of the latter, and was levied upon his interest in the island, being the three eighths in controversy, so as to create a lien thereon; and a judgment being subsequently rendered against the defendant James H. Ray in that action, an execution was duly issued thereon to the Sheriff of Los Angeles County, who afterwards sold the interest of Ray to Hawkshurst, and in due time executed and delivered to him a Sheriff's deed thereof, and Hawkshurst subsequently conveyed this interest to Lick, who is now the owner of it.

It further appears by the averments of the complaint that Benjamin Wood recovered another judgment against James H. Ray, under which an execution was issued to the said Sheriff, and that said interest of James H. Ray was sold to J. B. Crockett, who received a certificate of sale thereof, and subsequently and before the expiration of six months thereafter Crockett sold and assigned this certificate to the defendant James Ray for a sum of money paid in hand, and that the Sheriff subsequently executed a deed of conveyance upon said certificate, which deed ran to the defendant James Ray as assignee of the certificate. The complaint avers that the money which was the consideration of the assignment of the Sheriff's certificate to the defendant James Ray, was advanced by his father and codefendant James H. Ray, and that the defendant James Ray took and held the assignment of the certificate of sale in trust for his father, and subsequently received and now holds the Sheriff's deed thereon, also in trust for his father, and that the transaction should be held to amount to a mere redemption made by the defendant James H. Ray himself from the sale under the Wood judgment, and that therefore the Sheriff's deed running to James Ray should be set aside and avoided as being a cloud upon the title of Lick.

The evidence is not set forth in the record, nor is any point made here by the appellants, except the point that these facts do not enable Lick to maintain the action to cancel the Sheriff's deed to James Ray as a cloud upon his own title. Unquestionably, if the complaint be true, and it must be considered to be so as the case is here presented to us, it is a fraud against Lick that the defendant, James H. Ray, whose title Lick has acquired, should, in the name of his son and codefendant, James, hold and keep on foot another title purporting to be derived through a Sheriff's deed upon an execution sale against himself, running in form to the latter as grantee; and upon well settled principles prevailing in Courts of equity, and which were asserted by this Court in the case of Hager v. Schindler, 29 Cal. 55, such an instrument ought not to be permitted to be retained by the defendants, since (conceding, as the appellants here do, that Lick has the title, both at law and in equity) they can retain their own Sheriff's deed only for some sinister purpose.

Singularly enough, however, the defendants point to the admitted superiority of Lick's title in connection with the conceded worthlessness of their own as a reason why Lick should not obtain any relief in this action. They claim that their own title does not even amount to a cloud upon that of Lick, who, as they therefore claim, has no right to resort to this proceeding to remove it as a cloud.

While it is conceded that a party in the position of Lick has the right to maintain an action to remove a cloud from his own title without awaiting its active assertion by suit, it is contended that the Sheriff's deed to James Ray is not such an one as amounts to a cloud.

It is settled by a long line of decisions in this Court that if the title against which relief is prayed be of such a character as that, if asserted by action and put in evidence, it would drive the other party to the production of his own title in order to establish a defense, it constitutes a cloud which the latter has the right to call upon the Court to remove and dissipate. If, on the other hand, the title be void on its face; if it be a nullity — a mere felo de se, when produced, so that an action based upon it will "fall of its own weight" as has been said, then the title of the party

plaintiff is not necessarily clouded thereby, and he ought, if he would maintain an action to have it removed, show some special circumstances which entitle him, in the view of a Court of equity, to a decree for that purpose. Testing this case by these rules, it will be seen that in an action of ejectment brought upon the Sheriff's deed to James Ray to recover the possession of the three eighths of the island, the plaintiff in such an action would be able to make a prima facie case of great apparent strength. He could show, of course, that James H. Ray was the owner of the three eighths; that Wood regularly obtained a money judgment against him; that under that judgment his estate in the island had been sold by the Sheriff, and that after the expiration of the time allowed for a redemption a Sheriff's deed in due form had been delivered to the assignee of the Sheriff's certificate of sale. He could show a judgment of unquestionable validity, an execution duly issued thereon, and a Sheriff's deed duly delivered, and these are all that would be necessary to constitute a sufficient prima facie title in the grantee of the Sheriff. Lick, if in possession, must obviously, under such a state of facts proven, suffer a recovery, unless he should produce his own title in his defense. And taking that course, if he should even rest with the proof of the Hawkshurst judgment, execution, and Sheriff's deed thereunder, he would still fail in his defense, for his adversary would in that case have shown the elder Sheriff's deed, which would be prima facie the better title. Lick would be compelled to go further and show the facts (in which the superiority of his title really consists), that the lien (being an attachment lien in aid of the Hawkshurst judgment) under which he claimed was elder upon the premises, and, therefore, superior to the lien of the judgment under which his adversary derived his title, upon the principle that a "prior lien gives a prior claim, which is entitled to a prior satisfaction out of the subject it binds, unless the lien be intrinsically defective, or be displaced by some act of the party holding it, which shall postpone him in a Court of law or equity to a subsequent claimant," and that "the single circumstance of not proceeding on it until a subsequent lien has been obtained and carried into execution has never been considered as such an act." (Rankin v. Scott, 12 Wheat. 177.) It is evident that if Lick should succeed in the defense of such an action he could only do so by so establishing his own title as to overcome the very formidable case already made by his adversary.

We think that the apparent title held by James Ray to the three eighths of the island is not only a cloud upon the true title of Lick, but one of a remarkably formidable character, and which he is entitled to remove by the judgment of the Court.

Judgment affirmed.

RHODES, J., dissenting:

This action cannot, in my opinion, be maintained. A Court of equity, as I understand the rule, will order a deed to be delivered up to be canceled, which was fraudulent or invalid at its execution — which, at its inception, had some inherent defect in its character which rendered it void or voidable; but a deed will not be ordered to be canceled, which, at its execution, was valid and free from fraud, unless it be a mortgage, or some instrument that may be satisfied or defeated by payment, the performance of a condition, or the like. I, therefore, dissent from the opinion of Mr. Justice WALLACE, and from the judgment.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT, being disqualified, did not participate in the foregoing decision.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
EX REL. ALEXANDER W. MACPHERSON, v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

EFFECT OF DECISION IN THE "MATTER OF BEALE STREET," 39 CAL. 495.—

The directions given by the Supreme Court, in its decision on appeal from the County Court of San Francisco, in The Matter of Beale Street, 39 Cal. 495, were but the announcement of results to be ultimately reached, and had no reference to the mere procedure to be pursued in the County Court for that purpose; and they did not authorize that Court to itself modify the report of the Commissioners and enter final judgment thereon.

CHANGING GRADE OF STREETS IN SAN FRANCISCO—FINAL JUDGMENT

MUST CONFORM TO FINAL REPORT.—Under the statute of March 28th, 1868, authorizing the Supervisors of San Francisco to modify or change the grade of streets (Stats. 1867-8, p. 463), the final judgment to be rendered by the County Court must be one rendered in conformity with the report of the Commissioners on file; and when it is ascertained that there are errors in the report they must first be eradicated from it before the Court can proceed to final judgment; nor can any report become the basis of final judgment except it shall first have received the approval and sanction of the Supervisors.

CONTROL BY SAN FRANCISCO SUPERVISORS OVER PROCEEDINGS TO CHANGE

GRADE OF STREETS.—As, under the statute of March 28th, 1868, for the change of grade of streets in San Francisco (Stats. 1867-8, p. 463), the County Court, before it is authorized to hear objections to the proceedings, must be notified "that the Board of Supervisors have confirmed the report" of the Commissioners; and as, if they reject it, it must fail, and without their approval the proceedings must halt, it follows that the Supervisors have an unqualified veto power over the proceedings in this respect—the proceedings being in reality their own, and none the less so because carried on through the instrumentality of the County Court.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONERS CHANGING STREET GRADE IN SAN FRANCISCO

TO BE APPROVED IN ALL ITS PARTS BY SUPERVISORS.—Under the statute for the change of grade of streets in San Francisco (Stats. 1867-8, p. 463), the report of the Commissioners, upon which the judgment of the County Court is to be rendered, as therein provided, must be one which as a whole and in all its parts and details, and, if modified, with all its modifications, has received the approval and confirmation of the Board of Supervisors.

THIS was an application for the writ of mandate to the Supreme Court.

Argument for Relator.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Jo Hamilton, Attorney General, and McAllisters & Bergin, for Relator.

The action of the Board of Supervisors was conclusive, unless set aside by the County Court, where alone exclusively resided the power to correct or revise it. The entire procedure for the change of grade of streets in San Francisco is of purely statute creation, and, therefore, the mode of correcting any errors that may intervene is confined exclusively to that allowed by the statute. This is provided by the statute to be by application to the County Court.

The Act (section two) provides that "the County Court shall take jurisdiction of the proceedings;" and, having such jurisdiction, its action is final and conclusive upon the legality and validity of the proceedings. Jurisdiction is a term of well known and defined legal import; it is the power to hear and determine in a cause or proceeding. (Ex Parte Watkins, 3 Pet. 290; Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 338; Brewster v. Judkins, 19 Cal. 171.) As was said in Peck v. Jenness, 7 How. 624: "It is a doctrine of law, too long established to require citation of authorities, that where a Court has jurisdiction it has the right to decide every question that occurs in the cause; and, whether its decision be correct or otherwise, its judgment till reversed is regarded as binding in every Court." (See, also, Semple v. Hagar, 27 Cal. 169.)

The Act further provides that if the Supervisors confirm the report, the grades of the streets shall be changed as contemplated. The action of the Supervisors has been done, and its action has been affirmed, not only by the County Court, but by the judgment of this Court. In any and every view then that may be taken of these proceedings, they are legal and valid and effectual to operate the change of grades prayed for.

Mandamus will lie and is the proper remedy. The relator has a vested right under the judgment awarding him damages, of the benefit of which he cannot be deprived by the Board of Supervisors. In proceedings of this kind, though the Board has a discretion to institute or prosecute them or not, before rights have vested, yet once they have so far progressed that rights have vested under them, they cease any longer to have any discretion in the premises, and may be compelled by mandamus to proceed if they fail to do so. (People v. Corporation of Brooklyn, 1 Wend. 322; In the Matter of Beckman Street, 20 Johns. 268; Safford v. Mayor of Albany, 7 Johns. 545; Hawkins v. Trustees of Rochester, 1 Wend. 54; Ganson v. City of Buffalo, 1 Keyes, N. Y. 454; McCullough v. City of Brooklyn, 23 Wend. 458; People v. Common Council of Syracuse, 20 How. Pr. 491; State v. City of Keokuk, 9 Iowa, 442.)

Argument for Relator.

William Irvine, also for Relator.

The Board of Supervisors had jurisdiction of the subject matter. (Smith v. Corporation of Washington, 20 How. 135.) In passing upon the petition, and ordering the change of grade, it acted in a judicial character, and its adjudication was conclusive upon all parties affected by the change, unless objected to at the time and in the manner specified in the Act, as by the express provisions of the Act, all errors, omissions, and irregularities in any of the proceedings are declared to be waived, unless the particular errors, omissions, or irregularities be objected to and specified. (Kavanagh v. City of Brooklyn, 38 Barb. 237.)

There having been no objections made in the County Court, as provided in the Act, the judgment became conclusive of the entire subject matter, as well upon those to whom damages were awarded as upon those assessed for benefits. And all errors, omissions, and irregularities, if any, were tolled by the final judgment of confirmation. After such confirmation the city had no authority to discontinue the proceedings. Upon such confirmation rights become vested; and the city is bound to go on with the proceeding, and will be compelled to do so by mandamus on the application of any person interested in the proposed improvement. (People ex rel. Green v. Common Council of Syracuse, 20 How. Pr. 491.)

S. M. Wilson, R. C. Harrison, and W. C. Burnett, for Respondent.

The writ of mandate is never issued to control the discretion of a deliberative body. In the case presented the Board of Supervisors has a discretionary power intrusted to it in determining whether it will order the work asked for. (Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal.)

The relator proceeds upon the ground that the proceedings for the change of grade have ended, and have resulted in an actual change of grade, and that now the Board of Supervisors must begin and carry out the actual work of reducing the present plane of the street to that official grade. But it will be observed that the mandamus asked for is not to compel the Board to go on and establish a grade, but to compel the actual work of grading to an established grade. As a matter of fact, the proceedings to do the work have not been commenced by the Board. It refuses to declare its intention to do the work. It refuses to take the very first step. How utterly inapplicable, then, are authorities, that after a Board has proceeded to a certain degree of progress in a public work, and until great public and private interests are affected, they must go on to completion, and may be compelled by mandamus?

The relator has no vested right, and he himself concedes that he has none, unless the report of the Commissioners has been finally confirmed; and we shall show that it has not been confirmed. But it is plain that he could not be damaged until the work is done, nor can any assessments for paying damages be enforced until the necessity for making payments arrives. The only right, then, that the relator can claim to be "vested" is the right to be damaged; and we know of no principle which guarantees such a right to any citizen. Again, the Board of Supervisors are not attempting to deprive the relator of any "right." They have done nothing to impair his right to receive those damages whenever they shall have been suffered. His judgment therefore is forever good; and whenever he shall suffer any damage from the change of grade, the means of enforcing that judgment will be ample and unimpaired.

But the Board never acquired any jurisdiction, and the grades have never been changed. There was not a sufficient representation of the property in the original petition; and the defeat there is not aided by any subsequent proceedings in the County Court. The act does not say that the County Court shall "have" jurisdiction over the parties or property to be affected. Such a declaration would have no force. A Court cannot, of its own motion, "have" jurisdiction of the person or the subject in controversy. It may "acquire" jurisdiction by following the steps prescribed by law; but the Legislature cannot, by its act, confer jurisdiction upon a Court over a person. It can only authorize the Court to obtain jurisdiction. This is the full extent of its powers; and unless jurisdiction is "obtained" in the first place the acts of the Court are coram non judice and void. The provision of the statute under discussion is, that "the County Court shall 'take' jurisdiction of the proceedings," i. e., it shall have just the jurisdiction which the Supervisors had. It does not acquire any additional jurisdiction, but simply "takes" the matter in hand, and proceeds to a certain step, when it surrenders the jurisdiction again to the Board of Supervisors, who finally determine whether the grade shall be changed. The powers of the County Court are merely ancillary to the Board of Supervisors, and given to it to enable the moneys to be raised to be collected by means of the machinery with which Courts are provided, and which the Supervisors have not at their command.

The Board never confirmed the report of the Commissioners. After the report had been filed the County Court fixed a day for hearing objections, and, after argument, confirmed the report; but this confirmation of the Court was an entirely distinct thing from the confirmation by the Supervisors, required by the statute. The one was a judicial confirmation of the legality of the report, while the other would have been an adoption of the report thus confirmed by the Court. An appeal was taken from that confirmation by the Court; and this Court reversed the confirmation by the County Court, and remanded the case, with directions to the Court below "to take such further proceedings to carry out the decision of this Court, not inconsistent with the opinion herein, as may be necessary." But the Court below did not cause the report to be amended, and did not cause any notice of any modification or change in the report to be given to the Board of Supervisors. Instead of doing so, the County Court took upon itself the office of performing the functions of the Commissioners, and attempted to enter a judgment in conformity with what the revised report should have been, but without having the report revised. It did not conduct the subsequent proceedings in conformity with the provisions of the statute. In so doing the Court neglected the very step which was essential to the change of the grade. It follows that neither the mandate of this Court nor the provisions of the statute, as to "the subsequent proceedings," have been followed. There has been a defect in the proceedings, which has prevented their consummation; there has been no confirmation of the report; there has been no change of grade.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This is an application for a peremptory writ of mandamus requiring the Board "to pass the necessary and proper resolutions and orders, and give the notices required by law, to grade Beale street from Folsom street to Bryant street, and Harrison street from Fremont street to Main street, to the newly established grade of said Beale street and Harrison street, between said Folsom street and Bryant street, and said Fremont street and Main street, and to proceed and execute the prayer of the petition of the property owners praying for the grading of said streets, * * * presented * * * October 24th, 1870."

It appears that in January, 1869, a petition signed by certain persons, owners of lots in San Francisco, was presented to the Board of Supervisors, praying that a change in the grade of Beale street from Folsom street to Bryant street, and also a corresponding change in the grade of Harrison street, an intersecting street, be ordered by the Board. The petition was presented under the provisions of the Act of March 28th, 1868, p. 463, authorizing the Board to modify and change the grade of streets in San Francisco, and it purported to be signed by the owners of three fourths of the property to be affected by the proposed change. In response to this petition, the Board, on the 23d day of February following, adopted a resolution reciting the substance of the petition presented, declaring their intention to accede to its prayer, designating certain limits within which the lots of land would be benefited by the proposed change, and directing that the resolution be published for the period of thirty days in the official newspaper as a notice of such intention, under section 2 of the statute. The publication was had accordingly — the first publication being made upon the 26th day of February, 1869 — and within twenty days after such first publication, some nine persons, owners of lots of land, filed their several duly verified petitions under subdivision two of section 2 of the statute, setting forth the damages which they claimed they would respectively sustain by the proposed change of grade, and asking the appointment of Commissioners to assess such damages, etc.; of the filing of which petitions the County Clerk gave immediate notice to the President of the Board. The County Court thereupon proceeded to appoint three proper persons to be Commissioners to assess the benefits and damages growing out of the proposed change of grade. This was on the 16th of April, 1869, and on the 4th of October following the Commissioners filed their report, in which they awarded damages not only to the nine persons who had so petitioned therefor, but to divers other persons, owners of lots, who had filed no petitions in that behalf. One of the nine persons who had duly filed petitions claiming damages was the present petitioner, A. W. McPherson, and there was awarded to him by the Commissioners in their report some thirty three thousand dollars as damages which he would sustain by the change of grade proposed. On the filing of this report the County Clerk notified the Board of Supervisors of the fact that it had been so filed, and the Board thereafter, on the 11th of October, 1869, by its ordinance, duly passed for that purpose, confirmed the report, of the fact of which confirmation the Clerk of the Board in turn gave notice to the County Court, and the County Court thereupon by its order fixed the 1st day of November, 1869, as the day for hearing parties feeling aggrieved by reason of the proceedings.

On that day the "Union Lumber Association," who, as owners of certain premises, had been assessed by the report in some sixty-five thousand dollars for supposed benefits to their property by the proposed change of grade, made objections to the report upon several grounds; among others, upon the ground that damages had been allowed to non-petitioning owners; that the damages as awarded were exorbitant in amount, and that the assessment imposed upon the property of the association for supposed benefits was excessive, etc. These objections coming on to be heard before the County Court, on the 17th of February, 1870, that Court held that the report of the Commissioners was correct in undertaking to award damages to non-petitioning owners, and that the Court had no authority to hear evidence or entertain an inquiry as to alleged errors committed in the estimates made by the Commissioners respecting benefits to be received or damages to be sustained, but that the estimates contained in the confirmed report, in the absence of fraud, were conclusive, and all objections being overruled, judgment was thereupon rendered against the several lots of land in accordance with the report on file.

From this judgment of the County Court the Union Lumber Association brought an appeal here, and this Court considering that, in so far as an award of damages had been made in favor of non-petitioning lot owners error had intervened, thereupon delivered its opinion to that effect and reversed the judgment and remanded the cause "with directions to render judgment, omitting the damages awarded to parties not filing petitions therefor as required by the statute, and for such further proceedings as may be necessary and not inconsistent with this opinion." (In The Matter of Beale Street, 39 Cal. 495.)

At a subsequent day, the remittitur not having issued, the counsel upon either side of that cause presented to this Court a stipulation to the effect that the judgment theretofore entered in the above entitled cause should be changed and modified so as to read as follows: "The judgment of the County Court is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to render judgment in favor of the nine persons who filed petitions for damages, omitting the damages awarded to parties not filing petitions therefor as required by the statute, and to deduct from the several assessments for benefits their respective proportionate part of the sum of two hundred and fifteen thousand and eighty dollars and fifty-seven cents, that had been awarded to persons not filing petitions for damages, and to apportion the amount of the several awards of said nine persons, together with the expenses of these proceedings, upon the lands and premises assessed for benefits, as reported by the Commissioners, and take such further proceedings to carry out the decision of this Court, not inconsistent with the opinion herein as may be necessary," and the order of modification was accordingly entered here.

The cause having been remanded to the County Court, that Court, on the 29th day of August, 1870, entered an order reciting the several steps which had been theretofore taken, including the proceedings had in this Court upon appeal, and thereupon, without setting aside or recommitting the report of the Commissioners, or correcting the report itself in any wise, the County Court rendered a judgment by which it awarded damages to the nine petitioning owners only, and by its judgment reduced the assessment for benefits in a like proportion, and upon the basis which had been here indicated as correct. The amount awarded by this judgment to McPherson, the Petitioner here, as damages was not reduced below the amount the Commissioners had reported in his favor, and upon the entry of judgment in the County Court he applied for an order of sale to enforce the collection of the sum so awarded to him, but the County Court denied the application on the ground that no such process could be lawfully issued until the work of actually grading said streets had been done and the fact of its completion ascertained by the Court. The petitioner, McPherson, thereupon presented to the Board of Supervisors a written petition, subscribed by himself and other owners of property fronting on the work proposed to be done, in which petition they prayed the Board to cause the work of grading of these streets to be done, in accordance with the resolution and notice of February 23d, 1869, and the Board refusing to accede to the petition, he now makes application for the writ of mandamus to compel them to do so.

The judgment of this Court, reversing that of the County Court, and remanding the cause, with directions, placed the cause, upon its return to the County Court, in the same situation as to the further proceedings to be had thereafter, as though that Court had itself finally sustained the objection of the Union Lumber Association in respect to the award of damages to non-petitioning lot owners. Had that Court itself sustained the objection made in that behalf, it must have resulted that any judgment thereafter to be rendered by it must have been one confining the award of damages to the nine petitioning owners, and reducing, of course, the assessment for benefits in a relative proportion.

The directions given here, that judgment should be rendered in favor of certain persons, and that a reduction of damages awarded, as well as of benefits assessed, should be made, were but the announcements of results to be ultimately reached, and had no reference, of course, to the mere procedure to be pursued in the County Court for that purpose. The mandate of this Court directed that Court to take such further proceedings as might be necessary to carry into effect the decision rendered here. That Court was thus thrown back upon the statute to ascertain for itself what proceedings were necessary to be pursued for that purpose, for no question upon that subject had been made, or considered, or decided here. And it is clear that had the objection of the association as to the allowance of damages to the non-petitioners been sustained in the County Court, without the resort to an appeal to this Court, the Commissioners must have been directed to modify their report, and to reduce the amounts therein set forth for damages to be sustained, and for benefits to be received as well. That objection being sustained in the County Court in the first instance, or here on appeal in the second, it unavoidably resulted that an excess of damages awarded, aggregating more than two hundred thousand dollars in amount, would appear upon the face of the report itself. As, under the statute, the judgment to be rendered must be one rendered in conformity with the report on file, it is obvious that the ascertained errors of the report itself should be first eradicated before proceeding to final judgment thereon. The means to be availed of by the County Court for the correction of a report, ascertained to have been made upon an erroneous basis of law or fact, are not pointed out in the statute, nor is it important that they should be so pointed out. An order directing the particulars in which, or enunciating the principles upon which, a modification should be made is all that would be necessary in that respect. This is mere practice, and the particular procedure adopted, whatever it be, nothing more than form. But the duty to direct the modification of the report in some form is clear, and had it been observed in this instance another duty, and one which is important in its consequences, must have thereupon arisen — the duty of resubmitting the modified report for the confirmation or rejection of the Board of Supervisors. There can be no doubt that the intent of the statute is, that no report shall become the basis of the judgment of the County Court, in proceedings to change the grade of streets, except such report shall itself have first received the approval and confirmation of the Board. Unless this be the correct interpretation of the statute, the provisions of the ninth subdivision of the second section amount to a mere delusion and a snare. It is there enacted, that before the County Court shall be authorized to hear any objection to the proceedings by persons aggrieved, it must have been notified "that the Board have confirmed the report." Of course if the Board reject it, it must fail — the Board has thus an unqualified veto power over the proceedings in this respect, for these proceedings are in reality their own, and not the less so because carried on through the instrumentality of the County Court. When the report upon which judgment is to be rendered is filed there, the Board must have notice of the fact. The report is first for them to consider. They are to determine whether, in view of what is now developed, the proposed change is still advisable; whether the results anticipated at the passage of the resolution, in the first instance, appear to have been attained, or to be indeed attainable; to inquire what proportion the aggregate damages to be suffered bear to the aggregate benefits to be accomplished; whether a reasonable measure of substantial justice among the property holders affected has been observed by the Commissioners; in fine, the projected measure is, so far as the public is concerned, now brought up before the Board for definitive disposal, by the light of all the reasons which influence public bodies in the discharge of public duties involving high considerations of policy and justice.

This approval of the Board, accorded to the report, constitutes the warrant and the authority of the Court to proceed further. Without that approval the proceedings must halt. The approved report is indispensable to the taking of further steps in the business. A mere report filed, one which has not been sanctioned by the Board, as affording the requisite authority to proceed, is as worthless as though the signatures of all the Commissioners had been omitted upon its face.

And though a report be filed, and even, upon consideration, it be approved by the ordinance of the Board, yet if through any agency, or by any means subsequently occurring, in the judicial proceedings to follow, the report itself be modified in a material point, has it not thereby ceased to be the report approved by the Board? Or is it to be said that the approval of the original report filed in the case is to be applied by operation of law to any modified or substituted report by which the original report may be thereafter supplanted or superseded?

We think that these questions can be answered in but one way, and that is that the report upon which the judgment of the County Court is to be rendered must be one which, as a whole and in all its parts and details, has received the approval and confirmation of the Board.

But the judgment of the County Court of August 29th, 1870, was not a judgment in accordance with the report on file, which had received the approval of the Board—that report, as we have said, must have been first amended before the judgment directed by the mandate of this Court could be properly entered—the amendment of the report, in the respects indicated here, was one of the further proceedings directed by the judgment of this Court, and then, if the Board had by ordinance approved the report as so amended, and its approval had been notified to the County Court, the judgment of that Court might have been appropriately rendered thereon. Had the report, as thus amended, been resubmitted to the Board, new considerations of a grave character must have unavoidably been thereby presented for determination.

It would then have appeared, for the first time to the Board, by the amended report, that only nine persons were to receive their damages occasioned by the proposed change; that a large number of persons, having claims probably equally as meritorious as those nine, were about to lose them by reason of a mere misapprehension upon their part of the terms of the statute requiring them to present their petitions therefor; that the omission of these claims, amounting, as we have seen, to upwards of two hundred thousand dollars, would be a great hardship upon the claimants, from which the Board alone had the power and the discretion to relieve them, by withholding its approval from the amended report, and thus, by forcing proceedings de novo, have promoted substantial justice in that respect. But whatever view the Board might have entertained upon this, or any other matter appearing upon the proceedings at that point, the statute contemplated that the amended report should pass the ordeal of their judgment, and receive an approval or rejection at their hands, as the case might be, before it could become the subject of further action in the Courts.

The petition and exhibits, constituting the record upon this application for the writ of mandamus, failing, as they do, to show that final proceedings have yet been had in the County Court, pursuant to the mandate of this Court, it results that there was no absolute duty upon the part of the Board to accede to the petition of the applicant, demanding that it begin the work of grading the streets referred to.

The application for the writ must, therefore, be denied; and it is so ordered.

DAVID PORTER v. FRANCES E. GAMBA.

SOLE TRADER—FINDING OF "FULL COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE."—A finding that there was a full compliance by a married woman with the statute of 1862 relating to sole trader (Stats. 1862, p. 108), is equivalent to a finding that she was authorized to carry on the business specified in her own name and on her own account.

MANAGEMENT OF HUSBAND DOES NOT EXEMPT SOLE TRADER FROM LIABILITY.
—A sole trader cannot claim exemption from liability, as such, on the ground that she permitted her husband to manage and control the business.

SOLE TRADER ACT—CONSTRUCTION OF PROVISION AGAINST HUSBAND'S MANAGEMENT.—The provision in section three of the Sole Trader Act (Stats.

Argument for Appellant.

1862, p. 108), that "nothing contained in this Act shall be deemed to authorize a married woman to carry on business in her own name when the same is managed or superintended by her husband," was intended only for the protection of the creditors of the husband, and to prevent collusion and fraud between husband and wife, but not to shield the wife from her liability as a sole trader.

FORM OF JUDGMENT AGAINST SOLE TRADER.—There is no objection to a general judgment against a sole trader on a claim for which she, as such, is liable.

EVIDENCE.—Matters of mere inducement do not require strict proof.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The demand in this action was for the sum of six hundred and fifty-eight dollars, the value of wines and liquors furnished defendant for the purposes of her business as a sole trader. The judgment was in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, by name, for that amount, with costs. In the course of the trial the plaintiff called Wm. M. Pierson as a witness, who testified that he was an attorney at law; that he knew the Gambas; that as attorney for certain persons he had advised the levy of an attachment or execution against the restaurant on Market street, in San Francisco, where Mrs. Gamba did business. Being requested by defendant to fix dates, he said that he could not tell when it was; that he thought the suit was against defendant's husband; that the suit was in a Justice's Court, and Mrs. Gamba testified in it, and that there was an attachment or execution levied against the restaurant. The defendant moved to strike out the testimony of the witness referring to the suit, on the ground that no date was fixed, and it was not the best evidence. The motion was denied.

The defendant appealed.

J. C. Bates, for Appellant.

The findings do not support the judgment, because it appears therefrom that defendant was only authorized to carry on business in her own name as sole trader, and not on "her own account." And it also appears therefrom that defendant failed to comply with the statute by having her husband manage and superintend the business. The Act requires certain formalities to be complied with, which are: First, that the business be described; second, that she intends to carry on business in her own name; and third, on her own account—and unless she has all those privileges she is not a sole trader in law. (Adams v. Knowlton, 22 Cal. 289.)

Argument for Respondent.

The Act is not fulfilled by a married woman making, advertising, and recording certain declarations and orders, but the substantive provision of the Act is that those prescribed forms, having been duly observed, the woman shall in good faith carry on the business thereafter on her own account. (Hurlburt v. Jones, 25 Cal. 229.)

The form of the judgment is erroneous, as it is valid only so far as concerns defendant's separate property invested in and resulting from such business as sole trader. (Camden v. Mullen, 29 Cal. 566.)

There was error in admitting the testimony of Mr. Pierson, for the reason that no date was fixed, and it was not the best evidence.

George & Loughborough, for Respondent.

The Sole Trader Act does not prohibit the husband from assisting his wife in the business, or taking part in its management.

The prohibition in the third section of the Act was intended only for the protection of creditors, and to cut off an easy escape for fraud; but the construction claimed by appellant would furnish another and greater facility for the practice of fraud. The plaintiff having shown that the defendant had regularly obtained the right to carry on a particular business as sole trader, the fact that she dealt with the plaintiff within the scope of that business, was sufficient evidence that she availed herself of the privilege, and that her contract was on account of the business. (Melcher v. Kuhland, 22 Cal. 522.)

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

Mr. Pierson was called as a witness for the sole purpose of contradicting certain evidence given by the defendant, which is omitted from the statement. No error appears in the admission of his testimony, whether for that or any other purpose, but if erroneous, it was not prejudicial.

There is no objection to the form of the judgment, for the reason that the statute does not limit the responsibility of the wife for debts contracted as a sole trader, but she becomes liable generally.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The defendant is a married woman, and the plaintiff sues to recover the amount of a book account for merchandise sold to her, as a sole trader, carrying on the business of keeping a saloon and restaurant. The plaintiff had judgment and the defendant appeals, both from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial. The Court finds, that after a due compliance with the statute of 1862 (Stats. 1862, p. 108), the defendant was authorized, in her own name, as a sole trader, to carry on the business of keeping a saloon and restaurant, and that as such sole trader she purchased of the plaintiff the merchandise in question for use in her said business. It is objected, that the finding does not show a full compliance with the statute, because it does not appear that she was authorized to carry on the business on her own account as well as in her own name. But the Court finds there was a full compliance with the statute, which is equivalent to a finding that she was authorized to carry on the business in her own name and on her own account. Nor can we disturb the findings on the ground that they were not justified by the evidence. There was evidence tending strongly to show that she purchased the goods as a sole trader, and promised to pay for them as such; nor can she claim exemption from liability as a sole trader on the ground that she permitted her husband to manage and control the business of the saloon and restaurant. The third section of the Act of 1862 contains a provision to the effect that "nothing contained in this Act shall be deemed to authorize a married woman to carry on business in her own name when the same is managed or superintended by her husband." This provision was intended only for the protection of the creditors of the husband, and to prevent collusion and fraud between the husband and wife, but not to shield the wife from her liability as a sole trader. Creditors of the wife, dealing with her as a sole trade, would have but little security if their claims could be defeated at the option of the wife by her turning over the management of her business to her husband. Obviously this provision of the statute is not capable of the construction placed upon it by the defendant's counsel. The objection to the form of the judgment is not well taken, and there was no error in the admission of testimony. The witness Pierson was called to contradict the defendant by proof of her admissions, and what he stated in respect to the pendency of the action before the Justice was only by way of inducement.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Chief Justice SPRAGUE did not participate in the foregoing decision.

FERDINAND ROSEMAN AND L. L. HOWLAND v.
JOHN CANOVAN AND JOHN SANBORN.

FRAUDULENT SALE OF WOOL—ACTIVE CONCEALMENT OF DEFECTS BY VENDOR—DAMAGES.—Where the seller of wool in sacks knew that it had been rained on and was badly damaged, and that for the purpose of concealing its real condition the fleeces had been turned outside in and so packed; and the purchaser, when making an examination, cut a few inches into several of the sacks without discovering the damage, but remarked the extraordinary weight of the sacks and water stains upon them; and in answer to his inquiries as to these circumstances indicating damage, the seller said that the wool had not been rained on, so far as he knew, and had not got wet; that the weight was occasioned by extra good packing, that the water stains arose from sprinkling the sacks to make them hold more, and that all the wool, so far as he knew, was as good as that examined: Held, that though the rule of caveat emptor might apply if the seller had remained silent, yet under the circumstances and on account of the active concealment and artifice of the seller, he was responsible in damages for a fraudulent misrepresentation.

"CAVEAT EMPTOR" NOT APPLICABLE WHERE ARTIFICE USED TO PREVENT INQUIRY.—Unless there be warranty or fraud a purchaser of chattels cannot be heard to complain of condition or defects open to his observation, or which he might have seen had he thought proper to make an examination for that purpose; in such case the maxims of "caveat emptor" and "qui vult decipi, decipiatur" apply; but these rules have no application to a case in which the vendor resorts to a trick or artifice for the purpose of diverting the purchaser from the line of inquiry otherwise open to him, and which, but for such diversion, he might have followed.

"ALIUD EST CELARE, ALIUD TACERE."—Though a vendor of chattels may be excused from the obligation of pointing out defects or blemishes in the property he purposes to sell, he is not thereby at liberty to hinder or obstruct the purchaser in his attempts to find them out for himself.

FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION ON SALE OF CHATTELS—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTION.—In an action to recover damages for a fraudulent misrepresentation of the quality and condition of certain wool, which the plaintiff had been induced to purchase of the defendant, where there was evidence tending to show that defendant knew that the wool was damaged, and that by his false misrepresentations he induced the plaintiff to omit the examination for himself, which he would otherwise have made: Held, that an instruction to the effect that if plaintiff might by examination have ascertained the condition of the wool, defendant would not be responsible for concealing its condition, was practically directing a verdict for defendant, and was error.

Argument for Appellants.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

The facts are stated in the opinion.
Plaintiffs appealed.

Carr & Wilkes, for Appellants.

Though Chancellor KENT says that "if defects in an article sold be open equally to the observation of both parties, the law does not require the vendor to aid and assist the observation of the vendee, and that even a warranty will not cover defects that are plainly the objects of the senses;" yet he proceeds in the very next sentence to say that "if the vendor says or does anything whatever with an intent to divert the eye or obscure the observation of the buyer, even in relation to open defects, he would be guilty of an act of fraud." (See 2 Kent, 484; 3 Blackstone, 165.)

In this case the wool was not equally open to the observation of both parties. It was packed into large sacks, weighing, on an average, three hundred and fifty-six pounds. The sacks themselves and the outside of the wool were dry while the wool near the center of the sacks was wet, very dirty, and heating. The real condition of the wool could not be known by the vendees without laying the sacks open to the centers. This would have resulted in great inconvenience, as the sacks were lying upon the steamboat, and defendants took advantage of this fact. Under the circumstances the parties were not on an equality; neither was their knowledge nor their means of knowledge equal; and so, even without the representations by the vendor, the knowledge possessed and not communicated, but concealed by him, was a fraud upon the vendee. (2 Kent, 482; 1 Story Eq. Jur. Sec. 212.) Besides, the vendor was guilty of actual fraud in telling the vendee the wool was not wet, when in fact it was wet. His representations were made to induce, and did induce the purchasers, and were relied on by the vendee to his loss and the vendor's gain.

D. S. Terry, for Respondents.

The question of fraudulent representations was passed upon by the jury, and found in favor of defendants; and its finding on an issue of fact will not be reviewed by the appellate Court, where there is a conflict of evidence.

The plaintiffs seem to have proceeded under the civil law doctrine, that "sound price implies warranty of sound goods," as in their complaint they allege a purchase at the market price of good merchantable wool — an averment immaterial at common law, which permits a party to purchase at the lowest price he can, and imposes upon him the duty of examining and judging of the quality and condition of the goods, unless he chooses to require an express warranty. The rules of the common law were not framed to protect or favor ignorance or carelessness, nor to relieve the purchaser from the duty of exercising ordinary diligence in taking care of his own interests. While the common law affords to every person protection against fraud, it does not, in the apt language of KENT, "go to the romantic length of giving identity against the consequences of indolence and folly, or a careless indifference to the ordinary and accessible means of information." (2 Kent, 485.)

In Parkerson v. Lee, 2 East, 315, all the Judges held "that the rule of caveat emptor applied to the sale of all kinds of commodities; that without an express warranty by the seller, or fraud on his part, the buyer must stand all loss by latent defects, and that there was no instance in the English law of a contrary doctrine being laid down."

The doctrine contended for by plaintiffs would seriously embarrass commercial transactions, and lead to endless litigation. It would create obligations where none were intended to be assumed, and construe every word uttered by a vendor in commendation of his goods into a warranty, when it was neither so intended by the vendor nor understood by the purchaser; it would take away from commercial men one great excitement to the exercise of judgment, activity, and diligence in their business, by giving them protection against the consequences of indolence, negligence, and folly.

In this case, it is clear from the evidence, that no words were used which were intended by the seller, or understood by the purchaser, to be a warranty of the condition or quality of the wool sold. After the seller had cut open some sacks, the purchaser took the knife and cut and examined till he was satisfied. The condition of the wool could have been readily ascertained by ordinary diligence and attention.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This is an action to recover damages for a fraudulent misrepresentation as to the merchantable quality and condition of certain wool sold by the defendants to the plaintiffs. The defendants had judgment below, and the plaintiffs, being denied a new trial there, bring this appeal.

The evidence tended to show that the wool was grown at the ranch of the defendants, in San Joaquin County, where it was sheared, and being put into sacks, was brought by them to Stockton, and placed on board the steamer there, with a view to its shipment to San Francisco. While it was lying on board the steamer at Stockton, the plaintiff Roseman, and the defendant, Canovan, went to examine it, with a view to its purchase by the former. Some of the bales were cut into, and the wool opened upon the surface, and to the depth of two or three inches. It appeared to be merchantable wool, dry, and looking well. Some of the sacks appeared to be stained upon the outside; and the testimony for the plaintiff tends to show that the attention of the plaintiff was awakened by that circumstance to the possibility that the wool might have been exposed to the rain, but that upon inquiry of the defendant, Canovan, upon that matter, the latter declared that the wool had not been rained on, that he knew of, and that it was throughout of as good a quality as the surface examination had indicated. After the price per pound had been agreed upon, it was found upon weighing the sacks that they were exceedingly heavy; and upon the plaintiff calling this fact to the attention of Canovan, and expressing his fears that the wool had got wet, the latter assured him that it had not, and that the large quantity of wool put in each sack was owing to the sacks having been sprinkled with a view to tight packing — which sprinkling, also, as the defendant said, accounted for their being stained on the outside. This is the purport of the evidence adduced by the plaintiff upon the point; and upon looking into the testimony of the defendant, Canovan, we do not perceive any substantial conflict. He states that after Roseman had got through cutting into the sacks in examining the wool, the latter inquired of him if all the wool was of the same quality, and that he replied that it was, so far as he, Canovan, knew. It is true that he states, in a general way, "I made no representations whatever to Roseman as to the quality of the wool;" yet he admits that when his attention was called to the stains on the sacks, he gave as a reason for their appearance that his "packer had sprinkled them to make them hold more." He admits, too, that he knew that some of the wool had got wet, and that he did not tell Roseman that fact when inquired of, but that when asked by the latter about the unusual weight of the sacks, he replied that they were "better packed, and therefore more wool in them, than common." He cannot recollect that Roseman inquired of him if the wool had been wet, but does remember that Roseman remarked the extraordinary weight of the sacks in which it was packed.

In point of fact, undisputed, the shearing of this wool was done in a muddy corral, without shed or covering — a portion of the time in the rain. Part of the wool sheared was so wet and muddy as to have been thrown away entirely. It was nearly all rained upon, more or less, during the shearing. Some of it was piled out with a view to being dried, and, in packing, the fleeces were rolled outside in. Defendant, Canovan, was personally present at the shearing, and cannot have been ignorant of these facts. Instead of having been tightly packed, the wool was found, upon its arrival at San Francisco (to which market the plaintiffs sent it immediately upon their purchasing it), to have been poorly packed. The bales averaged some three hundred and fifty-six pounds in weight, while, had they contained good wool, packed no more closely than this wool was packed, they would not have averaged more than about two hundred and fifty pounds. It was found, on examining the wool at San Francisco, that it was badly damaged, and unmerchantable, and that it was "packed wet, and very muddy and dirty" — "in a heating condition;" and the commission merchant to whom it was consigned there states that its condition in these respects could not have been detected without opening the bales.

The Court charged the jury as follows: "If, from the evidence in this case, you find that plaintiffs had an opportunity to examine for themselves, before purchasing the wool in question, as to its quality and condition, then it was their duty so to examine said wool as to ascertain for themselves the quality and condition of said wool; and plaintiffs cannot recover in this action unless you find from the evidence that defendants concealed from the plaintiffs the condition in some particular which plaintiffs might not have ascertained from an examination of the wool for themselves."

The instruction as thus given to the jury assumed to lay down the rule by which the case of the plaintiffs, as they had attempted to prove it, was to be determined. The instruction must have assumed, of course, that at the time of the sale Canovan knew that the wool was wet and in a damaged condition, and knew, too, that Roseman was ignorant that such was its condition; that though Roseman, upon cutting into the surface of the sacks had failed to detect this fact, he did, nevertheless, discover the water stains upon the sacks themselves, and subsequently upon their being weighed, with a view to the purchase, his attention was drawn to the unusual weight of the sacks; that thereupon his suspicions were aroused that the wool had been exposed to the rain, and that to allay these suspicions and to induce him to complete the purchase Canovan represented to him that, so far as he, Canovan, knew, the wool had not been exposed to the rain; "that it had not got wet; that it was not wet; that the stains came on the sacks from their having been sprinkled in order to get more wool into them; that he was scarce of sacks, and that he had a superior packer, who could put more wool into a sack than any man he ever saw; that to make the sacks hold an extra quantity they had been sprinkled; that by these means more wool was put into such sacks than common, and that the sprinkling of the sacks and the tight packing, resulting in each sack containing more wool than common, constituted the reason for the sacks weighing heavier than they usually did." And the instruction must have assumed, too, that Roseman believed these representations of Canovan, and because he believed them, he laid aside his suspicions, and so was induced to purchase without further examination. The rule which would rather seem applicable to such a case was stated by Lord BROUGHAM in Atwood v. Small, in the House of Lords, as follows: "If two parties enter into a contract, and if one of them, for the purpose of inducing the other to contract with him, shall state that which is not true in point of fact, which he knew at the time he stated it not to be true, and if upon that statement of what is not true and what is known by the party making it to be false, the contract is entered into by the other party, then, generally speaking, and unless there is more than that in the case, there will be at law an action open to the party entering into such contract, an action of damages, grounded upon the deceit," etc. (6 Cl. and Fen. 232.)

The jury were here told in substance that it was the duty of the plaintiffs to thoroughly examine the wool, with a view to discover its condition, and that not having done so they could not recover.

But possibly the plaintiffs would have ascertained its condition except for the active concealment and artifice which their evidence tends to show was practiced by Canovan. Had the latter remained silent, and made no representations as to the condition of the wool; had he not undertaken to account for the weight of the sacks and the water stains upon them, and so to account for them, too, as to put to rest the expressed apprehensions of the purchaser concerning the condition of the wool, it might have been that the transaction would have fallen within the rule of caveat emptor, and so have involved no responsibility upon his part. For unless there be warranty or fraud the purchaser cannot be heard, at least in Courts governed by the rules of the common law, to complain of conditions or defects open to his observation, or which he might have seen had he thought proper to make an examination for that purpose. If under such circumstances he refused to protect himself when, by lending his attention, he might do so, it is of his own choice — qui vult decipi, decipiat. But these rules have no application to a case in which the vendor has resorted to a trick or artifice for the purpose of diverting the purchaser from the line of inquiry otherwise open to him, and which, but for the diversion, he might have followed, and so have protected himself from loss. If the vendor may innocently remain silent as to the quality or condition of his goods, he shall not, at all events, ex industria, mislead the purchaser in that respect. Aliud est celare, aliud tacere. If he is excused from the obligation to point out the defects or blemishes of the property he proposes to sell, he is not thereby at liberty to hinder or obstruct the purchaser in his attempt to find them out for himself.

Mr. BENJAMIN, in his recent most valuable work on sales, thus states the rule: "In general when an article is offered for sale and is open to the inspection of the purchaser, the common law does not permit the latter to complain that the defects, if any, were not pointed out to him. The rules are caveat emptor and simplex commendatio non obligat. * * * But the use of any device by the vendor to induce the buyer to omit inquiry or examination into the defects of the thing sold is as much a fraud as an active concealment by the vendor himself. (Pp. 315-16.)

It will be observed that the instruction as given by the Court wholly withdraws from the jury the question of fraudulent representation upon which the plaintiffs relied for recovery. The jury were told in substance that if the plaintiffs might by examination have ascertained the condition of the wool, then the defendants would not be responsible for concealing its condition. The defendants were only to be responsible for the concealment of something which the plaintiffs could not have found out by their own examination. Inasmuch as there was nothing concerning the quality or condition of the wool which the plaintiffs might not have found out, had Roseman cut deeper into the sacks, or insisted that they should be opened and the fleeces unrolled to his inspection, this instruction was practically an instruction to find a verdict for the defendants. The jury should have been instructed that if they believed that Canovan, knowing that the wool was wet and in a damaged condition, and knowing that the plaintiffs were ignorant that such was its condition, made the representation and statements already alluded to for the fraudulent purpose of allaying the suspicions of Roseman and inducing him to forego a further and more extended examination of the wool; and that, relying upon such representations and statements of Canovan, Roseman was thereby influenced and induced to purchase without making a further examination of the bales, then the defendants would be liable, and that the failure of Roseman to make further examination under such circumstances would constitute no defense to the action.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

[No. 2472.]WILLIAM McKENZIE v. HARVEY DICKINSON.*RIGHT OF ONE PARTNER TO PURCHASE JUDGMENT AGAINST ANOTHER.—

There is no principle of equity which forbids a partner from purchasing, with his own funds, and outside of the partnership business, a judgment or other evidence of indebtedness against his copartner, or prohibits him from enforcing its collection by a levy upon, and sale of, the interest of the other in the firm assets.

OBLIGATIONS OF PARTNERS "INTER SE" CONFINED TO FIRM BUSINESS.

— The obligations of copartners inter se, whatever may be their nature and extent, refer only to the conduct of the business in which the firm is engaged; beyond and outside of such business there is no restraint upon the right of either partner to traffic for his own profit.

OLD PARTNER NOT ENTITLED TO ACCOUNT OF PROFITS SINCE DISSOLUTION.

— Where McKenzie and Dickinson, bag manufacturers, dissolved partnership, leaving certain assets of the firm in McKenzie's hands, and afterwards McKenzie purchased, for much less than its face, a judgment against Dickinson, and had it levied upon Dickinson's interest in the assets, and on the execution sale bought them in on his own account: ~~held~~, that Dickinson was not entitled to an account of the profits made by McKenzie in the transaction, nor could he attack the sale made to McKenzie.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated fully in the opinion.
The defendant appealed.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Appellant.

McKenzie occupied the position of a surviving partner, and was a trustee to settle and liquidate the business of the firm. All the obligations and duties of that position were immediately imposed upon him, from which only a faithful performance of the trust can discharge him. (Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 19; Smith v. Walker, 38 Cal. 385; Crawshay v. Collins, 15 Vesey, 238; Pond v. Ormsbee, 2 Abbott, [N. S.], 376; Goodburn v. Stevens, 5 Gill, 1; Parsons on Part. 441; Ogden v. Astor, 4 Sand. 349; Case v. Abell, 1 Paige, 398; Walker v. House, 4 Md. Ch. 39; Hyde v. Easter, id. 80.)

A trustee cannot speculate in or take advantage of his position; and if he does, and makes a profit, it belongs to his cestui que trust. (2 Story Eq., Secs. 1210, 1260; Fawcett v. Whitehouse, 1 Russ. & My. 132; Giddings v. Eastman, 5 Paige, 501.)

The report and judgment was founded upon the astonishing proposition that when a firm is dissolved, whether its affairs be settled or not, that instant its members become strangers; that all their duties and obligations to the firm and to each other cease; that they are at liberty to pirate upon each other, and to use any means to carry out their nefarious projects; and all this, notwithstanding it has been decided from time immemorial that the only effect of a dissolution, as in this case, is to revoke the agency of the members to bind each other in new transactions, whilst in all other respects, and for all purposes, it is deemed to continue until its affairs are finally settled. (Story on Part. 375; Parsons on Part. 393; Collyer on Part. 324; Willard's Eq. 99; 3 Kent Com. 64; Crawshay v. Collins, 15 Vesey, 226; King v. Smith, 4 Car. & P. 108; Bell v. Morrison, 1 Peters, 351; Murray v. Mumford, 6 Cow. 441; Combes v. Buswell, 1 Dana, 475; Peacock v. Peacock, 16 Vesey, 57.)

Whether one partner can legally buy a judgment against another has no relevancy to the case. We are not seeking relief against the judgment, or claiming any interest in it. We are complaining of a sale of trust property; and it is immaterial whether it was sold under a judgment or by private agreement. The law had drawn around this property its sacred circle, and plaintiff could not enter it hostile to defendant, though armed with all the judgments in Christendom.

If a partner, placed in possession of firm property to settle its business, continues to carry on trade with that property, to the exclusion of the other, the latter is entitled to the same interest in the property and the profits so made as if the firm continued. (Crawshay v. Collins, 15 Vesey, 218; Ex Parte Ruffin, 6 Vesey, 128; Featherstonough v. Fenwick, 17 Vesey, 309; Heartcote v. Holme, id. 128; Sigourney v. Munn, 7 Conn. 20.)

The proposition that the sale and purchase by McKenzie of the firm property, under the Lane judgment, vested that property in him, is untenable. Such sale and purchase by him was nugatory and void. (Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 15; Fox v. Macreath, 1 Leading Cases in Eq. 297; Webster v. King, 33 Cal. 552; Hardenberg v. Bacon, id. 357; Van Epps v. Van Epps, 9 Paige, 237; *Devoue v. Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

uary 18th, 1861, he and the defendant were partners in San Francisco, doing business under the firm name of McKenzie & Co.; that about the last named day the partnership was dissolved, and that before the month of November next following all of the interest of the defendant in the property which had belonged to the partnership was sold by the Sheriff under an execution against the property of Dickinson, issued upon a judgment obtained against him in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District. The plaintiff further alleges that Dickinson at some time unknown to the plaintiff made and delivered in the firm name of McKenzie & Co. a promissory note to one Burns for one thousand six hundred dollars, with interest at two per cent. per month — the note bore the date of January 1st, 1861, and ran for five months from date; that the note was not in fact given for any partnership purpose, but for the personal debt of Dickinson; that the plaintiff did not know of the existence of the note at the time the partnership was dissolved, nor at any time thereafter until demand was made upon him for its payment in December, 1861.

The complaint further alleges that a judgment was subsequently recovered against the firm upon this note, and that plaintiff was compelled to pay and did pay the same, with the accumulated interest, costs of action, etc., amounting to three thousand and ninety dollars.

To this complaint Dickinson filed an answer and cross-complaint, alleging that no dissolution of the partnership firm of McKenzie & Co. had ever taken place; that on January 19th, 1861, an account of partnership affairs was taken by the parties, by which it appeared that the firm then had in money and bills receivable some ten thousand dollars, and that the stock in trade, goods, etc., amounted to some five thousand dollars more; that it was then agreed that the plaintiff should collect the indebtedness due the firm as far as possible, and should retain for himself thereout four thousand five hundred and seventy-seven dollars, and also one half of the amount, if any, collected above that sum, and should retain in his custody, but in trust for the defendant, the other half of the surplus collections; that the plaintiff was to hold the defendant's moiety of moneys collected as trustee, partner, and agent for the defendant, who at the time purposed to be shortly absent from the State, and who did immediately thereafter depart the State and did not return for some four months; that the stock in trade and goods on hand were also left with the plaintiff as a copartner, and to be used by the firm of McKenzie & Co. in the prosecution of its accustomed business. It was further averred by the defendant that shortly after his departure the plaintiff purchased a judgment for some two thousand two hundred dollars, which one Lane had recovered against the defendant in the year 1857, and which was in full force and effect against the property of the defendant; that the purchase was made for five hundred dollars, and the assignment of the judgment procured in the name of one Gordon, as assignee thereof, with the intent to conceal the fact that McKenzie was the real holder thereof; that McKenzie obtained his knowledge of the existence of said judgment only by means of the copartnership and fiduciary relations between himself and the defendant, and that when he purchased it he had in his hands sufficient copartnership property to have discharged and satisfied it in full; that in March, 1861, during the defendant's absence from the State, plaintiff caused an execution to be issued upon the Lane judgment, and caused himself to be served by the Sheriff with notice that all moneys, etc., in his hands and belonging to the defendant had been levied upon; that a Sheriff's sale was had under this judgment of all the interest of defendant in the firm, business, and property of McKenzie & Co., at which sale the plaintiff bid in his own name, and was the purchaser at two hundred dollars, the bid being credited by the Sheriff upon the judgment; that on the return of the defendant to this State in May, 1861, plaintiff met him at the steamer and informed him that Lane had issued process upon the two thousand two hundred dollars judgment, garnished the plaintiff and sold out all of defendant's interest in the firm of McKenzie & Co., and that these proceedings had dissolved the firm. The answer further alleges that after this period the plaintiff still carried on profitably the business of the firm of McKenzie & Co., and with the moneys left with him by the defendant, upon his departure early in 1861, and with the property of defendant, which the plaintiff had purchased at the sale under the Lane judgment; that the profits made by the firm amount to some thirty thousand dollars; that certain real estate in the City of San Francisco had during this time been purchased by McKenzie with the partnership funds, and the title deeds taken in the name of McKenzie alone; and that, on the 1st day of January, 1863, McKenzie had retired from business and sold out the firm's stock in trade, goods on hand, etc., to one Bardwell, for three thousand dollars.

To the cross-complaint an answer was filed by McKenzie traversing many of its allegations, and setting up, among other defenses, that, at the time of the purchase of the Lane judgment, the plaintiff had not in his hands any money or property belonging to the firm of McKenzie & Co., or to the defendant. The plaintiff also pleads the Statute of Limitations in bar of the matters averred in the cross-complaint of the defendant, and avers that the several matters and things in the said cross-complaint set forth were discovered by and known to the defendant more than three years before the filing of the said cross-complaint.

By consent, the cause was subsequently referred to Hon. SAMUEL COWLES to hear the proof and report a judgment, who afterwards filed the following findings of fact and conclusions of law:

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

“First— That the plaintiff and the defendant became co-partners in the business of manufacturing bags early in the year 1857.

“Second — That said copartnership continued to the 19th day of January, 1861, at which time there was a settlement and accounting between the partners, and, by mutual consent, a dissolution of said copartnership.

“Third — That at the time of said dissolution said defendant received from the firm the sum of eight thousand four hundred and eighty-two dollars, and that plaintiff sold to him his interest in city slip lot number twenty, upon which the firm had their shop, and that said defendant agreed to sell to said plaintiff said lot, on or before June 1st, 1861, at the price of two thousand six hundred dollars.

“Fourth — That upon said settlement there was found due to the plaintiff, from said firm, the sum of four thousand five hundred and seventy-seven dollars.

“Fifth— That by the terms of said settlement the assets of said copartnership were left with the plaintiff to be converted into cash; and from the proceeds he was to pay himself said sum of four thousand five hundred and seventy-seven dollars.

“Sixth — That the defendant made mistakes in his own favor, in footing up the cash account, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of one thousand nine hundred and thirty-three dollars and twenty-five cents, which mistakes were not shown, and not embraced in the settlement of January 19th, 1861.

“Seventh — That plaintiff paid, on the order of defendant, to M. N. Cowan, the sum of two hundred dollars, and to the defendant himself the sum of one hundred dollars, after the settlement and dissolution.

“Eighth — That the total amount collected by the plaintiff from the notes and accounts left in his hands, upon the settlement and dissolution, was six thousand five hundred and ninety dollars and seventeen cents, and that defendant has received two hundred and twenty dollars and eight cents in excess of the collections made by plaintiff since the dissolution.

“Ninth—That on the 11th day of March, 1861, the plaintiff purchased a judgment from one N. C. Lane against defendant, bearing date June 8d, 1857, for the sum of two thousand two hundred and seventy-eight dollars and fifty-three cents, and drawing interest at the rate of five per cent per month, paying therefor the sum of five hundred dollars, and that said plaintiff caused said judgment to be assigned to Joseph Gordon, who held the same in trust for plaintiff.

“Tenth—That at the time of the purchase of said judgment the said plaintiff had no money in his hands belonging either to the said defendant or to the late firm of McKenzie & Co., and that said judgment was purchased by said plaintiff with his own money.

“Eleventh—That all of the interest of the defendant in the assets of the late firm of McKenzie & Co. was sold under an execution issued on the same judgment, on the 11th day of June, 1861, and that said interest was bought in for the benefit of the plaintiff, the amount bid therefor having been credited on the said judgment.

“Twelfth—That on or about the 1st day of January, 1861, the defendant made a note in the name of McKenzie & Co. for one thousand six hundred dollars, with interest at the rate of two per cent per month, payable five months after date, to the order of one Julian W. Burns.

“Thirteenth—That said note was given for the individual liability of the said defendant, and not for a liability of the firm of McKenzie & Co., and that the money obtained from said Burns never went into the business of McKenzie & Co., but was obtained and used for the benefit of the defendant.

“Fourteenth—That on the 9th day of March, 1864, said Burns obtained a judgment against the plaintiff and defendant for the sum of two thousand six hundred and sixty-six dollars, with interest at two per cent per month, and that the plaintiff, on the 24th day of August, 1864, was compelled to and did pay said judgment, the principal and interest due on said judgment at the time of the payment thereof amounting to the sum of ($3,090) three thousand and ninety dollars.

"And as a conclusion of law from the facts found, I find that the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant the sum of three thousand and ninety dollars, with legal interest thereon from the 24th day of August, 1864, together with the costs of this action."

The defendant having excepted to the findings of fact in this case, and upon due notice having moved that findings be framed upon certain other issues in this case, and the counsel of the respective parties having been heard, after due consideration the undersigned, referee, finds the following additional facts, which are hereby made a part of the original findings so far as regards the conclusions of law arrived at in the case:

"Fifteenth — At the time of the dissolution of the partnership — January 19th, 1861 — the parties had a settlement of their partnership affairs; the defendant claimed that there was due to him from the firm the sum of one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, for money advanced by him in the purchase of city slip lot No. 20, owned by the firm; also the sum of three thousand and thirty-two dollars and thirty-five cents, being the cost of certain drills purchased by him on individual account, but which were afterwards used in the business of the firm; also the sum of four thousand two hundred dollars, for moneys advanced by him from time to time in the business of the firm; these sums, amounting to the sum of eight thousand four hundred and eighty-two dollars and thirty-five cents, were allowed by the plaintiff, and the defendant was permitted to draw the amount from the funds belonging to the partnership; at the same time the defendant purchased from the plaintiff his interest in the firm lot for the sum of one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, agreeing in writing to resell the whole lot to plaintiff at any time before the first day of June, 1861, for the sum of two thousand six hundred dollars; the sum of three thousand three hundred and twenty-seven dollars was then agreed upon as the amount which the partnership owed to the plaintiff; the assets of the firm were to be left with the plaintiff, who was authorized to retain the last named sum from them, and the balance was to be divided between them, and a memorandum in writing to this effect was given by the plaintiff to the defendant, but this memorandum on the following day was destroyed, and another similar in terms was substituted, except the amount was changed from three thousand three hundred and twenty-seven dollars to four thousand five hundred and seventy-seven dollars, to correct a mistake of one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars made at the time of the settlement in allowing the claim preferred by the defendant against the partnership for the last named sum, when the plaintiff had relinquished to the defendant his interest in the partnership lot; no inventory of the assets or property belonging to the firm was made at the time of the dissolution, nor were they appraised, nor was any valuation placed upon them.

“Sixteenth — The plaintiff collected all the solvent notes and accounts left in his hands belonging to the partnership, which collections amounted to the sum of six thousand two hundred and ninety dollars, and exchanged the engine and boiler for another; the interest of the defendant in the shop, sewing machines, stock, and fixtures was sold under the Lane judgment for the sum of two hundred and twenty-one dollars and twenty-five cents, and bid in and for the benefit of plaintiff.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

“Seventeenth — Defendant went to New York immediately after the dissolution, and on his own private business, and returned to San Francisco early in May, 1861.

“Eighteenth — The defendant, while in the Eastern States, brought drills and sheetings to the amount of about eighteen thousand dollars; and also a quantity of coal oil, in the name of McKenzie & Co., but for his own account and use.

“Nineteenth — The plaintiff and defendant did not correspond with each other, but the defendant, while in New York, wrote one letter to plaintiff, in which he stated that he had bought certain bagging material, and thought of dipping into coal oil; also, that there was bagging material on two ships then on their way to San Francisco.

“Twentieth — The plaintiff did not acquire his knowledge of the Lane judgment by reason of any copartnership or fiduciary relation then or ever existed between himself and defendant.

“Twenty-first — At the time of the purchase of the Lane judgment the plaintiff had in his hands the property received by him at the time of the settlement and dissolution, except some of the notes and accounts which had been collected, and the engine and boiler, which had been exchanged for others.

“Twenty-second — The defendant had knowledge of all the facts alleged in his cross-complaint more than three years before the commencement of this action.

“Twenty-third — The defendant, on his return from New York, asked and obtained from plaintiff leave to examine the books in possession of the plaintiff, to ascertain the amount of money received from the assets of the firm of McKenzie & Co., and said books truly showed said amount, and the defendant never asked for, until the trial of this cause, any other or further accounting of the affairs of McKenzie & Co., or the matters of difference between himself and plaintiff.”

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, J.

Judgment being thereupon rendered for the plaintiff, Dickinson moved for a new trial, which being denied, he brings this appeal from the judgment and order.

The referee having found that the copartnership was dissolved by mutual consent on the 19th day of January, 1861, and the evidence being sufficient to sustain the finding in that respect, we will not disturb it here. From that point of time, therefore, the parties must be regarded as no longer sustaining toward each other the relation of copartners, and upon this view, the cross-complaint filed by the defendant upon the return of the cause from this Court on the former appeal must fail, in so far as it seeks a dissolution of the copartnership and an account of its transactions.

It further appears by the findings (and, upon looking into the evidence, I think that none of them can now be disturbed), that at the time (March 11th, 1861) at which McKenzie purchased the Lane judgment he had no funds in hand belonging to the defendant, or to the late firm.

The cross-complaint of Dickinson, indeed, does not allege that he had such funds at that time, but only that he had "all the property hereinbefore mentioned," i. e., notes, outstanding debts, stock in trade, and goods on hand. That he had no money, either belonging to Dickinson, individually, or to the late firm of McKenzie & Co., is rather probable, from the fact that Dickinson, when leaving for New York, had taken all the money of the late firm, leaving the plaintiff to make such collections as he might, and to pay himself thereout the sum of four thousand five hundred and seventy-seven dollars.

The referee finds that the total amount of these collections by the plaintiff was six thousand five hundred and ninety dollars and seventeen cents, and that while this would have entitled Dickinson to receive of McKenzie a little more than one thousand dollars, according to the terms of the memorandum of January 19th, the latter, in fact, had already at that time received some two hundred dollars in excess of that sum; but by reason of the mistakes which Dickinson had made in his own favor, in footing up the cash account of the firm, this did not appear when the settlement of January 19th was made between McKenzie and himself.

The partnership having been dissolved on the 19th of January, 1861, Dickinson withdrawing for himself all the cash on hand — some eight thousand dollars — and leaving the late firm in arrears to McKenzie to an admitted amount of nearly five thousand dollars (but to an actual amount, it seems, of upwards of six thousand dollars), with authority to the latter to reimburse himself by the collection of debts due the late firm, and by the sale of its property in his hands, McKenzie purchased the judgment which Lane held against Dickinson, took the assignment in the name of one Gordon, levied an execution thereunder upon the interest of Dickinson in the assets of the late firm, and at the execution sale purchased them for himself, etc.

I know of no principle of equity which forbids one partner from purchasing with his own funds a judgment or other evidence of indebtedness, even against one who may be at the time his own copartner in business, or prohibiting him from enforcing the collection by a levy upon and sale of the interest of the other in the firm assets. The obligations of copartners inter sese, whatever may be their nature and extent, refer only to the conduct of the business in which the firm is engaged. The copartnership of McKenzie & Co. was engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling bags, and buying and selling bagging material in San Francisco. It was not engaged in purchasing judgments or other securities, and whatever transactions either partner might effect in that respect, by the use of his private means, would be for his own benefit, and not for the benefit of the copartnership.

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, J.

This principle is well illustrated by the late case of Wheeler v. Sage, 1 Wallace, S. O. U. S. 518, in which it is held that such fiduciary relation as may be said to subsist between copartners, as such, is confined to and limited by the business of the copartnership, and that beyond and outside that limit there is no restraint upon the right of either partner to traffic. In that case the copartnership was engaged in a "general produce business," and in the course of that business became the mortgagee of valuable real estate, the title to which it was desirous of acquiring. One of the partners was intrusted with making that acquisition in behalf of the partnership. It turned out, ultimately, that he acquired it for himself, in connection with a third person, not a member of the copartnership, the amount of the mortgage debt, however, being paid to the firm. The property thus acquired having largely appreciated in value, and a bill having been brought by a member of the copartnership to obtain a share of the profits, the Court said:

"Each partner is the agent of his copartners in all transactions relating to the partnership business, and is forbidden to traffic therein for his own advantage, and, if he does, will be held accountable for all profits. But beyond the line of the trade or business in which the firm is engaged there is no restraint on his right to traffic. As one partner has no authority to bind the firm outside of their ordinary business, he cannot, of course, be held liable to account should he make a profitable adventure in a matter not legitimately connected with the business of the firm. The difficulty generally is to ascertain what acts are in the scope of the particular trade or business. But in this case there is no embarrassment whatever in the application of the principle. This was a partnership to do a general produce business. It contemplated no dealings in real estate, and each partner was at liberty to buy and sell real estate, and was under no legal liability to account to his copartners. The debt due from Sweet (the mortgagor) belonged to the partnership, and not the premises mortgaged. To the extent of their debt the partners had an interest in the mortgaged property, and no further. They were interested to have the debt paid — not to procure title to the mortgaged property. It can readily be seen that it would be profitable to get a real estate worth fifty thousand dollars for thirty-four thousand dollars; but how an engagement to do a general produce business could embrace that speculation is not so apparent."

Dickinson, not having been a member of the firm of McKenzie & Co. since January 19th, 1861, is not entitled to an account for profits made since then; and there is no principle of equity upon which he can attack the sale to McKenzie, made under the Lane judgment.

The judgment and order appealed from must be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

Mr. Chief Justice SPRAGUE did not participate in the foregoing decision.

[Two other cases, arising out of the same general transactions, and involving, to a greater or less extent, the same principles, were considered in connection with the foregoing action, and decided upon its authority. They were the cases of Harvey Dickinson v. William McKenzie et als. (No. 2,479), and Harvey Dickinson v. Joseph Gordon et als. (No. 2,573). In the former the judgment below in favor of defendants was affirmed. In the latter, after a judgment for defendants, the Court below granted a new trial in favor of plaintiff; and on appeal by defendants the order was reversed.—REPORTER.]

VICTOR M. FOUCAULT v. JOHN PINET.

CORRECTION OF ERROR APPARENT ON RECORD — Where a judgment is based upon a Court Commissioner's report, which finds all the facts, but discloses upon its face a palpable error in stating an account, such judgment will be corrected on appeal.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action for an accounting as between partners after dissolution. It appears that in 1866 the parties went into the coal business in San Francisco, on a capital of five thousand dollars. In 1868 they dissolved, and defendant received all the moneys that were collected.

The cause was referred to the Court Commissioner, who reported, among other things, that the parties were to share alike; that the profits and assets, excluding uncollected debts, amount to two thousand seven hundred and twenty dollars and forty-two cents, and that plaintiff had received out of the concern two hundred and nine dollars and twelve cents more than defendant. In stating the account the Commissioner did it substantially as follows:

Profits and remaining assets.....	$2,720.42
One half of excess received by plaintiff	104.56
	<hr/> $2,615.86
Half thereof	<hr/> $1,307.93

Upon the account as thus stated the Commissioner found that plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the defendant for one thousand three hundred and seven dollars and ninety-three cents; and upon his report judgment was afterwards entered in favor of plaintiff.

Opinion of the Court — NILES, J.

The defendant appealed.

N. Hubert, for Appellant.

Montgomery & Kittrell, for Respondent.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

There is an error apparent upon the face of the report of the Commissioner. The plaintiff should have had judgment for one thousand two hundred and fifty-five dollars and sixty-five cents, with interest from its date at seven per cent per annum and costs.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the Court below to modify its judgment in accordance with this opinion. Remittitur forthwith.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
LAURA D. FAIR.

CRIMINAL LAW — DISQUALIFICATION OF JUROR NOT GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL. — The fact that a juror had formed and expressed an unqualified opinion of the guilt of the accused, is not, under our practice, ground for a new trial, when the objection is taken for the first time after the trial, upon affidavits showing disqualification.

CRIMINAL PRACTICE ACT, SECTION FOUR HUNDRED AND FORTY — GROUNDS FOR NEW TRIAL. — Section four hundred and forty of the Criminal Practice Act, which declares what shall be grounds for new trial, and uses the words "in the following cases only," clearly excludes all other grounds whatsoever.

counsel took the ground that her prospects had been ruined by the acts of the deceased, and introduced testimony tending to show, and for the purpose of showing, that fact; and, in view of such position taken by counsel and the testimony offered by him, the prosecution was allowed in rebuttal to prove, against defendant's objection, that her general character for chastity was bad: Held, error.

MURDER TRIALS — GENERAL CHARACTER OF ACCUSED NOT INVOLVED.

On a trial for murder, proof of the general character of the accused is not received, even on his own behalf — the inquiry in such cases being confined, when pertinent at all, to the general character as to the trait involved in the offense charged.

TRIAL OF WOMAN FOR MURDER — WHEN HER GENERAL CHARACTER FOR

CHASTITY MAY BE ATTACKED. — The general character for chastity of a female charged with the murder of a man is no more necessarily involved in the question of her guilt or innocence than her general character in any other respect; and on the trial of such a person the prosecution will not be allowed to introduce testimony upon the point, unless the defendant initiate the inquiry.

PRESUMPTION OF GOOD CHARACTER — PROOF OF GENERAL BAD CHARACTER

FOR CHASTITY. — The fact that the defense made by a woman charged with the murder of a man is rendered more formidable, when considered in connection with the good character which the law presumes her to possess, does not of itself open the door for the prosecution to prove that her general character for chastity is bad.

ACCUSED PERSONS ENTITLED TO PRESUMPTION OF CHARACTER OF ORDINARY

FAIRNESS. — The presumption of a character of ordinary fairness, with which the law for the purposes of trial clothes a person accused of crime, is one to which he is entitled and which cannot be put in peril, unless he, by introducing testimony in reference thereto, elects to put it distinctly in issue.

ARGUMENTS IN MURDER TRIALS — DISCRETION OF COURT AS TO WHO TO OPEN.— Under section three hundred and sixty-three of the Criminal Practice Act, as amended in 1854 (Stats. 1854, p. 169), the Court in a capital case may, in its discretion, direct by which side the argument to the jury is to be opened; but by whichever side it is thus opened, the other side, under section three hundred and sixty-four, will have the close.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The defendant was indicted by the Grand Jury of the City and County of San Francisco for the murder of Alexander P. Crittenden, on the evening of November 3d, 1870. The facts of the homicide are briefly, that Crittenden, on the afternoon of that day, left his residence, in San Francisco, and went to Oakland for the purpose of meeting his wife, son, and daughter, who were on their way from the Eastern States. He met them at the wharf, went with them on the steam ferryboat "El Capitan," and sat down, between his wife and daughter, on the deck. In a few minutes after the steamer left the Oakland wharf, on her way to San Francisco, Laura D. Fair, the defendant, closely veiled, stepped in front of Crittenden, drew a pistol, and exclaiming, "You have ruined me and my child," fired at him. The ball took effect in his left breast, inflicting a mortal wound, of which he died on November 6th following. Mrs. Fair, after the fatal shot, ran into the cabin of the steamer, and mingled among the rest of the passengers, but was soon afterwards arrested; and being accused of the murder, she replied: "Yes, I don't deny it; I admit that I shot him; I don't deny it. He has ruined me and my child. I was looking for the clerk to give myself up. Take me; arrest me; I am ready to go with you."

The indictment having been transferred to the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, and the accused having been arraigned, and pleaded "not guilty," the trial commenced on March 27th, 1871. It continued until April 26th, 1871, upon which day, after a short retirement, the jury returned a verdict of "Guilty of murder in the first degree." The defendant subsequently moved for a new trial, upon numerous points and exceptions, among which were the points of objection discussed in the opinion of this Court. The motion for new trial being denied, and defendant sentenced to be hanged, she took this appeal from the judgment and order.

Argument for Appellant.

E. Cook and L. Quint, for Appellant.

I. The Court below should have granted a new trial, on the ground that the juror Beach was incompetent, on account of having formed and expressed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt of the defendant. (People v. Plummer, 9 Cal. 372; State v. Hopkins, 1 Bay. R. 372; Sellers v. The People, 8 Scammon, 412; U. S. v. Freis, 3 Dallas, 515; Busick v. The State, 19 Ohio, 198; Wade v. The State, 12 Geo. 25; Cady v. The State, 3 Howard, 27; McKenley v. Smith, Strange, 645; Bishop v. The State, 9 Geo. 121; 2 Graham and Waterman on New Trials, 374, et seq.; Wellman v. Hulbert, 2 Clief, 45; McKinley v. Smith, Harding's R. 167; Monroe v. State, 5 Geo. 139.) It is contended, it is true, that we cannot reach the incompetency of Beach as a juror on motion for new trial; that no matter what his prejudices may have been—no matter if by perjury of the most deep and damning character he had stolen into the jury box, and thus imposed upon the defendant, yet she is remediless. She must abide the consequences, and forfeit her life, and why? Because the statute does not, in express terms, point out this particular ground as one to be used upon motion for a new trial. No single case, however, has been cited in support of this proposition, while we have cited above, a number directly to the contrary.

II. The general reputation or character of the defendant for chastity, or want of chastity, was clearly inadmissible.

Argument for Appellant.

She was not on trial for her chastity, virtue, or moral character. Her character was not in any aspect of the case in issue. She was being tried for her life. She, and she alone, could have put her character in issue. (Wharton's Am. Crim. Law, Secs. 636, 637, 638, 824; State v. O'Neil, 7 Iredell, 251; Dewitt v. Grunfield, 5 Ohio, 227; Com. v. Hopkins, 2 Dana, 418; Fausier v. State, 14 Miss. 386; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 325; Carter v. Com., 2 Virg. Oa. 169; Griffin v. State, 14 Ohio, 55; State v. Creson, 38 Missouri, 372; People v. White, 14 Wend. 111; Ackley v. The People, 9 Barb. 609; People v. Bodine, 1 Dana, 282; Roscoe's Crim. Ev. 94.) Omission to produce evidence of good character was no presumption that her character was bad. (Wharton's Amer. Crim. Law, Secs. 641, 668; People v. McCauley, 10 Cal. 309; People v. White, 24 Wend. 520; People v. White, 14 Wend. 111; Williams v. State, 19 Geo. 402; State v. Howson, 26 Miss. [5 Jones] 431; Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. 342; Arch. C. P. 105; R. v. Rejier, 1 B. & C. 431; Com. v. Hopkins, 2 Dana, 418; Overstein v. State, 3 How. Miss. 328.) It is urged, however, that the defendant opened the door to this testimony as to her general character. All that we did was to introduce testimony as to when and where the parties met; that there was a mutual engagement to marry; that this engagement was made months before defendant knew that Crittenden had a wife living; that after she ascertained he was a married man, then, under a promise on his part to procure a divorce and marry her, their intimacy continued up to the very day of his death. This, in brief, is all the testimony introduced on her part, under which, it is claimed the prosecution had the right to assail her character for chastity, for the purpose of rebutting any presumption that might arise from this proof that her mind became disordered. But that this claim cannot be maintained is shown by the authorities cited.

III. The Court below should have directed the counsel in the case to argue to the jury alternately, or at least have allowed the defendant's counsel the closing argument. (Criminal Practice Act, Secs. 362, 363, 364.) The Court below was of opinion that the Legislature intended by the amendments of 1854 to sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three, to give the prosecution the concluding argument, meaning of course that the amendments effected a repeal by implication of section three hundred and sixty-four; but where, let us ask, is the evidence of any such intention? We submit that none such exists; but that, on the contrary, the plain and irresistible inference to be drawn from the action of the Legislature is that that body never intended to alter the rule prescribed in section three hundred and sixty-four in any case "where the punishment is death." That the Legislature intended to change the general rule of argument in ordinary cases of felony is perfectly manifest; but that it intended nothing more is equally apparent.

Alex. Campbell, for Respondent.

I. There was no error in refusing a new trial on the ground of the incompetency of the juror Beach. The Court had no power to grant a new trial for such a reason, because it is not one of the grounds upon which "only" a new trial can be granted. (Criminal Practice Act, Sec. 440.) I am aware that People v. Plummer, 9 Cal 372, holds a contrary doctrine; but I submit that in that case the Court committed a palpable error. It seems to have based its action on the idea that the defendant had a constitutional right to a trial by an impartial jury, but seems not to have considered the question whether the Legislature has the power to determine when and how the impartiality of the juror shall be ascertained. Provision is made for the challenges to jurors, and it seems obvious that a challenge cannot be interposed after the completion of the jury. If, however, the Court below had the power on motion for new trial to investigate the question, its decision on the conflicting evidence would not be disturbed here. The affidavits filed by defendant on the point of the juror's expression of opinion are vague and uncertain, and are fully contradicted by the juror himself, by proof of his good character, and by proof that, so far from being anxious to get on the jury, he endeavored to be relieved from service as a juror at that term of Court.

II. Was the prosecution entitled, by way of rebutting evidence, to go into the question of the reputation of the accused for chastity prior to and during her acquaintance with Crittenden, independent of her relations with him? The question is novel, for it arose in a novel case. The defense set up by the appellant has no precedent or parallel. That it should call for a new application of established principles is not surprising. The cases cited by the defense have no relation to the question here, but are in perfect harmony with the doctrine for which we contend. It is claimed on her part that she had not put her character for chastity in issue. I answer that she had. In her testimony she represented herself as a respectable widow, deceived into a marriage engagement with a man supposed by her to be single or a widower, and that lured on by his representations as to his condition into that belief, she consented to become his wife. The prosecution had a right to show, as well by circumstances as by positive evidence, that these allegations were entirely false. Crittenden was in his grave and could not directly contradict her. But we had a right to show in answer to these pretenses: First — That she was not a single woman at the time of the alleged engagement. Second — That at the time she alleges that he was living in her house under this professed engagement, he was residing with his own wife within about a block of her house, and that his nights were spent at home in the society of his wife and family. Third — That at the same time she was a woman of notoriously bad reputation, whom no man pretending to any self-respect could undertake to marry.

III. In the earlier legislation of this State the defendant in criminal cases was allowed to have the closing argument to the jury. It was found that this practice led to great evils; therefore, in 1854, the Legislature changed the rule, and provided, by an amendment to the Criminal Practice Act, that "the counsel for the people must open and may conclude the argument"—thus entirely reversing the previous order of discussion; and at the same time section three hundred and sixty-three was amended. Section three hundred and sixty-four was evidently intended to be repealed, so far as it provides for the alternate argument, for it is inconsistent with the two preceding sections. Such has been the established and unquestioned construction of the law, as amended, for the last seventeen years, in every District Court of the State, and this Court will not now undertake to disturb it. "The District Attorney must open and may conclude the argument." How is this possible if counsel are to argue the cause alternately? Besides, if as provided in section three hundred and sixty-three, the Court has a discretion in the matter, how can this Court in this case interfere with the exercise of that discretion? At the commencement of the argument the defendant's counsel did not claim to open the discussion. They acquiesced then in the uniform construction of the law, ever since its enactment, and it was too late for them to question it afterwards.

Jo Hamilton, Attorney-General, and D. J. Murphy, also for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The appellant was found guilty in the Court below of the crime of murder in the first degree, in the felonious killing of A. F. Crittenden; and was, thereupon, adjudged to suffer death. A motion for a new trial having been denied, this appeal is taken from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial.

First—In impaneling the trial jury, Henry M. Beach, being examined as to his qualification to serve as a juror, stated, in substance, that he had read in the newspapers an account of the homicide; that he had not conversed with any one about it; had heard but little said upon the subject; that he had neither formed nor expressed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner; that his mind was entirely unimpressed upon that point, and that he could give the prisoner a fair trial, etc.; and he was thereupon accepted and sworn as a juror.

A verdict of guilty having been rendered by the jury, the prisoner moved for a new trial on many grounds—among the rest, that Beach was not a competent juror—he having in fact, as the prisoner alleged, both formed and expressed an unqualified opinion, before he was called as a juror, that she was guilty of murder in killing Crittenden, and that she ought to be executed. Numerous affidavits were produced and read at the hearing of the motion, which tended to show that Beach had, in point of fact, shortly after the killing, openly declared that he considered it a willful murder, and that if he should be upon the jury he would consider that the offense of the prisoner was murder in the first degree, and would hang her. Counter affidavits were also produced and read, going to show that the statements contained in the affidavits, upon behalf of the prisoner, were incorrect and untrue.

The alleged disqualification of Beach to serve as a juror is relied upon here; and it is claimed that in view of the affidavits in the record the Court below should have set aside the verdict on that ground.

Opinion of the Court.—Wallace, J.

We think, however, that in this respect the motion was properly overruled. The right of the prisoner to move for a new trial in a criminal case is given by section four hundred and forty of the Criminal Practice Act, and the grounds upon which such a motion is to be made are therein prescribed and enumerated. The statute declares that such a motion, when made, must be based upon one or more of the grounds in that section mentioned—“in the following cases only” is the expression—and it clearly excludes all other grounds whatsoever.

Could the question of practice involved be quite regarded as res integra here, this mere reference to the terms of exclusion employed in the statute would be sufficient to dispose of the point; but in The People v. Plummer, 9 Cal. 298, it was held by this Court that under this statute an objection to the competency of a juror might be made by the prisoner for the first time after verdict rendered, and might be relied upon as a ground of motion for a new trial.

We have carefully examined the elaborate and able opinion rendered in that case, and we find in it nothing whatever as to the construction or interpretation of section four hundred and forty in the particular already referred to. It is undoubtedly true, as there remarked by the Court, that every citizen has the right “to demand that all offenses charged against him shall be submitted to a tribunal composed of honest and unprejudiced men, who will do equal and exact justice between the Government and the accused, and, in order to do this, weigh impartially every fact disclosed by the evidence.” The right of trial by jury is unquestionably a sacred right, and one secured by the guarantees of the Constitution; and this is much, if not all, of what is said in the opinion delivered here in the case of Plummer. But when this proposition of constitutional law is conceded, we have advanced but a little way toward the point of practice involved here and in the Plummer case as well. The jurors should undoubtedly be indifferent, omni majores exceptiones. But they may not, in fact, be so; and if not, the question is, at what time in the progress of the case, and through what method of procedure, may the prisoner be heard to allege that fact. Undoubtedly, if the fact be known to him, and he make it appear before the juror is sworn, he may interpose a challenge for cause. But if the prisoner do not know the fact of disqualification, or knowing it, is still unable to establish it before the juror is sworn, what step may he subsequently take to avail himself of the objection? May he make it a ground of a motion in arrest of judgment, under section four hundred and forty-two? Certainly not — no one pretends that he could — because the statute itself has undertaken to enumerate the grounds upon which the judgment may be arrested, and the incompetency of a juror not being one of these, the intention to exclude that and all other non-enumerated grounds must be apparent. But in reference to a motion for a new trial, the statute has not only enumerated the grounds upon which it may be made, but has expressly excluded all others. A single decision of this Court, in which the provisions of the statute upon the subject, though cited in argument, appear to have been wholly overlooked, cannot prevail against the words of the statute unmistakably expressing the legislative intent. The case of The People v. Phummer, in so far as it holds that an objection to the competency of a juror, taken for the first time after verdict rendered, may be availed of on motion for new trial, is therefore overruled.

Second — The evidence of the defense having been concluded, the prosecution were permitted, against the objection of the prisoner, to prove that her general character for chastity was bad.

The nature of the charge against the prisoner certainly did not per se involve an inquiry into her character for chastity. A good reputation for that virtue, had it been hers, and had she even offered to show, as part of her defense, that she possessed that reputation, must have been excluded upon objections of the prosecution, inasmuch as it involves a trait of character not in the slightest degree involved in the alleged commission of the crime with which she stood charged. It is inexact to say that proof of the general character of the prisoner is received, even on his own behalf, in Courts of common law, in trials for felonious homicide. The inquiry in such cases is confined to the general character as to the trait involved in the offense charged. The chastity, or general character for chastity, of a female charged with the commission of such an offense, is no more necessarily involved thereby than is her general character for honesty of dealing in pecuniary transactions. The rules of evidence in criminal cases limit the inquiry to the characteristic impugned in the alleged commission of the offense under investigation.

Mr. PHILLIPS, in his work on evidence, expresses the true rule upon this subject, and which will be found to accord with the current of judicial decisions, and the opinions of the text writers upon the law. He says: "On a charge of stealing it would be irrelevant and absurd to inquire into the prisoner's loyalty or humanity; on a charge of high treason, it would be equally absurd to inquire into his honesty and punctuality in private dealings. Such evidence relates to principles of moral conduct, which, however they might operate on other occasions, would not be likely to operate on that which is alone the subject of inquiry. It would not afford the least presumption that the prisoner might not have been tempted to commit the crime for which he is tried, and is, therefore, totally inapplicable to the point in question." (Page 490.) It is apparent that if such an inquiry must, upon objection by the prosecution, have been excluded for mere irrelevancy, had the prisoner sought to introduce it in her own behalf, the same rule should have rejected it when tendered by the prosecution itself.

Supposing, however, that an investigation upon that point, or upon any other given point of the general character of the prisoner, had been pertinent in itself, it is, nevertheless, settled by an overwhelming current of judicial decisions that it is not competent to the prosecution to initiate the inquiry, and that it is only after the prisoner has elected to put his character in issue, by calling witnesses and adducing evidence in its distinctive support, that the prosecution is permitted to follow and disprove the evidence so offered, if it can. Nor is the prisoner to be held to have thus led the way, and opened up her character to the attack of the prosecution, merely because the case made or attempted in the defense is rendered more formidable when considered in connection with the good character—good in the sense of not being bad—which the law assumes the prisoner to possess in cases in which no evidence upon the subject of general character is offered. The presumption of a character of ordinary fairness, with which the law clothed her for the purposes of the case, was one to the benefit of which she was entitled, and which could not be put in peril unless, discarding the presumption thus afforded her, she had elected to put it distinctly in issue, and so constitute it a fact to be determined by the jury as other facts in issue were to be determined.

“Whenever the defendant chooses to call witnesses to prove his general character to be good, the prosecution may offer witnesses to disprove their testimony. But it is not competent for the prosecution to go into the inquiry until the defendant has voluntarily put his character in issue.” (Comm. v. Hardy, 2 Mass. 317.)

“A prisoner on trial may show what his reputation is, and then the question is open to the prosecution, and for the jury to determine like other controverted facts." (People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 314.)

We have remarked already that the defense called no witness to establish the general character of the prisoner, and when she objected to the attack of the prosecution in that respect, the learned Court below said: "It is very certain that in the opening of the case the counsel for the defendant took the ground that the prisoner's prospects had been ruined by the acts of Mr. Crittenden. The evidence, as I had supposed, has been given tending to show that fact, and given for that purpose. It is true the books say that no evidence of that character can be given by the prosecution unless some evidence has been given on the other side by the defense. In other words, there must be something to rebut or counteract. But I think the tendency of the evidence introduced by the defense was to show that her prospects had been injured, even taking the testimony of the defendant herself. That being the case, the testimony is admissible."

We are of opinion, however, that the mere fact that the evidence, as introduced upon the part of the prisoner, tended to show that her prospects had been injured by reason of her relations with the deceased, was not of itself enough to authorize the prosecution to begin a direct assault upon her character. No adjudicated case nor treatise upon the law brought to our attention maintains that it was, and such a doctrine would operate a grave innovation upon a recognized rule governing the introduction of evidence in criminal trials — an innovation, in our opinion, totally irreconcilable with the principle of law upon which the rule itself is founded, and which would, in practice, insensibly lead to its entire abrogation.

The authorities upon this point support the rule laid down by Mr. BURLING in his work on Evidence (p. 533): "When the prisoner has once voluntarily offered his character as a distinct subject of examination, and has actually put it in issue by adducing evidence in relation to it, the prosecution may then call witnesses to impeach his character, in order to rebut and counteract such evidence."

It is not sufficient, within this rule, that there be something in the facts or line of defense relied upon by the prisoner which might be made to appear in a less favorable aspect for her, by instituting an inquiry into her character and proving it to be other than of that ordinary degree of fairness which the law presumes it to be, for however peculiar the facts or circumstances may be in a given case, the rule is absolute upon the point that the character of the prisoner is not open to assault, as a distinctive feature of the case, until the prisoner shall have brought it forward and invited the attack of the prosecution, by arraying the evidence in its support. Until the prisoner thus initiates the inquiry, the prosecution are bound to assume it to be, as the law presumes it, ordinarily fair, and must establish her guilt, if at all, in the face of this presumption, and despite the benefit it affords her.

We are therefore of opinion that there was error in the ruling of the Court below in this respect.

The third and last point which we shall notice concerns the relative order in which the respective counsel — two upon either side of the case — were permitted to address the jury in summing up.

It appears by the record that on the fifteenth day of April the associate counsel of the District Attorney opened the argument and concluded on the same day. The Court then adjourned until the seventeenth of April, on which day Mr. Quint, one of the counsel for the defense, opened upon behalf of the prisoner, concluding on the twentieth of April, and that during his argument on the nineteenth he referred to the statute, and asserted that the defense had the right to finally close the argument. On the conclusion of Mr. Quint's argument on the day following, this question arose for determination, when the Court ruled that though the prosecution had opened, it was entitled, also, to make the closing argument. The result was that the prosecution both opened and closed the argument to the jury, the two counsel for the prisoner speaking in immediate succession.

Section three hundred and sixty-four of the Criminal Practice Act provides as follows: "Section 364. If the indictment be for an offense punishable with death, two counsel on each side may argue the cause to the jury, in which case they must do so alternately. If it be for any other offense, the Court may, in its discretion, restrict the argument to one counsel on each side."

It is to be remarked that section three hundred and sixty-four, as above recited, formed a part of the Act to regulate proceedings in criminal cases, as enacted April 20th, 1850, where it is to be found as section three hundred and ninety-four (p. 303). In 1851 (pp. 251, 252) it was reenacted in totidem verbis in the new statute of that year regulating proceedings in criminal cases, where it appears as section three hundred and sixty-four, and it has ever since then remained upon the statute book, without express alteration, amendment, or repeal.

The distinctive features apparent in this section, considered by itself, are two:

First — That in capital cases the prisoner may insist upon being heard through two counsel, and is not to be restricted to one, as may be done in other cases.

Second — That in such cases the counsel addressing the jury must do so alternately.

As originally enacted, in 1850, it was preceded by sections three hundred and ninety-two and three hundred and ninety-three of that Act, which provided, in substance that, unless the Court should otherwise direct, the counsel for the people must commence and might conclude the argument, but that in every case the counsel for the prisoner might, if he chose, insist upon making the closing argument. It will be seen, that under the Act of April, 1850, the order of the argument in a capital case, when two counsel on each side were to address the jury, was that the prisoner was entitled to the close absolutely, if insisted upon, and that in other respects the order of the argument was subject to the direction of the Court, except that the respective counsel must alternate in the argument.

The absolute right of the prisoner to conclude the argument being insisted upon under the Act of 1850, it would result that the prosecution must open; and the rule of alternation being then observed, the prisoner's counsel would necessarily make the closing argument. But if the counsel for the prisoner should not assert their right to make the closing argument, but, waiving that, should nevertheless insist upon the alternation of argument provided for by section three hundred and ninety-four of the Act of 1850, then the Court, under the authority conferred by section three hundred and ninety-three, might change the order of argument so that the defense would open, and the argument thence proceeding by alternation, the prosecution would necessarily make the closing argument.

In 1851 (pp. 251, 252), the Act of 1850 was repealed, and a new statute enacted — in which statute sections three hundred and ninety-two, three hundred and ninety-three, and three hundred and ninety-four of the Act of 1850 were introduced as sections three hundred and sixty-two, three hundred and sixty-three, and three hundred and sixty-four, without any change of expression — and thus the statute remained until 1854. But in 1854 the right of the prisoner to conclude the argument, theretofore absolute in every criminal trial, was taken away by amendments then made

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

(p. 81) to sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three of the Act of 1851.

By these amendments (yet in force) it was provided, in substance, that the counsel for the people must open, and might conclude the argument, but that, by the permission of the Court, this order of argument might still be departed from. Section three hundred and sixty-four was, however, suffered to remain without express alteration or amendment. Of course, under the settled rule of statutory construction, that section of the statute is not to be considered as repealed by mere implication, either in whole or in part, except in so far as its provisions are found to be absolutely inconsistent with sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three, as amended in 1854. If, therefore, after giving full effect and scope to the amendment of 1854, section three hundred and sixty-four, as enacted in 1851, is still found to include any subject matter not at all embraced in the amendment of 1854, or if including the same subject matter as that embraced in that amendment, it still deals with that subject matter not inconsistently with the amendment itself, then so far forth the provisions of section three hundred and sixty-four of 1851 must continue to be observed in the conduct of that class of criminal cases to which it especially refers.

And after an attentive examination of the statute, and a consideration of the numerous amendments, which portions of it here have undergone, we are unable to discover any repugnance between section three hundred and sixty-four of 1851, upon the one hand, and sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three, as amended in 1854, upon the other. It is clear that the admitted right of a prisoner in capital cases to be heard at this day through two counsel, instead of being positively restricted to one, as he may in cases of a lesser grade, exists solely by force of section three hundred and sixty-four of the Act of 1851, and has not been impaired by the subsequent amendments to sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three of that Act passed in 1854. Those sections, referring, as they did, to the general subject of the argument of counsel in criminal trials of every grade, prescribed certain rules as to the right to open and close the argument; but those rules, when applied to the conduct of cases capital in degree, in which two counsel on each side were to address the jury, were qualified and restrained by the positive provisions of section three hundred and sixty-four, which provisions will be found to have always harmonized with sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three, notwithstanding the repeated amendments which these latter sections have from time to time undergone. It should be borne in mind that section three hundred and sixty-four (which, as we have seen, has been in force ever since April, 1850), never, by its terms, assumed to confer, or to take away either the right to open or the right to conclude the argument in any criminal case. That subject belonged elsewhere in the statute, and was provided for by the other sections referred to. The right to begin and the right to conclude were matters of distinct regulation by sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three of the Act of 1851. Section three hundred and sixty-four undertook to deal with an argument already begun — it mattered not by which side — and declared that, by whomsoever begun, it should proceed by alternation between the counsel engaged. No matter how often by amendments to sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three of the statute the right to close might be shifted from one side to the other, the rule of alternation in the argument, under section three hundred and sixty-four, would still remain undisturbed. The general result, under the rule of alternation, would naturally be that the one side would open and the other would close the argument to the jury, and that neither side would have the right to both the opening and the close of the argument. Had the amendments to sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three, as adopted in 1854, provided in terms that the prosecution should, at all events, both open and close the argument, it might then have been claimed that the principle of alternation, before then provided for by section three hundred and sixty-four, had been swept away by necessary implication, since, upon the supposition that each of the counsel should address the jury but once, such alternation would have become incompatible with the absolute right so conferred upon the prosecution to both open and close the argument. But these amendments of sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three do not so provide. The language of section three hundred and sixty-two is that "the counsel for the people must open and may conclude the argument," followed immediately by section three hundred and sixty-three, providing that the Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, change the order of argument named in section three hundred and sixty-two. The result is, that so long as the rule of alternation in the argument of a capital case remains upon the statute book, in the absence of an order of the Court on the subject, the prosecution must open and the counsel for the prisoner conclude the argument to the jury. And in view of this rule it devolves upon the Court, in its discretion, under section three hundred and sixty-three, to direct in such a case by whom the argument is to be opened, and thus it will occur that the opening argument must fall to one, and the closing argument to the other side, which result, we think, was intended by the statute, when, in 1854, it took from the prisoner the exclusive right to close in all cases, which he had theretofore possessed.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

The Court having given no direction upon the subject at the trial, and the counsel for the prosecution having opened the argument to the jury, we think that the right to the close fell to the counsel for the prisoner, and there was error in refusing to him the exercise of that right.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

CROCKETT, J., concurring:

The defense relied upon in this cause is, that at the moment when the fatal shot was fired the accused was laboring under a temporary insanity, proceeding from certain physical causes, aggravated by the extraordinary mental excitement occasioned by the circumstances which immediately preceded the killing. The proof of the defendant's bad reputation for chastity was offered and submitted solely on the ground that it tended to rebut the inference that the alleged mental excitement of the defendant was occasioned by a sense of shame and mortification which she experienced on account of the damage which she supposed her reputation had suffered by reason of her connection with Crittenden. The proof was, therefore, admitted for the purpose of throwing some light on the question of her mental condition at the moment when the deed was committed. If the defendant had offered any proof whatever that, previous to her relation with Crittenden, her reputation for chastity was good, and that the damage to that reputation which ensued from her connection with Crittenden so preyed upon her mind, in her then state of physical debility, as to result in a state of temporary insanity, it would have been clearly competent for the prosecution to rebut this presumption by proof that she had no reputation to lose, and consequently that she could not have experienced any great mental excitement occasioned by the loss of a reputation which she did not possess. But the defendant offered no proof whatever as to her previous reputation; and even in her own account of the transaction, and of the state of her mind at the time, did not attribute her alleged temporary insanity to any mental excitement resulting from a supposed loss of her reputation. On the contrary, she attributes it partly to her physical condition and partly to the excitement produced by a fear that she was about to lose or was in danger of losing the affections of Mr. Crittenden, to which, it appears, she claimed to have a better right than his lawful wife. In the absence of all proof on her part tending to show that her alleged mental aberration was in any degree produced by a sense of shame or mortification occasioned by any damage to her good name, it was not competent for the prosecution to prove that her reputation for chastity was bad. She had offered no proof tending to show that it was good, and she did not pretend, in her version of the transaction, that her alleged insanity resulted in any degree from the loss of a previously good reputation.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the proof offered by the prosecution on this point was improperly admitted, inasmuch as it did not tend to rebut any proof offered by the defense, nor to elucidate the causes to which she attributes her alleged insanity. I have deemed it proper to add my views on this branch of the case to those of Mr. Justice WALLACE, not because I dissent from any proposition stated by him, but for the reason that it has been insisted with much earnestness by the counsel for the prosecution that the proof of reputation in this case does not fall within the general rule which allows the reputation of the accused to be assailed only in rebuttal of proof of a good reputation offered by the defendant.

I concur in the judgment and with Mr. Justice WALLACE on the other questions discussed in his opinion.

GEORGE W. WARD v. JAMES McNAUGHTON,
DEXTER A. DAVIS, ALEXANDER HENDER-SON, H. B. McNEIL, OLIVER WOLCOTT, AND FRANK ROCK, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF JAMES HOLBERT, DECEASED.

CONTRACT EXPRESSED IN DEED NOT TO BE ENLARGED BY PAROL.—When a negotiation for the purchase and sale of real estate culminates in a deed from the vendor to the vendee, reciting the whole consideration agreed to be paid, and, in a mortgage from the vendee to the vendor, on the land conveyed, to secure the purchase money, the vendee will not be permitted to show by parol that the vendor also agreed in the same contract to sell and convey other lands not included in the deed.

RIGHT OF INCUMBRANCER UNDER JUNIOR MORTGAGE.—In an action to foreclose a mortgage, a subsequent incumbrancer under a junior mortgage is a proper party, and is entitled to have his rights protected by an appropriate provision in a decree as to the disposition of the surplus of the proceeds of the sale, if there be any, after satisfying the demands of the senior mortgagee.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of Stanislaus.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Terry & Carr, for Appellants.

J. H. Budd, and Schell & Hewel, for Respondent.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action to foreclose a mortgage on certain real estate to secure a promissory note made by certain of the defendants to the plaintiff. The complaint alleges that the lands described in the mortgage were sold and conveyed by the plaintiff to said defendants, who made the note and mortgage to secure a portion of the purchase money. The answers set up as a defense that at the time of the purchase it was verbally agreed between the plaintiff and defendants, as a part of the same transaction, and for the same consideration, that the plaintiff would perfect his preëmption claim to certain other lands, and obtain a patent therefor, and on obtaining the patent, would convey to the defendants said other lands without any other or further consideration therefor; that the plaintiff, in part execution of the verbal agreement, conveyed to the defendants the lands described in the mortgage, but, in violation of his contract, abandoned his preëmption claim to the other lands, and has never perfected the same, or conveyed said lands to the defendants. On these facts they claim that the whole contract of purchase was illegal and void, as contrary to public policy, and that the consideration for the note and mortgage has failed.

The Court sustained a demurrer to the answers, and a final judgment was entered for the plaintiff, from which the defendants appeal. On behalf of the plaintiff it is insisted that it was not competent for the defendants to set up a parol agreement which would contradict, vary, or enlarge the written contract, as embodied in the deed and mortgage; whilst the defendants claim that such an agreement would not contradict, vary, or add to the deed and mortgage, but would establish an independent contract, and that the deed and mortgage were made only in part execution of the verbal agreement. The verbal contract set up in the answers related solely to the purchase and sale of real estate, and included but one contract of sale and purchase. The offer was to show that in addition to the lands which the plaintiff actually conveyed to the defendants, he, at the same time and by the same contract, also agreed verbally, to convey to them other lands for the same consideration recited in his deed, and to secure which the mortgage was made. I think it is clear that the defendants are precluded from setting up a verbal agreement of that character. When a negotiation for the purchase and sale of real estate culminates in a deed from the vendor to the vendee, reciting the whole consideration agreed to be paid, and in a mortgage from the vendee to the vendor on the land conveyed to secure the purchase money, it would lead to great frauds and abuses if the vendee were permitted to show by parol that the vendor also agreed to sell and convey other lands not included in the deed. It would open the door to all the evils which the Statute of Frauds was intended to prevent, and would be to vary and enlarge by parol the contract of sale expressed in the deed, which must be held to embody the result of the negotiations between the parties. I am, therefore, of opinion that the demurrer to the answer was properly sustained.

But the answer of Rock, as administrator of James Holbert, sets up that he is a subsequent incumbrancer under a junior mortgage of the same premises, and the demurrer to this portion of his answer ought not to have been sustained. He was a proper party to the action, and was entitled to have his rights protected by an appropriate provision in the decree as to the disposition of the surplus, if there be any, of the proceeds of the sale, after satisfying the plaintiff's demand and costs.

Judgment affirmed as to all the defendants, except the defendant Rock, administrator of Holbert, as to whom it is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

STATEMENTS OF FACTS.

(No. 3,221.)

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
WILLIAM DONOVAN.

EVIDENCE ON RECORD.—Showing the original verdict of a Coroner's jury to a witness in a criminal case and asking the witness if he had signed the verdict, is not "an effort to prove the contents of a written record by parol."

FORM.—Where a witness is asked, if he had signed a paper of a certain tenor, stated in the question, and before answering is shown and examines the original, it is not error to admit his answer in evidence.

EXERCISE VALUE OR OPINION BY WITNESS.—The value of the opinion of a witness may be tested by showing that on a former occasion he has expressed a different opinion, and by inquiring as to the grounds upon which the change of his opinion had been brought about.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The first three instructions asked by the defendant were as follows:

"1. A person while in a state of insanity is by law deemed to be incapable of crime. And insanity of the prisoner at the instant of commission of the offense can be established by evidence tending to prove that he was insane at some period before or afterwards.

"2. The presumption of law is always prima facie in favor of sanity. Whenever the exemption from liability is claimed on the ground of mental unsoundness it devolves on the party claiming it to allege and prove it. That allegations and proof being furnished the legal presumption changes, and the mental unsoundness is presumed to continue until the allegation and proof of a complete restoration or a lucid interval.

"3. In a criminal case, if the defendant relies upon insanity as a defense, proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not required, but the burden of proof is cast upon him, and his insanity must be established by such a preponderance of evidence, that if the single issue of the sanity or insanity of the defendant was submitted to the jury in a civil case they would find that he was insane."

Statement of Facts.

The defendant excepted to the refusal of the Court to give these instructions. The Court, among other instructions, gave the following:

"As a general rule an insane man is incapable of committing crime; but there are exceptions to the rule. A person sometimes insane, who has lucid intervals, or is so far sane as to distinguish good from evil, right from wrong, may commit crime and be legally held responsible. * * * If you find from the evidence that the prisoner committed the offense charged, and at the time he committed the same his mind was so far disordered or diseased that he was incapable of distinguishing good from evil, right from wrong, he was irresponsible and should be acquitted; or if he was, at the instant of the alleged shooting, deprived of reason, though then in a semi-conscious state, the act in law was non-volitional, and he is not responsible; or, if he was at that instant unconscious, he is not responsible. Nor is he legally responsible if he was impelled to shoot the deceased by an uncontrollable influence and was at the moment unconscious of doing wrong. * * * You can also, in determining the question of sanity or insanity, or responsibility, consider all the evidence given either on behalf of the prosecution or the prisoner, and apply to the facts developed your knowledge of human nature and the tendencies of the human mind, and thereby ascertain whether or not he was, at the time the mortal wound was inflicted, responsible for the act. If it be shown that the intellectual faculties were so impaired as to produce a general habitual derangement of them, not traceable to some temporary cause, the law would presume the mind to have continued in the same state until the contrary was shown; but the principle is different in reference to temporary or periodical insanity, resulting from some transient cause, for then the presumption would be that the mind was restored to its normal condition when the disturbing element had ceased to operate. On a trial for murder the accused is presumed to be sane until the contrary is made to appear by the evidence, and if insanity is relied upon as a defense it must be established affirmatively by a preponderance of proof."

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, C. J.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Thomas A. Brown, for Appellant.

John L. Love, Attorney General, for the People.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The prisoner upon trial upon an indictment for the crime of murder relied for defense upon his alleged insanity at the time of the homicide, and called as a witness one O'Neal, who testified to some peculiarities in the appearance and conduct of the prisoner on the day of the homicide, and stated his belief therefrom to be that the prisoner "must have been entirely out of his right mind," etc. Upon cross-examination, the District Attorney exhibited to the witness a paper purporting to be signed by the witness and inquired if his name appearing thereto was in his handwriting, to which the witness answered that his signature thereto was genuine. To this inquiry and to the answer thereto, there was no objection made upon behalf of the prisoner. The witness was then asked by the District Attorney if he had signed a verdict as a member of the Coroner's jury—the verdict being produced and read to the witness as part of the question—it appearing that the verdict was to the effect that the killing done by the prisoner was done with malice aforethought and with premeditation. Before he answered the question, the verdict inquired of was placed in his hands, and he was permitted to read and examine it. The counsel for the prisoner thereupon objected to the question on the ground that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and inadmissible, and as an effort to prove the contents of a written record by parol." This objection was overruled, and the witness thereupon answered that he did sign the verdict in question.

1. That the examination of the witness did not involve "an effort to prove the contents of a written record by parol" within the objection made by the prisoner is clear, for it distinctly appears that the paper placed in the hands of the witness, and concerning which the inquiry was made, was the original verdict referred to.

2. It also appears by the bill of exceptions contained in the record that the District Attorney did inquire of the witness whether or not, as a member of the Coroner's jury, he signed a verdict of a certain tenor or effect — undertaking, in the question as asked, to state its tenor and effect. Conceding that such a question was objectionable within the rule to be observed upon cross-examination of a witness in such cases, it does not appear that any objection was taken to the question by the prisoner's counsel; but even had such objection been made at the time the question was asked, it also appears that before the witness answered the "original verdict" was shown to him, and he answered only after he had examined and read the same.

3. It was competent to inquire of the witness whether or not he had signed the verdict in question, or if he had alone, or in connection with other persons, signed any other writing then produced and shown to him, to the effect that the prisoner was not insane. Though proof that the witness had signed a paper, written a letter, or made statements at any former period of time to the effect that in his then opinion the prisoner was sane, would not amount to an impeachment of him in the strict sense as a witness, yet it would at all events go to the reliability of his opinion. It would, in this view, certainly be pertinent to inquire of a person testifying to his opinion in a case whether or not he had before then expressed a different opinion, and also, if desired, to inquire of the grounds or matters upon which the change of his opinion had been brought about, and to do so would not necessarily be to discredit or to question his veracity, but to test to some extent the value of his opinion.

The charge given by the Court correctly set before the jury the principles of law applicable to the case, and there was no error in refusing the first three instructions asked by the prisoner.

Judgment affirmed and the Court below directed to fix a day to carry the sentence into execution.

Neither Mr. Justice RHODES nor Mr. Justice CROCKETT expressed an opinion.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
F. W. VOLL.

NEW TRIAL IN CRIMINAL CASE.—It is no ground for a new trial in a criminal case that, on a challenge of a juror for actual bias, one of the triers appointed is on the panel of the jury in attendance in the case.

OBJECTION TO APPOINTMENT OF TRIER.—If an objection is to be made to the appointment of a trier in a criminal case it must be made at the time, and the grounds of objection brought to the attention of the Court; and if the objection be overruled an exception must be reserved in the usual mode.

NEW TRIAL — NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.—The affidavits in support of a motion for a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence in a criminal case, must set forth such evidence as would be received on the trial.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Opinion of the Court—WALLACE, C. J.

Alexander Campbell, for Appellant.

John L. Love, Attorney General, for Respondents.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The prisoner, Francis W. Voll, was convicted of the crime of manslaughter, in killing one Walsh, and brings this appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. The first error assigned is that the Court, upon a challenge for actual bias, interposed by the prisoner, appointed as trier one Bolton, the said Bolton being himself of the jury panel in attendance in the case; and the statute (Section 852) providing that the triers shall be three impartial persons, "not on the jury panel," etc., is cited. No objection was made by the prisoner when Bolton was appointed—no exception was reserved—and the error is attempted to be shown only by means of a motion for a new trial. The statute (Section 440) has prescribed the grounds upon which such a motion must be made—of which this is not one—and we have lately held that it cannot be rested upon any ground not there enumerated. (People v. Fair, ante, 137.) If objection is to be made to the appointment of a trier it must be made at the time, and the grounds of objection brought to the attention of the Court, when, if such objection be overruled, an exception may be reserved in the usual mode. The Court below was probably not aware that Bolton was upon the panel at the time he was appointed as a trier; and it was the duty of the prisoner to call attention to that fact, if it was his purpose to rely upon the disqualification of the appointee to serve. The prisoner might, with just as much propriety, have moved for a new trial on the ground that the trier—though appointed without objection—was not, in fact, an impartial person.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

2. The next point made, and upon which a new trial was moved for and denied, is that the jury received evidence out of Court other than that resulting from a view of the place where the offense was alleged to have been committed. It is claimed that when the jury were sent by the Court to view the premises at which the killing took place, one Butler, a witness for the prosecution, conversed with the jury, or some one or more of the jurors, upon the facts of the case, or the evidence which had been given before them. A careful examination, however, of the affidavits presented upon either side, and of the evidence of Bolton and that of the Deputy Sheriff, Boyd, given in the presence of the Court upon the hearing of the motion, satisfies us that this ground is without support in point of fact, and that no such irregularity or misconduct occurred.

3. Another, and the only remaining ground upon which a new trial was asked is that of newly discovered evidence. The newly discovered evidence is set forth in the affidavits of Doyle and Gudinaki. Generally speaking, the matters set forth in these affidavits would be inadmissible as evidence in behalf of the prisoner, even were a new trial granted him. If some portions of the statements there made might be received in a case exceptional in its circumstances, it is not disclosed by the record here what the circumstances were under which the homicide in question was committed. No portion of the evidence given at the trial is before us, and, in its absence, the intendments go to support the action of the Court below, for error is not to be presumed.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Argument for Appellant.

LUDWIG ALTSCHUL v. SAN FRANCISCO CENTRAL PARK HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION.

PAROL TESTIMONY TO EXPLAIN CALLS OF DEED.—In construing doubtful clauses in a deed, it is important to ascertain all the attendant circumstances in order to arrive at the intention of the parties; and whilst it is not competent to alter, enlarge, or vary the instrument by parol, oral testimony is admissible to explain its calls by applying its descriptive portions to the natural objects called for.

EXPLANATION OF DOUBTFUL CALL IN DEED NOT CONTRADICTION OF IT.—

In an action to quiet title to a lot in San Francisco, where it appeared that plaintiff claimed under a deed which described a lot as "commencing at the northeasterly corner of Pacific street and Lone Mountain Cemetery Avenue, as such corner may be established by the city hereafter, whether known as such street or not;" Held, that parol evidence showing that there was an open space, known as Cemetery Avenue, which if extended would have crossed Pacific street at the southwesterly corner of the lot in controversy, and that the grantor pointed out the lot in controversy as the one conveyed, did not contradict the deed and was admissible.

APPLICATION OF CALLS IN A DEED.—Where a lot in San Francisco was claimed under a deed which called for a commencement "at the northeasterly corner of Pacific street and Lone Mountain Cemetery Avenue, as such corner may be established by the city hereafter, whether known as such street or not;" and it appeared that there was a space, known as "Cemetery Avenue," which if extended would have crossed Pacific street at the lot claimed; and it further appeared that the grantor had pointed it out as the lot conveyed: Held, that the description applied to the lot claimed, and could not be held to apply to a lot in the United States reservation at the corner of Pacific street and an avenue, thereafter established by the city five hundred feet further west, and called "New Cemetery Avenue."

The facts are stated in the opinion.

There is no ambiguity in the language of the deed, and oral testimony was incompetent to show that other land, not extended across Pacific street the lot in controversy in this action would have been situated at the northeast corner of said open space thus extended and Pacific street. That at the dates of said deeds from Chart to Travis and from Travis to the plaintiff, Chart pointed out to them the lot in controversy as the one which he proposed to sell, and did sell and convey to Travis; and it was further proved that the defendant had notice of these facts when it took the deed from Chart. The defendant then proved that when Chart conveyed to Travis there was an open street, known as Baker street, running north and south across Pacific street immediately east of the block in which this lot is situated, which street was then officially established; but there was no other street officially established west of Baker street until the year 1869, when a street known as New Cemetery Avenue was established, and which runs across Pacific street about five hundred feet west of the lot in controversy. It further appeared that the land at the northeast corner of Pacific street and New Cemetery Avenue is within the tract reserved by the United States for military purposes. Judgment having been entered for the plaintiff, the defendant appeals, and assigns as error the ruling of the Court in admitting parol evidence to prove the facts above stated. But, in my opinion, the evidence was clearly competent. In construing doubtful clauses in a deed it is important to ascertain all the attending circumstances in order to arrive at the intention of the parties; and whilst it is not competent to alter, enlarge, or vary the instrument by parol, it is well settled that oral testimony is admissible to explain the calls of a deed by applying its descriptive portions to the natural objects called for. When the deed from Chart to Travis was executed no street was officially established west of Baker street; but the parties had a right to presume that the open space then known as Cemetery Avenue would be officially established as a street of the city, and would be extended across Pacific street. But they could not know but that its location might be slightly varied, or that, when officially established, it might not be called by some other name. This contingency was provided for in the deed by describing the land as situate at the northeast corner of Pacific street and the new street which was expected to be established across Pacific street at or near that point, and which might thereafter be called by some other name than Cemetery Avenue, by which it was then known. But it was clearly not within the contemplation of the parties that the new street referred to in the deed was one which might thereafter be established five hundred feet further towards the west and across lands belonging to the United States, where it crossed Pacific street, in which lands Chart did not pretend to have any interest whatsoever. There was nothing in the parol evidence to contradict the deed; but its only office was to explain the circumstances under which the deed was made and to identify the object called for in the deed as Cemetery Avenue. The call in the deed to commence at the northeast corner of Pacific street and Lone Mountain Cemetery Avenue, as such corner may be established by the city hereafter, whether known as such street or not, can by no reasonable intentment be held to apply to a street thereafter established by the city, five hundred feet further west, and called "New Cemetery Avenue." The term new, employed to designate this street, would appear to have been used to contradistinguish it from the old street or open space known as Lone Mountain Cemetery Avenue. It was in fact the establishment of another street, at a remote point, and known by a wholly different name from that described in the deed and contemplated by the parties. The defendant's case would have been quite as strong if the new street had been located at a distance of a mile, and had been called "Oak street" instead of "New Cemetery Avenue."

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, J.

I think the evidence was clearly competent, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

So ordered.

RECORD TO CONTAIN THE EVIDENCE.—Where, in a criminal case, a motion for a new trial is based upon the ground, among others, that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, and it is granted by an order of the Court in general terms, without specifying any particular ground upon which the Court proceeded, the Supreme Court will not undertake to review the order, unless the record sets forth all the evidence given at the trial.

RECORDS OF THE SUPREME COURT.—The records filed in the Supreme Court are not merely prima facie, but are conclusive in their character.

NOTES OF PHONOGRAPHIC REPORTER.—The notes of evidence taken by the Phonographic Reporter of a Court are prima facie evidence only in the Court below, and cannot be considered in the Supreme Court.

numerous, and among the others, that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict.

The order was, in general terms, that a new trial be granted, without specifying any particular ground upon which the Court proceeded.

As we held in The People v. McAuslan, ante, p. 55, we cannot undertake to review such an order in any case, unless the record set forth all the evidence given at the trial—and we may here add, that even then it would probably but rarely be disturbed here—for the views of the Court below as to the sufficiency of the evidence, formed, as they are, upon a personal observation of the manner and general demeanor of the witnesses who testified at the trial, are entitled here to the utmost consideration and deference.

In the record before us no statement of the evidence is contained in an authentic form. It is true that the notes of evidence taken by the Phonographic Reporter are embodied in the transcript, and the certificate of the Reporter is appended to the effect that they constitute a correct statement of the evidence, to the best of his knowledge and belief. But the Act of 1867-8, p. 425, provides that the Reporter's notes shall be taken as prima facie evidence only—that is, of course, that wherever presented they are open to question and possible correction. This provision evidently refers to the proceedings to be had in the Court below upon settlement of statements, allowance of bills of exceptions, etc. The records filed in this Court, and upon which we proceed here, however, are not merely prima facie, but are conclusive in their character, and we have no means of correcting the notes of the Reporter of the Court below, or of entertaining an inquiry into their conformity with the facts actually occurring in that Court.

It results that the Reporter's notes cannot be considered in this Court; and the order appealed from must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

THOMAS H. HANSON v. JAMES S. MCCOUR.

PETITION FOR REHEARING.—The filing of a petition for rehearing is not a matter of right, but a privilege given by the Court, and governed and limited entirely by its rules.

RULES OF COURT.—The Court, equally with suitors, is bound by its rules, and they must be construed as statutes would be construed.

LOSS OF PETITION FOR REHEARING BEFORE IT REACHES THE CLERK.—If a petition for rehearing is placed in the office of an express company, addressed to the Clerk, in time to have reached him within the time allowed by the rules to file one, and that is the customary and most reliable means of transmission, and the petition fails to reach the Clerk, without fault of counsel, the petition is, in contemplation of law, in the hands of the Clerk within the time limited by the rule, and if lost, may be supplied as other documents lost from the files of the Court may be supplied.

RECALLING REMITTITUR.—When a remittitur is improperly issued, the Court still retains jurisdiction of the case, and the remittitur will be recalled.

This case is reported in 42 Cal. 303.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

John W. Dwinelle, for the Motion.

E. B. Mahon, Contra.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

A decision in this case was rendered on the 31st of October, 1871.

On the 24th of November following, the respondent's counsel deposited in the express office of Wells, Fargo & Co., at San Francisco, a package addressed to the Clerk of this Court, and containing a printed petition for rehearing and the required number of copies. This package, from some unknown cause, did not reach the Clerk. Upon the 27th of November, the Clerk issued the remittitur under the provisions of Rule Twenty-one of this Court.

Upon these facts, sufficiently shown, respondent moves that the remittitur be recalled, and that he have leave now to file his petition for rehearing. The propriety of granting this motion depends upon the construction of Rule Twenty of this Court. This rule requires that the petition for rehearing "must be filed within twenty-five days after the judgment has been rendered;" and, further, that "the time herein prescribed shall not be extended by the Court, and the Clerk shall not file a petition after such time has expired."

These plain and positive provisions cannot be avoided upon the ground of accident or excusable neglect. The filing of a petition for a rehearing is not a matter of right. It is a privilege given by the Court, governed and limited entirely by its rules. The power to make these rules is given and controlled by the statute. The Court, equally with the suitor, is bound by them, until they are abrogated. We must construe them as statutory provisions would be construed. We can conceive of no case in which the time for filing a petition for rehearing can be enlarged, or the failure to file excused, under the positive prohibition of the rule.

Another question, however, is presented in this case. It seems that the counsel for respondent deposited his petition for rehearing in the office of the express company, in ample time to reach the Clerk of this Court within the period allowed by the rule for filing the petition, in the ordinary courses of the business of the company. It also appears that this was the customary and most reliable means of transmission. Here, then, was no negligence on the part of counsel. He had performed fully, and in due time, all that he could be required to do in ordinary cases, and in the absence of notice that the petition had failed to arrive at its place of destination. He had dispatched it by the ordinary and best method; and we think that when counsel have fully completed their duties and have parted with the possession of the petition in the manner described, and within ample time for its conveyance to the Court within the period limited by the rule, it should be construed to be thenceforward in the possession of the officer of the Court to whom it was addressed. In contemplation of law, the petition was in the hands of the Clerk within the time limited by the rule, and if lost, may be supplied as other documents lost from the files of the Court may be supplied.

The petition being deemed to have been filed in time, the remittitur issued improperly. This was not through personal fault of the Clerk, but was error in contemplation of law.

In such case this Court still retains jurisdiction of the case, and may order the remittitur to be recalled.

Ordered, that the remittitur heretofore issued be recalled, and that respondent have leave to file his petition for rehearing.

THE NEVADA COUNTY AND SACRAMENTO
CANAL COMPANY v. GEORGE W. KIDD, JAMES WHARTENBY, CHARLES MARSH, JOHN DUNN, AND JOHN JENKINS.

APPEAL — ORDER STRIKING OUT PARTS OF PLEADING.—An order striking out portions of a pleading is no part of the judgment roll, and cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment, unless it be supported by a statement on appeal.

DEMURRER — UNITING SEVERAL CAUSES OF ACTION IN ONE COUNT.—A complaint setting up in one and the same count ownership in, and ouster from, a certain water right, and also a site for a dam, and the land on which a dam is built, and praying for restitution, is demurrable, for improperly uniting several causes of action.

Statement of Facts.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District, Nevada County.

The complaint averred "that on the 18th day of July, 1867, plaintiff was the owner of and entitled to the possession of a certain water right, known as the water flowing down the South Yuba River, situated, lying, and being in the County of Nevada, State of California, at a point about four hundred and twenty rods above the summit of the gap which divides the waters of the South Yuba River from Bear River, at the point where a large pine or fir tree lay across said river in the year 1855, said point lying and being in Washington Township, in said county; and at the same point where plaintiff, in the year 1855, commenced to construct a dam, and where a certain dam now claimed by defendants is now located. Plaintiff avers that plaintiff is now the owner and entitled to the possession of said water right. Plaintiff avers that plaintiff is the owner of and entitled to the possession of the site for a dam at said point in said Yuba River, and the dam constructed, and the land on which the same is built, and also the canal or flume leading from said point, dug or made down the easterly side of said river a distance of four hundred and twenty rods, and has so been the owner since said 18th day of July, 1867. Plaintiff further avers that defendants, and those through whom they claim, wrongfully, unlawfully, and without plaintiff's consent, on said 18th day of July, 1867, entered upon said water right and the dam of plaintiff, and the canal and land where the same are located, and deprived plaintiff of the possession thereof, and now still continue to deprive plaintiff of the possession of the same, by reason of which wrongful act of defendants plaintiff is wholly prevented from using and enjoying said water right, and the said dam and canal." The prayer was for restitution and an injunction to restrain defendants from interfering with the water right, and for general relief.

The defendants moved to strike out the averments in reference to the water right, on the ground that ejectment would not lie to recover it; that the allegations were not material to the cause of action set forth, and that no property, or right of property, in plaintiff, was averred in that portion of the complaint. They also demurred on the ground that several causes of action were improperly united in the same count, to wit: a cause of action arising from alleged expulsion, and a motion of plaintiff by defendants from, and wrongful detention by defendants of, a specific parcel of real property, with a cause of action arising from alleged expulsion, and a motion of plaintiff from, and wrongful detention by defendants of, a water right.

The Court below granted the motion to strike out and sustained the demurrer, and gave the plaintiff thirty days to amend. The plaintiff, having declined to amend, and his complaint having been dismissed, appealed from the judgment.

W. H. Bullock, for Appellant.

This is not an action of ejectment, as assumed by defendants. It is an action for an injunction and for general relief. The common law definition of actions is abolished by our Practice Act; and it makes no difference what the action would be called at common law. It is true that by the common law an action of ejectment would not lie for running water. But the gravamen here is the water right. The site for a dam, the dam itself, and the flume, are merely appurtenant to it, and would be worthless without it. A water right is property, and has been recognized as such by repeated decisions of this Court. (Hill v. Neuman, 5 Cal. 445; Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 162; Hoffman v. Stone, 7 Cal. 47.)

In this State a water right is something more than a mere easement or incorporeal hereditament; and if a party is ousted an action will lie to recover it by its true name of water right. (37 Cal. 326.)

A. C. Niles and Niles Searles, for Respondents.

As there is no statement on appeal or bill of exceptions, this case comes up on the judgment roll alone. The motion and order to strike out are no part of the judgment roll, and therefore cannot be considered on this appeal. (Sutter v. San Francisco, 36 Cal. 114; Wetherbee v. Carroll, 33 Cal. 552; Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 109; Gates v. Walker, 35 Cal. 290.)

The demurrer was properly sustained. It was interposed, to the whole complaint, and must be construed in relation to the entire pleading. The water right — supposing we could enter upon and take possession of such a thing — is not dependent, nor is it averred to be dependent upon or appurtenant to the dam and canal afterwards mentioned in the complaint. Though the water right could not exist without some dam, or ditch, or other contrivance for its diversion or use, yet it might very well exist without the dam or ditch mentioned. We might be entirely willing to yield to plaintiff the possession of the dam, and canal, and flume, and yet contest its claim to the use of the waters of the Yuba. We may have other ditches, above or below upon the stream, by which we would be entitled to divert every drop of the water. We could make numerous issues as to the water right, such as abandonment, purchase of right from prior appropriators, etc., which would be entirely consistent with plaintiff's ownership of the dam and canal. We are entitled to have the several causes of action so stated that we can demur, or take other issue upon each — that we can admit the one and deny the other, as the facts of the case may warrant.

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, C. J.

This question was fully argued and determined in the case of Nevada County and Sacramento Canal Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 309; and there are reasons why the decision in that case — the parties, property, and cause of action being the same as in this — should be considered as res adjudicata — the law of this case.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

First — Upon motion of the defendants, an order was entered striking out a portion of the complaint. The appeal is taken from the judgment and from an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. That an order striking out a portion of a pleading may be reviewed here upon appeal from the judgment is true; but it is no less true that such an order, being in itself no part of the judgment roll (section two hundred and three), cannot be so reviewed except it be supported by a statement on appeal; and here there is none.

Second — The Court sustained a demurrer to the complaint, with leave to the plaintiff to amend, and no amendment having been made, rendered judgment dismissing the action.

It is clear that several causes of action have been improperly united — mingled together — in the complaint. The entry upon the "site for a dam" — the "dam constructed" — the "land on which the same is built," etc. (as was said here in N. C. and S. C. Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 282), "may perhaps be regarded as a single cause of action;" but, as was then said also, "the water right * * * is a different thing." The complaint, containing as it does but a single cause of action, and counting upon an invasion of all these in that count, is clearly obnoxious to the demurrer interposed under subdivision five, section forty, of the Practice Act.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice NILES, having been of counsel in the Court below, did not sit in this case.

ALFRED WOOD, ADMINISTRATOR WITH THE WILL ANNEXED OF THE ESTATE OF H. F. WOOD, DECEASED, v. M. J. GOODFELLOW AND THE KEYSTONE QUARTZ MINING COMPANY.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SUSPENDED BY CONSENT OF MORTGAGOR.—So long as a mortgagor holds the equity of redemption, and no other rights intervene by reason of subsequent liens or incumbrances, he has the power by written stipulation under the statute, or by absenting himself from the State, to suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations.

MORTGAGOR CANNOT AFFECT SUBSEQUENT INCUMBRANCE.—As against subsequent incumbrancers or a subsequent holder of the equity of redemption, the mortgagor has no power by stipulation to prolong the time of payment, or in any manner to increase the burdens of the mortgaged premises.

CASES COMMENTED ON.—Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 482; McCarty v. White, 21 Cal. 495; Lent v. Morrill, 25 Cal. 500; Low v. Allen, 26 Cal. 141; Lent v. Shear, 26 Cal. 361; Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 11; Stichel v. Carrillo, 42 Cal. 493, commented on.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS WHERE THIRD PERSONS BECOME INTERESTED SUBSEQUENT TO MORTGAGE.—When third persons have acquired interests in mortgaged property subsequent to the mortgage, they may invoke the aid of the Statute of Limitations as against the mortgage, even though the mortgagor, as between himself and the mortgagee, may have waived its protection.

NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SUSPENSION BY WAIVER AND BY ABSENCE.—There is no difference in principle between the suspension of the running of the Statute of Limitations resulting from an express waiver and one caused by voluntary act in absenting oneself from the State.

RELATION BETWEEN THE MORTGAGOR AND THE SUCCESSOR OF THE MORTGAGOR.—When the mortgagor has parted with his title to the property and ceased to have any interest therein, those who have succeeded to his rights stand in the same relation to the mortgage as if they had originally made the mortgage on their own property to secure the debt of the mortgagor.

ACTION UPON MORTGAGE BARRED AFTER FOUR YEARS.—Where a mortgagor transfers his interest in the mortgaged premises to a third person, the mortgage, as contradistinguished from the mortgage debt, is to be deemed a contract in writing in the sense of the statute on which an action must be brought within four years from the time when the action would lie, in order to avoid the bar of the Statute of Limitations.

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Tenth Judicial District, Sierra County.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

P. Vanchief, D. H. Couden, and James Galloway, for Appellant.

Barslow & Garber, for Respondents.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action to foreclose a mortgage made by Goodfellow in June, 1860, on his undivided interest in the Keystone mine and mill. The mortgage was duly recorded about the time it was executed. Subsequently, in October, 1860, and May, 1862, two other mortgages were made upon the whole property by Goodfellow and the other joint owners, which two last named mortgages, in October, 1862, were duly assigned to Harris & McCarthy, who immediately commenced an action to foreclose them, but failed to make Wood, the holder of the first mortgage, a party to the action. On the 3d day of November, 1862, they obtained a decree of foreclosure, under which the entire property was sold on the 6th day of December, 1862, to Harris & McCarthy, who entered into possession on the 12th day of the same month. There having been no redemption, they obtained the Sheriff's deed on the 8th day of June, 1863, and on the 30th day of March, 1864, conveyed the whole property, by absolute deed, to the defendant, the Keystone Quartz Mining Company, which has thenceforth continued in possession.

It appears from the findings, that Goodfellow left this State on the 15th of November, 1862, and has never returned to it; and that Wood, the holder of the first mortgage — for the foreclosure of which this action is brought — had actual notice on the 3d day of January, 1863, of the two subsequent mortgages and of their registration, and of the sale to Harris &

Opinion of the Court—Crockett, J.

McCarthy under the decree of foreclosure; and that they were then in possession. Wood died on the 4th day of March, 1868, and this action was brought by his administrator on the 11th day of May, 1868. The chief defense relied upon by the Keystone Quartz Mining Company is the Statute of Limitations, and this defense having been sustained by the District Court, the plaintiff has appealed.

In a very able and ingenious printed argument the counsel for the plaintiff insists that the action is not barred, because, as he claims: First, the mortgage is but a collateral security for the debt, and is only an incident to it; and that if the debt, which the mortgage was made to secure, is not barred, the mortgage cannot be; second, the mortgage debt in this case is not barred, for the reason that the mortgagor, Goodfellow, left the State in November, 1862, and has never returned, and that by the express terms of section twenty-two of the Statute of Limitations "the time of his absence shall not be part of the time limited for the commencement of the action." The argument would be impregnable if it were conceded that the Keystone Quartz Mining Company, which has succeeded to and now holds the equity of redemption of the mortgagor, Goodfellow, occupied precisely his status under the statute. If Goodfellow still held the equity of redemption, and if the action was against him alone, it is evident his absence from the State would afford a sufficient answer to the plea of the Statute of Limitations. So long as he retained the equity of redemption, and no other rights had intervened, by reason of subsequent liens or incumbrances, he had the power, by written stipulation under the statute, to extend the time within which the debt should not be barred, or he might suspend the running of the statute by his absence from the State. So long as his rights only were to be effected, it was within his power to suspend the operation of the statute, either by written stipulation or by absenting himself from the State. But this Court has repeatedly decided that as against subsequent incumbrances, or a subsequent holder of the equity of redemption, the mortgagor has no power, by stipulation, to prolong the time of payment, or in any manner increase the burdens on the mortgaged premises. (Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 482; McCarty v. White, 21 Cal. 495; Lent v. Morrill, 25 Cal. 500; Low v. Allen, 26 Cal. 141; Lent v. Shear, 26 Cal. 361; Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 11; Sichel v. Carrillo, 42 Cal. 493.)

In Belloc v. Davis, 38 Cal. 242, we held that as against subsequent incumbrances the mortgagor had no power, by stipulation, to convert the debt from a currency demand into one payable in gold coin. These cases proceed on the theory that those who acquire interests in the mortgaged property, whether by conveyance or lien, subsequent to the mortgage, may stand upon their rights as they were when they acquired them; and that it is not in the power of the mortgagor, by any act of his, to change, restrict, modify, or abridge them. He has no power, by stipulation, to defer or suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations. We do not understand counsel to controvert this proposition. But his argument is, that by the very terms of the law itself, and not by reason of any stipulation on the part of Goodfellow, the statute ceased to run when he left the State, and that no additional burden has been imposed upon the property, except that which the law itself imposed; and that when third persons subsequently acquired an interest in it, they must be held to have done so subject and in subordination to the power of the mortgagor to suspend the running of the statute, by absenting himself from the State, as he had the right to do. The argument assumes that a subsequent holder of the equity of redemption, or a subsequent incumbrancer, stands in the shoes of the mortgagor, and cannot invoke the aid of the statute in the given case, because he could not. But it is the settled doctrine of this Court, as will be seen from the authorities above cited, that when

third person have subsequently acquired interests in the mortgaged property they may invoke the aid of the statute as against the mortgage, even though the mortgagor, as between himself and the mortgagee, may have waived its protection; and we see no difference in principle between a suspension of the running of the statute resulting from an express waiver, and one caused by his voluntary act in absenting himself from the State. In either case it is the sole act of the mortgagor, performed at a time when he had lost his rightful control over the property, and when other interests had intervened, which ought not to be dependent for their protection on the conduct of the mortgagor. When the mortgagor has parted with his title to the property, and ceased to have any interest therein, those who have succeeded to his rights stand in the same relation to the mortgagee as if they had originally made the mortgage on their own property to secure the debt of the mortgagor. The mortgagor has no interest in the property, nor are they under obligation to pay his debt. Their property, however, is bound as collateral security for its payment, under the mortgage, which is a contract in writing, by which the property is pledged as a security for the debt. The mortgage, in such a case, has the same effect in law as if it had been originally made, as a separate instrument, by the parties succeeding to the rights of the mortgagor to secure his debt. If A. make a mortgage on his own property to B. to secure a debt owing from C., the action to foreclose the mortgage must be brought within four years from the time when the debt became due. The time could not be prolonged by any stipulation between B. and C. to which A. was not privy. But when the four years were about to expire, could C., under our law, indefinitely postpone the bar of the statute, and render it nugatory as to A., by absenting himself from the State, and never returning? The argument of the plaintiff's counsel necessarily leads to this result. But we have not, heretofore, so interpreted the statute. On the contrary, we have uniformly held in analogous cases that the mortgage, as contradistinguished from the mortgage debt, in such cases is to be deemed a contract in writing in the sense of the statute, on which the action must be brought within four years from the time when the action would lie, in order to avoid the bar of the statute. If we had any doubt, on reason or authority, whether the rule is proper, it has been too long established in this State to be now disturbed.

Opinion of the Court—CROCKETT, J.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Sonoma County.

The complaint, after setting forth the death of Michael Slattery, and the appointment and qualification of the plaintiff as his administratrix, and the possession of the deceased, and of the plaintiff, as his administratrix, of a portion (some two hundred and twenty acres) of the Blucher Rancho, in Sonoma County, describing it, proceeded to allege that while said plaintiff, and a great many other settlers, possessing other portions of the rancho, were so settled, and had such possession, it was ascertained that the land was claimed and held by a valid title then outstanding, and adverse to the said settlers; that thereupon, November 18th, 1866, said settlers, including plaintiff, appointed a committee, consisting of defendants Hall, Mills, Hinshaw, Hubbell, and McCune, "with an agreement and understanding that said committee would purchase and procure, for the benefit and she presented to them for execution; but that they had refused, and still refused, to execute or deliver the same, or in any manner to comply with their agreement with her, to her damage five hundred dollars."

The complaint proceeded to allege that the defendant Sharon pretended to some right or interest in a portion (twenty-four acres) of said land of plaintiff; that said pretended claim was without foundation, and had been set up to prevent the said committee from executing the deed to her; and prayed that Sharon might be compelled to set forth the claim "which he pretends to have to said portion of said land by him claimed, and detained, and withheld, and from which said Sharon has kept the plaintiff ousted since November 18th, 1865, to her damage three hundred dollars." The complaint closed with a prayer for damages as alleged; for an order compelling the trustees to execute a deed to her; for a writ of restitution compelling Sharon to deliver up the portion of said land claimed by him, and for general relief.

The defendants interposed a general demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which was overruled. They then answered, and set up that defendant Sharon was, and had been since 1861, in the continuous, open, notorious, adverse, and exclusive possession of the twenty-four acres of land in controversy; that Sharon was one of the settlers, and possessed other land; that all his lands, including the twenty-four acres, were, and had been since 1861, inclosed by his fences; that he, and not the plaintiff, was entitled to the deed to the twenty-four acres piece; that a proper deed had been tendered to the plaintiff of all the land claimed by her, except said piece, and that she had refused it.

The cause was tried by the Court, and after much testimony as to possession of the twenty-four acres piece, conflicting in its character, resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff as prayed, but without damages. The defendants moved for a new trial, which being denied, they appealed from the judgment and order.

F. D. Colton, for Appellants.

I. The complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and is insufficient to sustain the judgment rendered, in this: that there is no allegation in said complaint as to the manner in which the defendants Hall, Mills, Hinshaw, Hubbell, and McCune were to execute the alleged trust, nor as to whom they were to convey the lands purchased, nor as to what particular lands they were to convey to the plaintiff; and further, if it be held that they were to convey an undivided interest, the judgment requiring them to convey a specific tract by metes and bounds is erroneous.

II. A new trial should be granted, upon the ground that the testimony shows that the terms of the trust under which said defendants Hall, Mills, Hinshaw, Hubbell, and McCune received the deed from the settlers, and purchased the title to the Blucher Rancho, were that said defendants, trustees, were to deed to each of the settlers, for whom they held in trust, that portion of the Blucher Rancho included within the fences of such settler, and that the land in controversy was not included within the fences of said plaintiff at any time, but was at time of suit brought, and for more than six years next preceding had been, included within the fences of defendant, John Sharon.

William Ross and O. W. Langdon, for Respondent.

It sufficiently appears from the averments of the complaint what the duty of the trustees was. It is plain that it was their duty to purchase the title opposed to the rights of the settlers. For whose benefit? Certainly for the benefit of the settlers. To what extent was this outstanding title opposed to the rights of the settlers? Certainly to the full extent, which to them pertained, had not such outstanding title existed. The doctrine taught in 2 Story's Eq. Jur., Sec. 1210, applies to this case; and from the facts stated there is a clear and definite conclusion of law in respect to the relation of the trustees to the settlers, and each of them. If the facts stated legally constitute a trust, it is sufficient. Here the plaintiff avers that she was in possession of a certain tract of land, which she describes; that she understood that another person had a valid title to it; that she ascertained it would require one thousand nine hundred and seven dollars and forty-five cents to purchase the title; that they received the money under an agreement to purchase it, and did with that money purchase it. Now, would it not be absurd to interpret such averments to mean that she expected them to purchase other, less, or more land than what she claimed by her description? What sufficiently appears in the pleading without a formal allegation, need not be expressly averred. (Co. Litt. 303; Yelv. 176, and note 2 N. Rep. 77. See, also, Practice Act, Sec. 70.)

As to the testimony, it was clearly shown that it was possession, and not merely inclosures by fences, that was to indicate the rights of the respective settlers. As to the facts of possession, the testimony of Sharon was contradicted in every important particular by a number of witnesses. The decisions, that a judgment will not under such circumstances be disturbed, are so numerous that it is unnecessary to recite them.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled; it was general — that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Under such a demurrer objection cannot be taken that the complaint is merely ambiguous. We think, too, that the nature of the trust, and the manner in which it was to be executed, sufficiently appears by the complaint.

The evident purpose of the parties was, that upon contributing a proportionate share of the purchase money expended in acquiring the outstanding title to the general tract, each of the settlers was to receive a conveyance of the premises in his possession—and while the extent of these several possessions would generally be indicated by fences marking their respective limits, it was, nevertheless, the fact of actual possession of a particular tract, with or without a fence, which would entitle the possessor to receive a deed from the trustees.

Upon the question of possession involved between the plaintiff and the defendant, Sharon, the evidence was not only substantially conflicting, within the general rule, but pointedly and to an unusual degree contradictory

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
JOSE AVILA.

SUFFICIENT CHARGE IN INDICTMENT FOR RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY.

A charge in an indictment, which alleges that the defendant received certain stolen property for his own gain, knowing that it was stolen property, is sufficient, without alleging that he received it both for his own gain and to prevent the owner from again possessing his property.

goods, in the cases in which it might be impossible to identify with certainty the thieves, as in cases of professional receivers of stolen goods.

SAME — ALLEGATION OF NAME OF THIEF UNNECESSARY.— In an indictment for receiving stolen property, the allegation of the name of the person who stole the goods, or that his name is unknown to the Grand Jury, is unnecessary and immaterial.

APPEAL from the County Court of Placer County.

The indictment against the defendant was as follows:

“Hosea Avila, alias Portuguese Joe, and Cataline Massalina, are accused by the Grand Jury of the County of Placer, in the State of California, by this indictment, of the crime of having for their own gain received certain personal property previously stolen, knowing the same to have been so obtained. The said Hosea Avila, alias Portuguese Joe, and Cataline Massalina, on or about the 29th day of January, A. D. 1871, at a place called Lyon’s Bridge, in the County of Placer, and State of California, one bob-tailed Texas red steer, with a dewlap, and of the value of forty dollars, and also one black steer, of the value of forty dollars; and all of said property being of the value of eighty dollars, and which said personal property was then and there the personal property of another, to wit: the personal property of S. S. Funk, E. H. Brooks, and L. Brooks, and which said personal property had been previously stolen by some person or persons to the Grand Jurors unknown, from the said S. S. Funk, E. H. Brooks, and L. Brooks; and the said Hosea Avila, alias Portuguese Joe, and Cataline Massalina, knowing the same to have been previously stolen and to so have been obtained, did then and there willfully and feloniously, for their own gain, receive said stolen property, knowing that the same was stolen property, and knowing that it had been previously stolen, and had been so obtained by the person or persons (whose names are unknown to the Grand Jury) from whom they received it, contrary,” etc.

Opinion of the Court—Rhodes, J.

The defendant demurred to the complaint, and the demurrer was overruled. At the trial, one Cornber testified that, as an officer, he had arrested one Trinidad Rodriguez in Placer County for stealing the cattle; that he was a witness against him on his trial in Marysville, and that Rodriguez was convicted. The defendant moved to dismiss the indictment, on the ground of variance between this testimony and the averment in the indictment that the name of the person who stole the property was unknown. The motion was denied. The defendant was convicted, and appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

W. H. Bullock, for Appellant, argued that the demurrer should have been sustained, because the indictment does not state that the defendant received the stolen property with intent to deprive the true owner of his property therein. (Hurill v. The State, 5 Humph. 68; Pelts v. The State, 3 Blackf. 28; Wheaton's Cr. Law, Sec. 1899.) He also argued that the Court erred in overruling the motion to dismiss the indictment, and cited Reed v. The State, 16 Ark. 499; 13 Ark. 712.

Attorney General Jo Hamilton, for Respondent.

The indictment charges the offense in the language of the statute, and that has always been held sufficient. (People v. Dolan, 9 Cal. 576; People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 191; People v. Rodriguez, 10 Cal. 50; People v. Thompson, 4 Cal. 238; People v. White, 34 Cal. 183.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The indictment charges the defendant with having feloniously received certain property, for his own gain, knowing that it was stolen property, etc. Section sixty-three of the Act concerning crimes and punishments provides that “Every person who, for his own gain, or to prevent the owner from again possessing his property, shall buy or receive stolen goods, * * * knowing the same to have been so obtained, shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned,” etc. The indictment charges the offense in the words of the statute; and according to the numerous authorities in this Court — some of which are cited by the Attorney General — that is a sufficient description of the offense. It is unnecessary to allege that the defendant received the stolen property both for his own gain and to prevent the owner from again possessing his property. The allegation of either intent is, under the statute, sufficient.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

The indictment states that the property had been stolen by some person or persons to the Grand Jury unknown; and it was proven at the trial that the person who stole the property had been convicted of the larceny before the indictment in this case was found. The defendant makes the point that there was a variance between the allegation and proof. The authorities cited by the Attorney General are to the point that an allegation of the character above mentioned is sufficient; but it is difficult to see how they have any application to the point presented by the defendant. Without discussing the question whether there was a variance, the point is disposed of by the rules of pleading in criminal cases. There is nothing in the section defining the crime, which, by necessary implication, requires that the name of the thief shall be alleged in the indictment, and it is, therefore unnecessary. It was obviously intended by the statute to provide for the punishment of the receivers of stolen goods in the numerous cases in which it might be impossible to identify, with certainty, the thieves — in cases of professional receivers of stolen goods. The allegation of the name of the person who stole the goods is, therefore, unnecessary and immaterial; and the allegation that his name is unknown to the Grand Jury is equally immaterial.

Points decided.

This is the rule laid down in all the cases which we have been able to find after a diligent search. (Commonwealth v. State, 11 Gray, 60; People v. Caswell, 21 Wend. 86; State v. Murphy, 9 Ala. 845; Rex v. Bush, Rus. & Ry. Cr. Cas. 372; Rex v. Jervis, 6 Car. & P. 156; 2 Bish. Crim. Proc. Sec. 927.)

The other points presented by the defendant are not well taken, and do not require any particular notice.

Judgment affirmed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF DANIEL UTZ, DECEASED.

WILL—OMISSION TO MENTION CHILDREN OF DECEASED CHILD.—Where a testator, in disposing of his property, used the expression, "to my children," and proceeded to name them, and the portion devised to each, but omitted any special mention of a devise to the children of a deceased daughter: held, that the use of the word "children" did not indicate a deliberate purpose to exclude the children of his deceased daughter, and that, under section seventeen of the Statute of Wills, they were entitled to a full share of the estate, as if the deceased had died intestate.

DEVISE "TO MY DAUGHTER AND TO HER CHILDREN" GIVES ESTATE IN COMMON.—Where a devise was made, "To my youngest daughter, Margaret Utz, and to her children:" held, that Margaret's children became devisees as well as herself, and that the devise passed an estate in common to all.

RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE NOT APPLICABLE TO A DEVISE TO A MOTHER AND HER CHILDREN.—The "rule in Shelley's Case," when applied to wills, is confined to cases in which, after a freehold is devised to one, the remainder is to go in terms to the "heirs" of the first taker, and does not apply to a devise to a mother and to her "children."

DEVISE TO "MARGARET UTZ AND TO HER CHILDREN," ON CONDITION THAT
• MARGARET TAKE CARE OF TESTATOR.—Where a devise was made "to Margaret Utz and to her children," on condition that Margaret would take care of the testator during his lifetime, which she did: held, that there was nothing in the condition to show an intention on the part of the testator that Margaret alone should have the benefit of the devise.

Argument for Appellant.

APPEAL from the Probate Court of Santa Clara County.

This was an appeal by Margaret Hartman, the daughter of Daniel Utz, deceased, from a decree of the Probate Court, distributing his estate. Her objections to it were, that the children of her deceased sister, Mrs. Harwig, were admitted to share in the estate, and that her own children were declared tenants in common with herself under the will.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

J. Alexander Yoell, for Appellant.

It appears by the will itself that the omission to provide for the Harwigs was intentional, because in the introductory clause the testator declares his intention to give his property to his "children" only, and then specially charges his daughter Margaret, with the care of his person until his death, for which consideration she is to receive her devise; and she having fulfilled the condition, the estate vested in her absolutely in fee upon the death of the testator. This view is not in conflict with the law laid down in Estate of Garraud, 35 Cal. 336.

The devise to Margaret created not a tenancy in common with her children, but an estate in fee in her. The question is, was the word "children" used as a word of limitation or as a word of purchase. The introductory clause shows that it was the intention of the testator to give his property to his "children," without mentioning his grandchildren. The whole idea of the devise was to Margaret upon the condition of her rendering him services which her children could not do, and if she should have many children before her father's death it would result in her getting a miserably small amount of property — grossly inadequate to the value of her services. The testator used no apt words indicating an intention to create a tenancy in common. If the wording had been to "Margaret and to her children, provided they (instead of she) will take care of me, share and share alike," or other apt words, then undoubtedly they would share as tenants in common; but there are no words importing, nor from a careful spelling of each word in the will can an intent be inferred, that they were to share alike.

The words "and to her children" were intended to refer to Margaret's "heirs," and to be words of limitation and not of purchase. (See 6 Coke, 16; 3 Wend. 511; Wood v. Baron, 1 East, 135; Schoonmaker v. Sheehy, 3 Hill, 165; Jackson v. Babcock, 12 Johns. 393; Helmer v. Shoemaker, 22 Wend. 136.)

The rule in Shelly's Case, that the words "children" are words of limitation, is the rule in this State. It has been so expressly declared. (Norris v. Hensley, 27 Cal. 439.)

Bodley & Rankin, for Respondents Harwig.

We have no interest in that portion of the estate set apart to Margaret Hartman and her children, whether it goes to the mother alone, or to the mother and her children as tenants in common. As to the interest set apart to the Harwig children, whom we do represent, the action of the Court below was clearly correct under section seventeen of the Statute of Wills. It does not appear from the will that the omission to name the issue of the deceased daughter of testator was with the intention of excluding them; nor does it appear that he intended to exclude them. The section of the Statute of Wills referred to has been discussed and construed by this Court in the matter of the Estate of Garraud, 35 Cal. 336, and a different construction and meaning given it than that claimed for it by appellant; and it would be a work of supererogation for us to attempt further to discuss it.

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, J.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The material portions of the will of the deceased are as follows:

"I will give, and bequeath, and order my executors to give after my death to my children the following property, to wit: To my eldest daughter, Elizabeth Utz, * * * the sum of fifty dollars * * *;" to my son, Daniel Utz, the sum of five dollars; and to my youngest daughter, Margaret Utz, and to her children, I will and bequeath * * * all my property, moneys, lands, furniture, etc., that will be left after my death," etc.

The testator had another daughter, who was deceased at the time he published his will, leaving two children, the Harwigs, surviving her, and also surviving their grandfather, the testator.

The latter omitted in his will to provide for these grandchildren, nor are they in anywise mentioned therein.

First — The Court below held, and we think correctly, that the Harwig infants were together entitled to the one fourth of the estate after the payment of the specific legacies, etc., being the same share which they would have received had the deceased died generally intestate. There is nothing in the point that the testator in the outset having mentioned his "children" as the intended recipients of his bounty should, therefore, be considered as intending the exclusion of these grandchildren. The Statute of Wills (section seventeen) enacts that in case the testator shall have omitted to provide for his child, or for the issue of his deceased child, such omitted child or issue shall have the same share in his estate as in case of general intestacy, "unless it shall appear that such omission was intentional."

We think that it would be attributing an unwarranted degree of significance to the, perhaps, fortuitous expression "children," used in the introductory clause of the will, should we infer therefrom the existence of a deliberate purpose, actually in the mind of the testator to wholly exclude the children of his deceased daughter from a share of his estate.

Second — The other question involved concerns the devise to Margaret and her children. Its language has been given already, and it is argued that, by construction of law, the estate which passed thereunder vested solely in the mother. This view is based in the main upon the rule of law known as the rule in Shelly's Case. But that rule, when applied to wills, is confined to cases in which after a freehold interest is devised to one, the remainder is to go in terms to the heirs of the first taker. In such cases the word "heirs" is considered as importing a limitation upon the estate of the first taker only, and not as denoting that the latter are themselves to take as purchasers. Here, however, the devise is to Margaret and her "children," and neither the reason upon which the rule itself was founded, nor the adjudged cases which support it embrace such a case as this. The word "issue" has, indeed, been sometimes held to operate in this respect like the word "heirs," but only in those cases in which it is used as synonymous with the latter word. If, therefore, by "issue" it appear that the testator meant "children," then the rule has no application. (Genet v. Lynn, 31 Penn. St. R. 94.)

A devise of real estate to one and his children operated at common law to vest in the devisees a joint estate (Oates v. Jackson, 2 Strange, 1171), and under our statute (Acts 1855, 171), it vests an estate in common in the devisees.

Third — But reliance is placed in the fact that the devise to Margaret and her children was upon condition that she would take care of the testator and would stay with him during his lifetime, which she did. It is argued that as the condition only mentioned her and not the children, and as she alone could and did perform it, the intention of the testator must have been that she alone should have the benefit of the devise.

It has not been suggested that any rule of law forbids a devise to three persons upon condition to be performed by one of them only, or even by a stranger; and we have seen already that the devise here was in terms to her children as well as to herself, and dependent upon the performance of the same condition as to all. That performance, it is true, was to be by her alone; so the testator had directed. Upon her failure in that respect the children must have been excluded. It is argued now that the same result must befall them, because she did perform. In case of her non-performance, the interest intended for them would have remained in the estate of the testator for purposes of distribution; by the very fact of performance, however, that interest is now claimed to be vested solely in the mother, and to be disposed of as her own. Thus, between the directions of the will on the one hand, and the position of the counsel for the appellant, if it be maintained, on the other, the children would receive nothing in any event, and they might as well have been omitted by the testator altogether. We think, however, that such a construction of the devise would violate the intention of the testator.

We are of opinion that the judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Chief Justice SPRAGUE did not participate in the foregoing decision.

CHARLES MAIN, E. H. WINCHESTER, AND THOMAS
R. HAYES v. J. TAPPENER AND J. R. HOWARD.

BOTH SERVICE AND FILING OF ATTACHMENT NECESSARY.—To complete the service of an attachment of real property, under section one hundred and twenty-five of the Practice Act, both the service of the attachment on the occupant, or posting on the premises, and the filing of it with the County Recorder, are essential.

SERVICE OF ATTACHMENT TO PRECEDE FILING.—The service of posting of the attachment must precede the filing of it.

DEFECTIVE ATTACHMENT WILL NOT OVERREACH CONVEYANCE TO PURCHASER IN GOOD FAITH.—An attachment of real property, if served by first filing with the Recorder, will not overreach a conveyance made by the owner to a purchaser in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, intermediate the filing of the attachment and the service of a copy on the occupant, although the service be made with all reasonable dispatch.

RELATION WILL NOT CURE DEFECTIVE ATTACHMENT.—Where a writ of attachment of real property was filed with the County Recorder, and was served a few hours afterwards: held, that the doctrine of relation would not apply to make the attachment date from the filing.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, Contra Costa County.

The premises in controversy were, on and prior to the 13th of April, 1869, owned by Thomas Parr, and were standing on the records of Contra Costa County in his name. On that day the plaintiffs in this action commenced a suit against Parr for merchandise furnished him, and caused a writ of attachment of the premises to be placed in the hands of the Sheriff. On the 14th of April, 1869, at nine o'clock A. M., the Sheriff filed a copy of the writ with the County Recorder, with his certificate that the premises had been attached by him; and on the same day he proceeded to the premises, twenty-five miles distant from the Recorder's office, and at half-past twelve o'clock posted a copy of the attachment on the premises, and at the same time served the writ on Parr by delivering him a copy. At eleven o'clock of the same day Parr executed and delivered a deed of the property to J. R. Howard, the defendant here. In the action against Parr, judgment by default was taken, and under an execution issued April 30th, 1869, the Sheriff sold the premises to the plaintiffs here. The property was not redeemed, and on the 5th of January, 1870, it was deeded to the plaintiffs by the Sheriff. They brought this action to recover the possession. On the trial it appeared that the defendant Howard purchased the property in good faith, paying four hundred dollars for it. Judgment was rendered for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed.

Thomas A. Brown, for Appellants.

The filing by the Sheriff in the Recorder's office of a copy of the writ of attachment in the action of Main & Winchester v. Parr, with a description of the property attached, was sufficient to operate as notice to third parties of the lien of the attachment, and the defendant Howard's deed was taken with this notice. (Hitt. 6072; Sec. 125 Practice Act; Messick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 297; Chamberlain v. Bell, 7 Cal. 292; Ritter v. Scannel, 11 Cal. 249; Wheaton v. Neville, 19 Cal. 44; Page v. Rogers, 31 Cal. 301; Johnson v. Stagg, 2 Johnson, opinion by Kent, Ch. J. 522, 524; Porkist v. Alexander et al., 1 Johnson Ch. Reports, 398.)

The appellants contend that the doctrine of relation applies to the acts done by an officer in levying an attachment on real estate, and that the attachment of Main et als. v. Parr, under consideration, was levied at nine o'clock A. M. on the fourteenth of April, the time when the Sheriff filed a copy of the writ, together with a description of the property attached, with the Recorder. That the other acts done by the Sheriff in completing the levy of the writ, to wit: serving a copy of the writ on Parr, the occupant, and posting a copy on the premises at thirty minutes past twelve o'clock, in judgment of law, are considered as having been done at the time the first act was done. (Lark v. Borner, 4

P. B. Ladd, for Respondent.

As to the question of the doctrine of relation, the facts of the case show that there is nothing to relate to, and that if, as they claim, they had one act required by statute performed before defendants' deed was made and delivered, the doctrine of relation does not apply to the prejudice of strangers or third parties having any right without notice. In the cases of Jackson v. Bard, 4 Johnson, 230, and Heath v. Ross, 12 Johnson, 140, the Court distinctly say that the doctrine of relation being a fiction of law for the furtherance of justice, is not admitted to the prejudice of third persons, not parties or privies having any right.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The only question on this appeal is, whether an attachment of real property, standing on the records of the county in the name of defendant, and which was served by first filing a copy of it with the County Recorder, together with a description of the property attached, and by afterwards, with all reasonable dispatch, serving a copy on the occupant of the premises, will overreach a conveyance, made by the defendant to a purchaser in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, intermediate the filing of the copy with the Recorder and the service of a copy on the occupant. Section one hundred and twenty-five of the code provides that an attachment of real property standing on the records of the county in the name of the defendant shall be served "by leaving a copy of the writ with an occupant thereof, or, if there be no occupant, by posting a copy in a conspicuous place thereon, and filing a copy, together with a description of the property attached, with the Recorder of the county." To complete the service and create a lien, both the acts required by the statute must be performed. Neither the filing with the Recorder, without the service or posting of a copy, nor the performance of the latter acts without the filing will amount to a service of the attachment and create a lien on the property. The performance of both acts is essential to create the lien. (Wheaton v. Neville, 19 Cal. 44.) But in addition to this the requisite acts must be performed in the order in which they are named in the statute — that is to say, the service on the occupant or the posting on the premises must precede the filing of a copy with the Recorder, which latter act was intended to give notice to third persons dealing with the property that it had been attached. It was only then for the first time that it had in fact been attached; and if the copy be first filed with the Recorder, and a copy be afterwards served on the occupant or posted on the premises if there be no occupant, it is clear that during the interval which elapsed between the filing and a service of a copy on the occupant or the posting, as the case may be, the filing of the copy could not impart notice of a fact which did not exist, to wit: that the property had been attached; for it could not be, in fact, attached in any case until after the service on the occupant or the posting on the premises. It is obvious, therefore, that the statute intended that the service or posting of the copy should precede the filing of a copy with the Recorder, "together with a description of the property attached." The property was then for the first time attached; and this was the fact of which the filing was intended to give notice. I am, therefore, of opinion that the purchaser from the defendant in the attachment suit took the title free from the alleged lien.

The doctrine of relation invoked by the plaintiffs has no application to the question involved here; for, as we have already seen, the filing of the copy with the Recorder could, in no event, operate as a constructive notice to Howard unless preceded by the delivery of a copy of the writ to the occupant or the posting of the notice upon the premises, if unoccupied.

JOHN C. BYERS v. CHARLES H. NEAL.

RECOVERY IN EJECTMENT AGAINST PRE-EMPTIONER AFTER PAYMENT—

PATENT NOT A NEW TITLE.—Where Neal, being in possession of public land, made proof and payment therefor under the United States preemption laws; and thereafter Tallmadge brought an ejectment suit against him, and recovered judgment on the merits, and was placed in possession; and afterwards Neal obtained the United States patent for the land: Held, that the patent did not constitute a new title in Neal, but was merely a formal assurance of the estate he had already acquired by proof and payment, and that the effect of the recovery by Tallmadge was to estop Neal from denying that Tallmadge had the better title.

EJECTMENT ON SHERIFF'S DEED—WANT OF OFFICIAL AUTHORITY AS

LEGAL DEFENSE.—In ejectment on a Sheriff's deed, where the general issue is well pleaded, the fact that the deed was executed after the Sheriff's authority had terminated, would be a good legal defense, for the reason that the existence of official authority in the officer to execute the deed is of the very substance of the plaintiff's case; but if such defense for any reason be not made and judgment go against defendant, there is an estoppel thereby created against him, which as long as the judgment itself remains undisturbed, must continue as one of its inseparable consequences.

JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT AS ESTOPPEL.—A judgment for plaintiff in ejectment, when the title has been brought directly in issue, concludes the defendant against setting up in a subsequent proceeding any mere legal defense which he might have made in such suit, and among others a defense that plaintiff's title there rested upon a Sheriff's deed, made after the Sheriff's authority had terminated, of which fact defendant was then ignorant.

'APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

Argument for Appellant.

This was an action to have the defendant adjudged to hold the legal title of one hundred and thirty-seven acres of land in San Joaquin County, acquired under a patent of the United States, in trust for the plaintiff; to compel him to convey the same to plaintiff; to enjoin defendant from conveying or transferring to any other person; to quiet plaintiff's title; and for general relief. Defendant, among other defenses set up, by way of cross-complaint, that plaintiff had been let into possession under a judgment in ejectment founded upon a Sheriff's deed; that such deed was executed after the Sheriff's authority to make it had terminated; that he was ignorant of such want of authority at the time the ejectment case was tried, and praying that said deed might be set aside and declared null and void.

The cross-complaint was dismissed; there was a judgment for plaintiff as prayed; and defendant's motion for a new trial having been overruled, he appealed from the judgment and order.

J. H. Budd, for Appellant.

The title of defendant, acquired under the patent from the United States, could not have been acquired by the purchaser at a Sheriff's sale of the land, made before the issuing of the patent. A right acquired under the United States pre-emption laws cannot be assigned or transferred prior to the issuing of a patent. (Act of 1841, Sec. 12.) The primary disposition of the public lands is in the United States. (Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 33 Cal. 488.) A Sheriff cannot be the agent of a person to convey title, which the party himself had no legal title to convey.

The record in Tallmadge v. Neal was not conclusive as to Neal's rights as against the deed under which plaintiff claims. A record is not conclusive as to the truth of any allegation not directly in issue. (1 Greenl. Ev., Sec. 528; Holland v. Croft, 8 Gray, 162; Arnold v. Arnold, 17 Pick. 7; Vose v.

Argument for Respondent.

Morton, 4 Cush. 27; Manny v. Harris, 2 Johns. 24.) A judgment in ejectment is not an estoppel as to new matters occurring after its rendition, which give the defendant a title. (Mahony v. Van Winkle, 33 Cal. 488.) A deed improperly given by a Sheriff may be set aside on motion or bill in equity. (7 Wend. 83.) Plaintiff's grantor was a party to the fraud of the Sheriff in executing the second conveyance, and plaintiff took the claim tainted with the fraud. Defendant is not estopped from claiming against plaintiff, the same relief from this fraud, that he would have been entitled to against Tallmadge, in case no conveyance to plaintiff had been made.

Hall & Montgomery, for Respondent.

The record in Tallmadge v. Neal was conclusive evidence against defendant of all the facts therein adjudicated, and among them that the Sheriff levied upon and sold the land in controversy, and conveyed it to the plaintiff's grantor. An inspection of that record renders it perfectly clear that the judgment, execution, and sale thereunder were facts directly in issue; for, as no other deraignment of title appears, there could not have been a recovery if the proof had failed upon these points. The judgment was founded on affirmative answers to the issues presented, and had no support without them. (Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 490; Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 176; Coit v. Tracy, 8 Conn. 207.) These facts are not the less conclusively established against the defendant by the former judgment, even though he did not choose to litigate them in that action. If he might then have controverted them, and did not, he is still estopped from proving to the contrary now. The rule is that the judgment is not only final as to the subject matter thereby determined, but also as to every other matter which the parties might have litigated in the cause, and which they might have had decided. (Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266.)

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, J.

As to Neal's position to the land, after his proof and payment as a preëmtor, the Government held the naked legal title in trust for him, and he had an assignable and vendible interest in the land. (Hutton v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 475; Thredgill v. Pintard, 12 How. 24.) By the sale and conveyance to Tallmadge the latter was substituted to and acquired all the right, title, interest, and claim of Neal, and the right to the legal title to be derived by and through the patent. The deed of the Sheriff was equivalent to a conveyance by Neal himself of all his right, title, interest, and claim, and substituted the grantee for himself in his then relation to the land, and the legal title outstanding in the Government. (Landes v. Brant, 10 How. 348; Bludworth v. Lake, 88 Cal. 255.) On receiving the patent Neal became the trustee of the title conveyed thereby for the use and benefit of plaintiff.

[The following opinion was rendered at the October Term, 1871.]

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The fact that Neal was in the possession of the premises in controversy, as a preëmtor, when they were sold and conveyed by the Sheriff, under the judgment rendered against him, will not defeat the title of the purchaser at the Sheriff's sale—Neal having already made his full payment to the Government as such preëmtor. Tallmadge, from whom Byers derives his title, was the grantee of the Sheriff, and, before he conveyed to Byers, brought an action against Neal, who was then in possession, for the recovery of the premises, in which action he alleged that he was the owner and entitled to the possession. Upon this allegation issue was taken by Neal, and judgment rendered in favor of Tallmadge for the recovery of the premises, with damages and costs, under which judgment Neal was subsequently removed, and Tallmadge placed in possession by the Sheriff.

It will be seen that the title to the premises was thus brought directly in issue; and the judgment then rendered must conclude Neal in favor of Byers, as the privy of Tallmadge, upon that question.

The defenses which Neal now attempts to interpose, though they might have defeated the former action, had they been established then, cannot avail now.

Judgment affirmed.

[A rehearing having been afterwards granted on petition of defendant, the following opinion was rendered at this, the January Term, 1872.]

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

In November, 1863, Neal was a settler upon certain public lands in San Joaquin County, being the southwest fractional quarter of section thirty-two, township fourth north, range seven east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and had made proof and payment therefor under the preëmption laws of the United States.

In 1865 Tallmadge brought an action against Neal in the District Court at Stockton, in which he alleged himself to be the owner of these premises, and in that action Neal appeared and pleaded the general issue — the pleadings not being verified — and upon the trial judgment was rendered in favor of Tallmadge, and he was placed in possession of the premises.

1. The effect of the recovery, under the pleadings in that action, is that Neal is thereby estopped to deny that Tallmadge then had the better title to the premises, and this estoppel must preclude him in favor of Tallmadge, and also in favor of Byers, the subsequent vendee of Tallmadge, to deny the validity of the title in their hands, until he shall have himself acquired a new title or estate in the premises.

The patent issued to him on the 20th day of May, 1869, by the authorities of the United States, does not constitute a new title in him in that sense. It is merely a formal assurance of the estate which he had already acquired by the proof and payment in November, 1863.

2. Tallmadge was adjudged to be the owner and he recovered in the action he brought against Neal, as having acquired the interest of the latter in the premises through a judgment, execution, levy, and a Sheriff's deed of the premises made to himself on the 14th day of November, 1864. Byers, now in possession of the premises as privy of Tallmadge, having commenced the present action against Neal under section two hundred and fifty-four of the Practice Act, to quiet his title, the latter alleges that this deed of the Sheriff to Tallmadge was void, as having been made without any authority in that officer. He avers in his answer, and offered — but was not permitted — to prove that, in point of fact, the Sheriff levied upon, advertised, sold, gave certificate of purchase, and on the 8th day of August, 1864, delivered a deed to Tallmadge, conveying to the latter the fractional north half of said section thirty-two, and other premises — not being any part of the premises here in controversy — and that the Sheriff's deed of November 14th, 1864, was procured by Tallmadge from that officer several months after his authority had terminated by the delivery of the deed of the preceding August. In this connection he offered to show that he was ignorant of this fact at the trial of the action of Tallmadge against him in 1865.

These matters, showing, as they would, an utter want of authority in the officer to make or deliver the deed of November fourteenth, rendered that deed a nullity — and, under the general issue pleaded in the Tallmadge suit, might have been availed of as a legal defense. This proposition is too clear to require argument or illustration in its support. A party who relies upon a Sheriff's deed as a basis of recovery in an action of ejectment must in the first instance make it appear that the officer was clothed with power to sell and convey the premises; this is necessary to the validity of the conveyance in point of law to transfer the title; the existence of the official authority in that respect is of the very substance of the plaintiff's case in such an action, and being necessarily in controversy under the general issue pleaded, the defendant is undoubtedly at liberty to countervail the case of the plaintiff in that respect by showing that the officer never had such authority, or that it had in some way ceased before the delivery of the deed, and is not to be driven to an equitable defense for that purpose.

The judgment in the Tallmadge case concluded Neal upon every mere legal defense which he might have made there, and this defense among them. The applicability of this rule is not affected by the circumstance either that Neal was at the time really ignorant of the fact constituting the defense. How much or how little he knew upon the subject is immaterial in this connection, and would be so even if the defense had involved matters about which he would be less likely to know than the sale of his lands by the officers of the law. Had he subsequently discovered it in time, he might have moved for a new trial under the statute upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, or if discovered too late for that purpose, he might have made it the subject of a bill in equity to obtain a new trial; the motion in the one case, or the bill in the other, would have been aimed directly at the judgment itself, and, if maintained, would have vacated it, and along with it would have gotten rid of the incident estoppel, which, however, so long as the judgment itself remains undisturbed, must continue to be one of its inseparable consequences.

These are the general views we entertained at the first hearing of the cause, and the reargument has not changed them in any respect, though we have here given them at greater length than in the former opinion.

Judgment affirmed.

JOHN BARRY, WESLEY WOOD, HENRY MUTZ,
AND THEODOSIO CARRILLO v. THE COUNTY OF SONOMA.

EVIDENCE IN EJECTMENT AGAINST A COUNTY FOR LAND CLAIMED TO HAVE BEEN DEDICATED.—In an action against Sonoma County to recover land, claimed by the county to have been dedicated to public use, the plaintiffs offered to prove by C. that he had been employed by the Board of Supervisors to look after the fences and keep them in repair, and was so engaged at the commencement of the action; and that in performing this service he was acting as the servant of the county, employed for that purpose: Held, that the evidence was admissible as tending, in some degree, to establish the possession of the county.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Sonoma.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

A. P. Overton, District Attorney, and William McCullough, for Respondent.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The action is ejectment to recover a portion of a block of land, which the defendant claims to be a public square, dedicated to public use, in the Town of Santa Rosa. At the trial the plaintiffs put one Carrillo on the stand as a witness, and offered to prove by him that before the commencement of this suit the witness was employed by the Board of Supervisors of Sonoma County to take charge of and keep up the fences around the property described in the complaint; that he was so employed to keep the same in repair and look after it for the County of Sonoma; that he was thus employed by the Board of Supervisors of said county as their servant at the commencement of this suit. To the admission of this testimony the defendant objected, on the ground that it was irrelevant and incompetent; and the Court having sustained the objection, the plaintiffs excepted, and this ruling is assigned as error. The plaintiffs introduced no other evidence to prove that the defendant was in possession at the commencement of the action, which fact was put in issue by the answer. Thereupon the Court granted a nonsuit, on the sole ground that the plaintiffs had failed to prove possession in the defendant.

The evidence which was excluded, standing alone, certainly did not establish in a very satisfactory manner the defendant's possession. Nevertheless, it was neither irrelevant nor incompetent, and clearly tended, in some degree, to prove the possession in the defendant. As I understand the offer, it was to show that the witness had been previously employed by the Board of Supervisors to look after the fences and keep them in repair, and was so engaged at the commencement of the action; and that in performing this service he was acting as the servant of the County of Sonoma, employed for that purpose. These acts of dominion, if proved, would have tended, in some degree, to establish the possession, and the evidence should have, therefore, been admitted.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

HENRY B. PLATT v. JOHN JONES, HENRY NEILSON, WILLIAM BIHLER, ANDREW FISK, JOHN C. FISK, M. T. McCLELLAN, ANDREW KNIP, CHRISTIAN STENGLE, M. V. B. MORIN, NELSON MORIN, AND JOSIAH MORIN.

CONSTRUCTION OF DEED—DESCRIPTION.—Where a deed described a portion of the German Rancho "beginning at the distance of one and a fourth leagues, Spanish measure, from the northwest end of said rancho at a point on the shore of the Pacific Ocean; thence running a direct line to the northern boundary of said rancho one league; thence along said northern boundary one league, Spanish measure; thence in a southern direction to the Pacific Ocean, so as to include the improvements and house of said Hugal, and to include a quantity of land equal to one Spanish league;" and all the lines were agreed on except the third call "in a southern direction:" Held, that this line must deflect from a right angle with the northern line to such an extent as to include one league, and as much more as might be necessary to include Hugal's improvements, and that parol evidence was not admissible to vary such construction of the deed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action of ejectment to recover possession of a portion of the German Rancho, in Sonoma County. It was originally commenced in the name of Edson Adams as plaintiff, in the Twelfth District Court, but subsequently Platt was substituted as plaintiff in place of Adams, and the cause was transferred for trial to the Court from which this appeal was taken.

The German Rancho is a tract of about four leagues of land, less than a league wide and more than four leagues long, lying between the Gualala River and the Pacific Ocean, having a general northwest and southeast direction, and being in form nearly a parallelogram. The plaintiff claimed a portion to the southeast of a line commencing on the ocean two leagues and a quarter southeasterly from the northwesterly corner of the ranch, and running thence at right angles to the general shore line northeasterly to the Gualala River. The deed under which he claimed was, however, subsequent to a deed from the original owner of the ranch to one Frederick Hugal, containing the description given in the head note above. The line, as claimed by plaintiff, would cut off a portion of the land claimed by defendants to have been conveyed by the deed to Hugal; and the true location of the southerly or southeasterly line therefore became a question. On the trial it appears to have been admitted that the Hugal deed commenced at a point on the ocean shore one league and a quarter southeast of the mouth of the Gualala River and ran thence northeasterly to the river, thence southeasterly along the river one league. From the end of the call along the river the plaintiff claimed that the third call ran at right angles to the general course of the river to the ocean, a location which would make the Hugal land much less than a league; whereas defendants claimed that the call deflected at an obtuse angle and ran to the ocean in such a manner as to include a full league, and all of Hugal's improvements. The Court below seems to have regarded the Hugal deed as containing a latent ambiguity, and admitted parol testimony, against defendant's objections, of conversations at the time of the drawing of the Hugal deed, and tending to show the intention to have been to make such southern line the same as was claimed by plaintiff. There was a judgment for plaintiff as claimed by him; and, a motion for new trial having been overruled, defendants appealed from the judgment and order.

W. H. Patterson and C. H. Sawyer, for Appellants.

There is no ambiguity on the face of the deed to Hugal. The calls are definite, certain, and can be located on the ground from the description. The point of commencement is fixed on the ocean; thence the first call runs in a direct line to the northern boundary of said rancho one league. A direct line is the shortest line, and of course it must be at right angles from the starting point, and would take the survey to the river, because that is the boundary opposite to the southern boundary, and it also corresponds in distance, being only one hundred chains less than a league. (Allen v. Kingsbury, 16 Pick. 235; Northrop v. Sumney, 27 Barb. 196.) The next call is "along the northern boundary one league." The description in terms does not say whether up or down the river, whether to the right or left; but the language following does determine because, after running one league, the survey is to run "in a southern direction to the Pacific Ocean so as to include the improvements and house of said Hugal, and to include a quantity of land equal to one Spanish league." It could only include such improvements and house and such league by running the second call up the river. The third call is also certain, because the quantity of land to be included is as much a part of the deed and calls as Hugal's house and improvements. (See Doe v. Vallejo, 29 Cal. 385.) No call is repugnant to another, nor any part ambiguous or doubtful; and in such case all other rules of construction are to be rejected. (Pratt v. Woodward, 32 Cal. 219; Dodge v. Walley, 22 Cal. 324.) There was, therefore, error in the Court below in admitting parol evidence to explain the deed or show the declarations or intent of the parties, other than as the same is to be gathered from the plain, unambiguous language employed in the deed itself. (3 Washburn on R. P. 347; Seaman v. Hogeboom, 21 Barb. 398.)

McCullough & Boyd, and W. W. Crane, Jr., for Respondent.

The description in the Hugal deed, taken alone, could not be located. The vice of the location claimed is that it assumes that the Gualala River, which is on the east, constitutes the northern boundary, and also in assuming that the second line must necessarily run southeasterly along the river. But the necessity of introducing parol evidence to locate the improvements of Hugal, demonstrates that there is a latent ambiguity in the description. How is it possible to run the second and third lines without ascertaining, in the first instance, where these improvements were. There is, therefore, enough of doubt to justify the adoption of the rule given by this Court in Walsh v. Hill, 38 Cal. 487, and Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 162; see, also, Vance v. Fore, 24 Cal. 436; Kimball v. Semple, 25 Cal. 442; Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 89; Saunders v. Clark, 29 Cal. 304; Reamer v. Nesmith, 34 Cal. 626; 36 Cal. 122, 607; 38 Cal. 443, 483; Salmon v. Wilson, 41 Cal. 595; Irwin v. Towne, 42 Cal. 331.

Assuming, then, that there was a latent ambiguity in the deed, as to the location of the Hugal tract, the extrinsic circumstances shown by the testimony clearly demonstrate that the parties intended that the southern boundary should be a line commencing on the shore of the ocean, a little south of Hugal's house, and running thence a straight northeasterly course to the Gualala River. The intention was to convey to him one league in a square form; that is, in a tract, each of whose sides measured a league, one of which sides was the ocean, and one the river, the remaining two being at right angles to the ocean and river; and it was upon this construction that the Court below proceeded.

W. H. Patterson and C. H. Sawyer, for Appellants, in reply.

The fact that parol evidence is necessary to establish the possession of Hugal's improvements, does not make a latent ambiguity. If so, every deed contains a latent ambiguity, for the most definite landmark must be shown to exist as described in the deed. It is plain that the parties intended that Hugal should have a league of land and his house and improvements; but they did not know exactly how wide the tract was, and therefore adopted this description. If the tract had proved more than a league wide this line would have been deflected up the coast, and Hugal would have had less than a league on the ocean. So, having proven less than a league in width, it must run down the coast for quantity. But if a latent ambiguity did exist the parol evidence should have been confined to the ambiguous matter, which, in this case, is claimed to be the doubt as to the improvements. This would not justify the admission of parol evidence as to other matters, and did not justify the evidence that this line was intended to run parallel to the first line, instead of so as to include a league of land according to the plain language of the deed.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

We are of opinion that the third call in the deed from Rufus to Hugal, in these words: "Thence in a southern direction to the Pacific Ocean, so as to include the improvements and house of said Hugal, and to include a quantity of land equal to one Spanish league"—imports that in approaching the ocean, the line must deflect from a right angle to such an extent as, at all events, will include one league of land in superficial area, and so much more than that quantity as may be necessary to include the improvements of Hugal as they existed in September, 1847. This results by construction of the terms of the deed itself, and parol evidence is not admissible to vary it in that respect.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

RHODES, J., specially concurring:

The first call in the deed from Rufus to Hugal commences at a point on the Pacific Ocean, and runs thence to a boundary of the rancho, called in the deed the northern boundary.

Opinion of Rhodes, J., specially concurring.

The parties agree as to this line; and it accords with the construction it gives to the deed. The boundary line which is intersected by that line is the only boundary line which that line will meet; and it will, therefore, be construed as the boundary line intended by the parties, though it is the northeastern rather than the northern boundary. Both parties agree that the second line runs along the northern boundary line southeasterly, and that its length is required to be exactly one league. I am not prepared to say that that is the true construction of the deed, so far as respects the length of the line; but as the parties agree in their construction, I accept it as correct. The deed requires the third line to be so run as to include within the boundaries of the tract conveyed the improvements of Hugal and one Spanish league of land. That is to say, the lines must include one league, and more than that area, should it be necessary to do so in order to inclose the improvements of Hugal. This is imperatively required by the proper construction of the deed. There is no latent ambiguity in the deed as to the quantity of land conveyed; and parol evidence is not admissible to show that a less quantity was intended to be conveyed, or that the third line should be run so as to inclose an area less than one square league.

I concur in the judgment.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA ~~EX~~
REL. JOHN L. GREEN, v. PABLO DE LA GUERRA, JUDGE OF THE FIRST JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

RIGHT OF A PARTY TO HAVE A CAUSE TRIED.—When two actions are pending at the same time, and between the same parties, to recover possession of the same tract of land, and in the absence of the plaintiff one is tried and judgment rendered for the defendant, and the defendant then pleads the judgment as a bar in the other action, the plaintiff is still entitled to have the other action tried.

REFUSAL TO TRY A CAUSE.—An order made by the Court, in a cause, refusing to try the same, is not a judgment from which an appeal will lie.

WRIT OF MANDATE.—A writ of mandate will be issued to compel a judge to proceed and try a cause, when he refuses to do so.

THIS was an application to the Supreme Court for a writ of mandate.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

B. S. Brooks, for Relator.

John L. Green brought his action of ejectment against Jarvis Swift for land in Santa Barbara. Defendant in his answer sets up a former judgment in a suit between the same parties for the same cause of action wherein the defendant had judgment. The issue thus joined, it is undoubtedly the duty of the Court to try and determine and to find the facts in respect thereto, and his conclusions of law (if a finding is requested), and thereupon to render judgment as to him shall appear in accordance with law. We moved that the Court proceed to the trial of this issue then or at some future day, but the Court refused to try it at all. The answer in this case admits the fact that the Court did refuse to try it and admits the reason assigned by us, that is—because he knew the answer was true—"believed it would be a waste of time and a hardship to the defendant to go through the useless ceremony of another trial of the same cause of action while the said judgment existed therein." That may be a good reason for filing a finding and rendering judgment against the plaintiff, but clearly is no reason for refusing to try the cause. Until he does try it and render final judgment we cannot file our statement and bring before this Court, on appeal, the question whether the alleged judgment is a bar. We merely desire that the Judge be directed to go on to a trial of the cause.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an application by the plaintiff for a peremptory mandate to be directed to the Judge of the First Judicial District, in and for the County of Santa Barbara, to compel him to proceed to hear and determine the action of Green v. Swift, alleged to be pending in that Court. The following facts are disclosed by the petition and answer, viz: That Green commenced an action against Swift, in the usual form, in the District Court for Santa Barbara County, to recover the possession of a parcel of land in that county, in which action issue was regularly joined; that another action of a similar character and to recover the possession of the same land, was commenced by Green against Swift, and was pending at the same time in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District in and for the City and County of San Francisco; and when the action pending in Santa Barbara County was called for trial an application was made in behalf of the plaintiff to continue the cause for the term, on an affidavit of the attorney of record for the plaintiff, to the effect that he resided at San Francisco, and was so occupied with other professional engagements as to prevent his attendance on the Court at Santa Barbara, the application being made by another attorney, who appeared for that purpose only at the request of the attorney of record; that the application to continue the cause for the term was denied; but the Court postponed the trial until a later day in the term, for the purpose of affording an opportunity to the plaintiff's attorney to be present at the trial; that on the appointed day the cause was again called for trial, and the plaintiff's attorney being still absent, the attorney who had represented him on the former motion moved to dismiss the action; but the Court denied the motion, except on the condition that the plaintiff paid the costs on or before a subsequent hour of the same day; that the costs were not paid, and the cause was tried before a jury, in the absence of the plaintiff's attorney; and no witnesses or proofs being introduced for the plaintiff, a verdict and judgment was rendered for the defendant; that the judgment erroneously recited that the plaintiff had appeared and introduced evidence at the trial; that the action which was pending in the Fourth District Court was subsequently transferred to Santa Barbara County for trial; that one of the defenses set up in the action as a bar was the former recovery by the defendant in the other action; that, for the purpose of avoiding this bar, the plaintiff filed a supplemental complaint setting forth that the judgment in the former action falsely recited that the plaintiff had appeared and introduced evidence in support of his cause of action; that the plaintiff and his attorney of record were ignorant of these false recitals in the judgment until long after the term had elapsed and until it was too late to correct the same on motion or by a statement on appeal; that the attorney of record was also ignorant that the Court had refused to allow the cause to be dismissed, and supposed it had been dismissed until after it was too late to obtain relief in either of the methods above indicated; that the Court first proceeded to hear and determine the equitable matter set up in the supplemental complaint, and on the trial found as facts that the plaintiff and his attorney of record were ignorant of the false recitals in the judgment, and of the fact that the cause was not dismissed until more than five months had elapsed from the entry of the judgment, and thereupon the Court made a decree correcting the false recitals in the judgment, but refused any other relief under the supplemental complaint; that the plaintiff then moved the Court to proceed to try the action at law, on the original complaint; the Court denied the motion and refused to proceed further in the trial, alleging that nothing remained to be tried — the decree under the supplemental complaint having disposed of the cause. This is an application to compel him to hear and determine the action at law upon the issues joined under the original complaint. One of those issues was on the bar by the former recovery set up in the answer, and the object of the supplemental complaint was to reform the judgment, so as to make it conform to the facts. To that extent the plaintiff obtained the relief which he desired; and whatever other equitable relief he demanded was denied. The result of these proceedings was to leave the action at law under the original complaint still pending and undetermined. The decree which was entered under the supplemental complaint does not enjoin the plaintiff from proceeding in the action at law, nor purport to determine the ultimate rights of the parties. It simply reforms the judgment, and denies any other equitable relief to the plaintiff, but does not attempt otherwise to interfere with the action at law. It may be that the bar of former recovery set up in the answer will prove to be a valid defense, even under the judgment as modified; but the plaintiff has a right to have the action tried and determined, so as to enable him to take an appeal, if he sees proper, in the event that the judgment is against him. At present there is no judgment in the action at law from which he could appeal. It is therefore ordered that the writ issue as prayed for.

Statement of Facts.

[No. 3,163.]

G. R. MINOR v. CHARLES A. KIDDER.

ELECTION CONTEST—ALLEGATION BY CONTESTANT THAT HE "IS" AN ELECTOR.—Under the statute of March 23d, 1850, providing for the contesting of elections of county officers (Stats. 1850, p. 101, Sec. 56), it is sufficient for the contestant to allege that he is, at the time he files the written statement of contest, a qualified elector of the county, without alleging that he was so at the time of the election.

STATEMENT OF CAUSE OF ELECTION CONTEST.—The degree of certainty required in a statement of the cause of contest in an election case is not the highest degree of certainty known in pleading, but only such as will suffice to inform the defendant of the particular proceeding or cause upon which the contest is founded. Such statement need not detail the particular means or measures resorted to for the purpose of accomplishing a miscount, but only the ultimate facts.

ELECTION CONTESTS OF PUBLIC CONCERN.—An election contest, being an investigation in which the public at large are deeply concerned, is not an ordinary adversary proceeding; for, as against the high public interest involved, there can be no recognized adversary.

AMENDMENTS OF STATEMENT OF CAUSE OF ELECTION CONTEST.—In a contested election case, if the statement of the cause of contest lack the clearness and distinctness of allegation desirable in judicial proceedings, it should not for that reason be peremptorily dismissed, but an opportunity afforded to amend.

APPEAL from the County Court of Solano County.

This was one of eight cases, similar in general character, which were submitted and considered together, and known as the "Solano County Election Cases." The contestant was the same in all. The defendants in the others were as follows:

No. 3,164—E. D. Perkins, declared elected County Treasurer.

No. 3,165—George C. McKinley, declared elected County Recorder.

No. 3,166—Joseph Hoyt, declared elected County Assessor.

No. 3,167—Hazen Hoyt, declared elected Public Administrator.

Argument for Defendant.

No. 3,168 — W. H. Fry, declared elected ———.

No. 3,169 — J. F. Wendell, declared elected District Attorney.

No. 3,170 — Joseph Jacobs, declared elected ———.

The election took place on September 6th, 1871. There were substantially the same judicial proceedings in all the cases; and those last named were all decided in the same way as, and upon the authority of the decision of, this case.

The material facts are stated in the opinion.

Plaintiff appealed from the orders of the County Court dismissing the proceedings.

G. A. Lamont and Creed Haymond, for Contestants, contended that the statement of the cause of contest was sufficient in form and substance, citing Hitt. Gen. Laws, 2470 to 2490, and that, therefore, the action of the Court below in dismissing the proceedings was error.

L. B. Miener, for Defendant.

The statement was insufficient in form and substance. (Hitt. Gen. Laws, 2475, 2476, 2477, and 2478.) It did not appear that contestant was an elector of the county at the time of the malconduct alleged; nor was the particular cause or causes of contest alleged with such certainty as would sufficiently advise the defendant of the particular proceedings for which his election was contested.

Again, it appears that the election of defendant was certified to by the Board of Election, canvassed by the Board of Supervisors, and a certificate of election issued to him, without any protest or opposition; nor was there ever any list of alleged illegal votes served upon him, as required by law. (Hitt. Gen. Laws, 2476.)

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This is an appeal taken from an order of the County Judge of the County of Solano, made at a special term of the Court appointed and held by him to determine a contest made against the right of the respondent Kidder to the office of County Clerk of that county. The order entered was one dismissing the proceedings.

The contest was made under the provisions of section two thousand four hundred and seventy, et seq. (Hitt. Gen. Laws), by Minor, who alleges in his written statement filed that he is a qualified elector of the County of Solano.

I. The respondent insists that the statement is insufficient in that, though stating that the contestant is a qualified elector of the county, it fails to state that he was such elector when the election contested was held. It is a sufficient answer, however, to this position, to say that the statute applicable to this case nowhere requires the contestant to allege anything further upon that point that he is — at the time he files the written statement of contest — a qualified elector of the county. Had it required him to state at what point of time, with reference to the time at which the election was held, he became such elector, it would have then, of course, been incumbent upon him to have done so. But he has strictly complied with the requirement of the statute in his statement on that point.

II. It is next objected that the statement of contest was properly dismissed "for the reason that the particular cause or causes of contest were not alleged with such certainty as would sufficiently advise" the respondent Kidder, "of the particular proceedings" upon which his election was contested.

It is provided by the statute (Sec. 2477) that "no statement of the cause of contest shall be rejected, nor the proceedings thereon dismissed by any Court before which such contest may be brought for trial for want of form, if the particular cause or causes of contest shall be alleged with such certainty as will sufficiently advise the defendant of the particular proceeding or cause for which (his) election is contested." Does the written statement here sufficiently advise the defendant of the particular cause for which his election is contested?

It is clear that the certainty of allegation required by the statute is not the highest degree of certainty known in pleading—not that certainty to a certain intent in particular exacted by the rule in averring matter not favored in law—such as an estoppel, alien enemy, etc. Such a degree of technical precision in averment if required would generally defeat the very investigation which it was the main purpose of the statute to invite, and would besides illy comport with the provision already cited expressly dispensing with mere form in pleading in such case as this one. Certainty is required, it is true, but to no greater degree than will suffice to inform the defendant of the particular proceeding or cause upon which the contest is founded. The words used in the statement of contest are to be understood in their ordinary meaning—the purpose being merely to inform the understanding of the opposite party of the substance of the alleged fact or facts relied upon to defeat his claim. We proceed to inquire, therefore, whether, under this rule, the statement presented be substantially sufficient or insufficient upon that point.

It alleges that a general election for State and county officers was held in the County of Solano on the 8th day of September, 1871; that on the first Monday after the election the Board of Supervisors of the county met and canvassed the returns; that at that canvass the returns from each precinct of the county where polls had been opened were before, and were canvassed by, the Board; that A. H. Hawley and the respondent, Kidder, were the only persons voted for at said election as candidates for the office of County Clerk; that the returns canvassed by the Board showed that the respondent, Kidder, had received two thousand three hundred and forty-six votes, and Hawley one thousand six hundred and ninety-three votes, for that office; that the returns from the First, Second, and Third Precincts of Vallejo Township showed that Kidder had received one thousand four hundred and eighty-two votes, and Hawley five hundred and seventy-nine votes, and that the count was so made by the Board; that in point of fact, however, there were cast for Kidder in these three precincts only one hundred and thirty-two votes — i. e., sixty-two votes at the First Precinct, fifty at the Second, and twenty at the Third, while there were cast at those three precincts five hundred and seventy-nine legal votes for Hawley — i. e., in the First Precinct, two hundred and forty-nine votes; in the Second, two hundred and seventy-seven; and in the Third, fifty-three votes.

The statement further sets forth that in the entire county Kidder received only nine hundred and ninety-six votes against one thousand six hundred and ninety-three cast for Hawley for the office of County Clerk, and that Hawley was thereby duly elected, but the Board, upon canvassing the votes, declared Kidder to have been elected to the office.

The statement further sets forth that the Board of Judges in the First Precinct of Vallejo Township counted and included in the returns to the Board of Supervisors "six hundred and fifty more votes than there were ballots voted or received, or votes cast or given at said election in said precinct;" that there was the like excess of six hundred and fifty votes in the return from the Second Precinct, and an excess of fifty votes from the Third, and that in the canvass by the Board of Supervisors these thirteen hundred and fifty votes — which, it is alleged, were never in fact thrown, and for which no ballots were in fact voted or received at the polls — were returned by the Boards of Judges, and were canvassed and counted by the Board of Supervisors as that many votes in favor of Kidder.

It is easily to be seen from these averments that the majority which the canvass by the Board of Supervisors awarded to Kidder over Hawley was six hundred and thirty-three votes; whereas had that canvass excluded the one thousand three hundred and fifty votes improperly returned and counted for him from the First, Second, and Third Precincts of Vallejo Township, Hawley must have been declared elected by a majority of six hundred and ninety-seven votes. The particular cause of contest then is that Kidder's asserted majority of six hundred and thirty-three votes is produced by counting for him one thousand three hundred and fifty votes, not one of which were cast in point of fact, and that these fictitious votes purported to have been thrown entirely in Vallejo Township — six hundred and fifty of them at the First Precinct, the like number at the Second, and the number of fifty at the Third. It can hardly be supposed that the respondent, Kidder, was not sufficiently advised, by these alleged facts and figures, of the particular cause for which his election was contested. But it is argued that the statement of contest should have detailed the particular means or measures resorted to for the purpose of accomplishing this miscount. Had it undertaken to do so, another and much more serious objection would doubtless have been started — i. e., that it assumed to state the evidence by which the ultimate fact was to be established instead of alleging that fact.

It is clear that the misconduct here charged referred to the returns from these three precincts, which were transmitted to the Board of Canvassers. It is alleged that these returns did not accord with the facts, and that the difference was so great as to alter the general result of the election for this office. Those returns consisted of the duplicate poll lists and tallies, and the certificate of the Board of Judges annexed thereto, and transmitted to the Board of Supervisors, stating the number of votes each of these persons had received, and also the file of ballots — which ballots, however, it should be observed, are not required to be counted by the Board of Canvassers, unless upon the opening of the returns some person appear and demand a recount of the vote — in which case the canvass is to include the recount of the ballots also. (Sec. 2455.) There does not appear to have been any such demand for a recount in this instance, and the canvass by the Board of Supervisors was, of course, confined to an inspection of the duplicate poll list, tally, and certificate of the Board of Judges, for these practically constituted the entire return in the absence of a demand for a recount of the ballots. The statement of the contestant, then, when considered by the light of the statute, is that such a return was made — that is, that such a poll list, tally list, and certificate were sent in by the Board of Judges to the Board of Canvassers; that it was made to appear thereby that one thousand three hundred and fifty votes had been received by Kidder more than had in fact been thrown for him, and that number more than there were ballots actually cast or given at those three precincts. It is for this excess, then, in the number of votes counted for him by the Board of Judges in those precincts over the number of votes actually thrown for him there that his election is contested; for, if the excess be shown to have occurred in those precincts, it is clear upon the other allegations contained in the statement as to the general vote for this office in the county at large, that Kidder was not really elected. We are unable to discover in the statement of the grounds of contest a lack of that degree of certainty required by the statute in a proceeding of this nature. It seems to us that to have gone further (as it is claimed the contest should have done), and to have stated in detail by what particular agencies, or means this incorrect result was brought about, would have been to have violated the established rule of pleading by entering into the field of the mere evidence to be adduced in the case. It would have been immaterial, and might have been seriously objectionable, to have alleged, for instance, that a mistake was made by the Board of Judges of the first Precinct in adding up the number of votes cast there; or that the tally list returned to the Board of Canvassers had been fraudulently altered by the addition of names of persons as voting, but who had not, in fact, voted there; or that in preparing the certificate annexed to, and made part of, the returns to the Board of Supervisors a particular mistake or designated fraud had intervened. It is obvious that if the contestant is held to this degree, of details of the ground upon which he intends to rely, he may be compelled upon the same rule to go further, and allege even the particular times, places, and persons involved in the several transactions which he intends to show forth in evidence, and the motives, considerations, and purposes actuating the persons so engaged.

“The office of a complaint is to aver the material issuable facts which constitute the cause of action, and not the evidence to prove those facts.” (Racouillat v. Reni, 32 Cal. 456, and cases there cited.)

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the statement of grounds of contest filed was sufficient in substance, and that it should not have been dismissed upon the objection of the respondent.

It is the wholesome purpose of the statute to invite inquiry into the conduct of popular elections. Its aim is to secure that fair expression of the popular will in the selection of public officers, without which we can scarcely hope to maintain the integrity of the political system under which we live. With this view it has provided the means of contesting the claims of persons asserting themselves to have been chosen to office by the people. It has not authorized every citizen or member of the body politic at large to institute proceedings for that purpose, but has limited the authority in that respect to those who are themselves electors, and it has required the statement of the grounds of contest in every instance to be verified by the oath of the contestant. When such statement is presented by an elector to the tribunal whose duty it is to investigate its merits, it should not be received in a spirit of captiousness, nor put aside upon mere technical objections designed to defeat the very search after truth which the statute intended to invite.

The investigation proposed is one in which the public at large are deeply concerned. It necessarily involves a question of broader import than the mere individual claim of a designated person to enjoy the honors and emoluments of the particular office brought directly in contest. The inquiry must be as to whether or not the popular will in the selection of officers to administer the public affairs has been, in a given instance, or is about to be, defeated or thwarted by mistake happened or fraud concocted. It is, therefore, not an ordinary adversary proceeding; for, as against this high public interest concerned, there can be no recognized adversary.

Even, therefore, if the statement of contest, as filed in the first instance, lack the clearness and distinctness of allegation always desirable in judicial proceedings, it should not for that reason be peremptorily dismissed; but an opportunity to amend it should be afforded, and by this means the controverted points may be developed for determination, and the contest disposed of on its merits, if it have any. It is hardly necessary to add that in such cases, too, it may become the duty of the Court, in the progress of the investigation, to protect the respondent from suffering a surprise; and should the line of proof adduced against him turn out to be one which he might not reasonably have anticipated or foreseen, and of which he is, therefore, unprepared, a reasonable opportunity should be always afforded him to meet the case on the merits. The public interest imperatively require that the ultimate determination of the contest should in every instance, if possible, reach the very right of the case.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Argument for Respondents.

On the 16th of March, 1869, the plaintiff commenced an action against F. Crochet upon a demand for five hundred and sixty dollars and sixty-seven cents, and procured an attachment which was placed in the Sheriff's hands, who thereupon attached two horses, a set of double harness, and a double wagon, and a leasehold interest in a small tract of land. Crochet claimed the horses, harness, and wagon as exempt from execution, and demanded a return of the same. The Sheriff refused to return the same unless an undertaking was given. Crochet at the time owned an undivided one half of the horses, wagon, and harness in common with another person, a stranger to the execution, and the same were used in carrying vegetables to market from the land. Crochet, in order to obtain possession of the horses, wagon, and harness, gave the required undertaking and the Sheriff delivered them up to him. The plaintiff afterwards recovered judgment against Crochet, and an execution on the judgment having been returned by the Sheriff nulla bona, this action was commenced on the undertaking which had been signed by Lusk and Berger. The Court below rendered judgment for the defendants and the plaintiff appealed.

That duress of goods is a good plea to a bond given to procure the release thereof under hard and pressing circumstances, we refer the Court to the elaborate and well considered case of Collins v. Westbury, 2 Bay's Rep. 211; also, Crawford v. Cota, 22 Georgia, 594. That a bond obtained under color of office is absolutely void, and of no avail either against principal or sureties, we refer to the following cases: The United States v. Tingey, 5 Peters, 128, 129; United States v. Pennington, 1 Peters C. C. R. 113. That a bond taken by an officer without authority of law is void. (Benedict v. Bray, 2 Cal. 251; McQueen v. The Ship Russell, 1 Cal. 165; Homan v. Brinkerhoff, 1 Denio, 184.)

An action cannot be maintained on a bond given to obtain the liberation of property illegally taken by a Sheriff. (Homan v. Brinkerhoff, 1 Denio, 184; McQueen v. The Ship Russell, 1 Cal. 165.) In Perry v. Hensley, 14 B. Monroe, Ky. 474, it was held that the Sheriff, having made a levy on property exempt from execution, the execution of a bond to him for its release was not a recognition of the right to levy, nor a waiver of the illegality thereof, and that the sureties on such void instrument were entitled to judgment in their favor.

If any part of the consideration is illegal the whole consideration is void, etc. (1 Parsons on Contracts, 380, 1st ed. 1853; Burt v. Place, 6 Cow. 431; Homan v. Brinkerhoff, 1 Denio, 185; Pennington v. Townsend, 7 Wend. 279.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The wagon, horses, and harness seized under the plaintiff's attachment, were exempt from execution, and were none the less so because the defendant in the attachment owned them, and used them in common with a stranger to the action. The Sheriff violated his duty in refusing to release them from the attachment on the demand of the defendant therein, after being informed and having ascertained that they were exempt from execution. In exacting the undertaking sued upon as a condition on which he would release the property from the attachment, he exceeded his authority and violated his duty. So far as the undertaking was founded upon the release of the wagon, horses, and harness, it was without consideration and void, inasmuch as it was the duty of the Sheriff to release them without an undertaking. But it is said that a leasehold interest of the defendant in the attachment in a parcel of land was also attached, and that this also was released on receiving the undertaking, and it is claimed that this was a sufficient consideration to support it.

It is conceded, however, that a portion of the consideration for the undertaking was the release of the wagon, horses, and harness, and the Sheriff having exacted the undertaking as a condition on which he would release any of the property, we must presume, in support of the judgment, that the undertaking was exacted by the Sheriff under color of his office, and in violation of law, before he would consent to release the wagon, horses and harness. This fact was distinctly averred in the answer, and an issue tendered upon it, and though there is no distinct finding on this point, it is well settled in this Court that all facts within the issues not expressly found, and not inconsistent with the other findings, are presumed to have been found in accordance with the judgment. Assuming the implied findings on this point to have been in accordance with the averments of the answer, it would appear that the Sheriff, with the consent and approval of the plaintiff, illegally and fraudulently exacted the undertaking, under color of his office, as a condition upon which he would release the wagon, horses, and harness, well knowing that they were not subject to execution. If these be the facts, as we must assume they were, the undertaking is void.

EBEN JOHNSON v. J. W. SIMONTON, G. K. FITCH, AND L. PICKERING.

"SWILL-MILK ORDINANCE" OF SAN FRANCISCO.—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.—The statute of April 25th, 1868, conferring authority upon the Supervisors of San Francisco "to make all regulations which may be necessary or expedient for the preservation of the public health" (Stats. 1868, p. 540), was within the constitutional power of the Legislature to enact; and under it the Supervisors had authority to enact the ordinance (No. 730) against feeding cows on still slops, and vending the milk of cows so fed.

ALLEGED LIBEL ON VENDOR OF "SWILL MILK"—QUESTION OF WHOLESOMENESS OF SUCH MILK.—In an action of libel for charging a person with selling "swill milk" and thereby poisoning the people of San Francisco, where it appeared that the alleged libels were only in respect of the unlawful business carried on by plaintiff, in violation of a city ordinance against the vending of the milk of cows fed on still slops, and defendant justified under such ordinance, and there was judgment for defendant: Held, on appeal from the judgment, that the scientific correctness of the determination by the Supervisors of the unwholesomeness of such milk was not open to inquiry in the Supreme Court.

PENALTY FOR ACT AMOUNTS TO PROHIBITION OF ACT.—A city ordinance, duly authorized, imposing a penalty for feeding still slops to cows, and also for vending the milk of cows so fed, amounts to an authoritative prohibition in both respects; and the prohibited act becomes thereby unlawful.

NO LIBEL IN TRULY CHARGING CARRYING ON OF UNLAWFUL BUSINESS.—Where an alleged libel is only in respect to an unlawful business carried on by plaintiff, the action cannot be maintained. The illegality of the business is an answer to the complaint.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion; but it may be added that when the defendants offered Ordinance No. 730 in evidence, their counsel stated that it was offered, not in mitigation of damages, but as a bar to the plaintiff's right to recover in the action. Plaintiff objected, on the grounds that it was irrelevant and incompetent, immaterial, and no justification of the publications; that the ordinance was illegal and void for want of authority in the Supervisors to pass it; and that, if admissible at all, it was only admissible in mitigation of damages, and not in bar of the action.

There having been judgment for defendants, the plaintiff appealed therefrom, and assigned as errors the admission of the ordinance in evidence as a bar to the action, and alleged error in rendering judgment for defendants for costs.

George W. Tyler, for Appellant.

If the Supervisors of San Francisco had authority to pass Order 730, a violation of it by plaintiff subjected him to the penalty provided, but was no justification of the libels. (Rex v. Robinson, 2 Burr. 800; People v. Stevens, 13 Wend. 341; Brown v. Buffalo & S. L. R. R., 22 Smith, 191; Behan v. People, 17 N. Y. 516.)

But the Legislature would have no authority to pass an Act to prohibit an individual from feeding his stock upon any particular kind of food. It would be an unwarrantable interference with the liberty of the citizen. If the Legislature can prohibit individuals from feeding their animals with one kind of food, it may another; and they may go so far as to prescribe what kinds of food shall be fed, and in what quantity, which, we claim, would be an unwarrantable interference on the part of the Legislature.

There is nothing in the chemical composition of distillers' wash that would have a tendency to produce diseased milk.

Again, even though the Legislature had power to pass such a law, it did not delegate authority to do so upon the Supervisors of San Francisco; and without such delegation of power the Supervisors certainly could not exercise it. If any such delegation was made, it must have been by the Consolidation Act, which is a private statute, and not being pleaded, no notice of it can be taken.

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, C. J.

Barnes & Bowie, for Respondents.

The Supervisors had power to pass the order. (Stats. 1863, p. 540; Ex Parte Andrews, 18 Cal. 678; Cohen v. Wright, 22 Cal. 321; Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 271; Ex Parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 280.)

It was unnecessary to plead or offer the statute, for the reason that the Court took judicial notice of it. (Pierce v. Kimball, 9 Greenl. 54; Bismon v. Tugnot, 5 Sandf. 154; Ex Parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 280.)

The order having imposed a penalty upon any one who should feed cows on still slops, such feeding became unlawful, though not in terms declared illegal. (Griffith v. Wells, 8 Denio, 226; Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 272.)

The plaintiff, having been engaged in an illegal business, cannot recover damages for a libel in reference to such business. (Towns. Libel & SL 197; 1 Hilliard, Torts, 278; Manning v. Clement, 7 Bing. 368; Hunt v. Bell, 7 Moore, 212; Spall v. Massey, 2 Stark, 559; Foulger v. Newcomb, Law Rep. 2 Ex. 330; Yrisarri v. Clement, 2 Car & P. 538; 3 Bing. 432; 2 Bos. & P. 284; 28 N. Y. 332; 9 Paige, 586.)

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This was an action brought against the defendants, proprietors and publishers of the Daily Evening Bulletin, a newspaper published in the City and County of San Francisco, to recover damages for the publication in said newspaper of two alleged libels upon the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleges that at the time of the publishing of the libels complained of he was engaged in the business of keeping cows, near Black Point, in that city and county, and feeding them upon hay and the slops of a distillery, and selling the milk of these cows for human food.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

The alleged libels complained of (omitting the innuendoes) are respectively as follows:

“ A week ago officer Stone was detailed by Chief Burke to watch the Black Point milk ranches. He found on E. Johnson's ranch about one hundred and twenty cows feeding on a thin, sour slop, coming by flumes from the distillery tank. The men in the shed denied that they were feeding swill, and said his cows were fed on hay, etc. By the advice of Prosecuting Attorney Louderback a close watch was kept on the place all the week, and yesterday the officer entered the shed and found the cows snorting like hogs, and their heads in troughs filled with thick, sour swill. The men in charge of the place, James Clark and M. T. Chase, no longer denied that they were feeding on swill, but said it was by Mr. Johnson's orders, and that he expected to be arrested, and that if they came after him he would give himself up. Warrants have been taken out by Mr. Louderback against E. Johnson and his two employes, and are now in officer Stone's hands. In a few days, therefore, we shall see whether a practice that is as deadly as the assassin's steel or lead to the infants who suffer from it, can be carried on with impunity.

“ For some time past the Bulletin and other journals of this city have endeavored to warn the people of the danger incurred by using milk furnished by cows fed upon distillery refuse. Full grown persons can stand a certain amount of poison mixed with their food for a time, but there is little doubt that deleterious compounds, if steadily used, in the end will break down the strongest constitutions and shorten life many years. In cities individuals are liable to be deceived in the purchase of food, and it is sometimes the case, even in exercising the utmost care, that unhealthy animals will be slaughtered and offered for sale. Men may in good faith vend an article injurious to health, but all admit the necessity of severe punishment in case of an attempt to palm upon the community a commodity known to be diseased. Should cattle be slaughtered and habitually sold in our markets, known to the vendor to have been diseased previous to being killed, the entire community would demand the punishment of the offenders. Tampering with life in the way suggested would not be tolerated, yet we permit the sale of milk, which is quite as dangerous.

"In San Francisco it has been shown that the practice has been introduced of feeding cows from the refuse of distilleries, and that this refuse is not only fed in the neighborhood of the city, but is carted into the country and fed to cows whose milk is brought here and sold. This milk the community should know is unfit to be used. It in truth contains a poisonous quality. It will destroy life, if given steadily to children for much length of time, and there is little doubt that it undermines the health of those who habitually use it.

"Dr. Rowell, in a lecture at Dashaway Hall, gave it as his opinion that one death per day was caused by the use of this milk alone.

"Medical authority agrees that milk produced by cows fed upon the slops of distilleries is most injurious, and does destroy life.

"Neither grown persons nor children can use it for much length of time without the most pernicious results.

"There is no dispute as to the properties of milk obtained from such a source.

"There is danger in its use. Even animals are killed by it when fed steadily to them.

"The Board of Supervisors, knowing its deleterious qualities, have passed an ordinance forbidding the feeding of cows with distillery refuse, and the vending of milk produced elsewhere by the feeding of such refuse.

"There has been sufficient notice given to stop a traffic which strikes at the health and lives of our citizens. There is no excuse for men who send such milk to this market — ignorance can no longer be pleaded in extenuation of a crime. Cows are fed upon the poisonous compound because it costs little, and money can be made from the traffic.

“Every man arrested hereafter, who may be caught in feeding this article to animals whose milk is sought to be sold in this city, should be punished to the utmost extent of the law; and it should be the business of the Health Officer, or some other competent person, to test milk brought to market for sale, and every person who vends diseased milk should be prosecuted.

“It would be criminal to trifle with a subject which is so important to the public. No man has a right to bring an article to market injurious to the health of our citizens, and which destroys, according to accepted testimony, one person a day. Not another quart of poisonous milk should be permitted to be sold in San Francisco. Will those whose duty it is see that no more lives be sacrificed to the lust of gain which has prompted dealing in milk that destroys human life?”

The defendants in their answer, admitted the publication alleged, but denied that the articles were published with the intent to injure the plaintiff in his business or good name, or that the articles published were defamatory or malicious, and alleged that they contained a fair and true statement of facts, which were of public notoriety, and that the facts stated in these articles, with reference to the deleterious character of cows so fed, were true. They also pleaded that the business of the plaintiff, in vending the milk of cows fed upon still slops, was illegal and in violation of a certain order of the Board of Supervisors of said city and county, being Order No. 730, entitled an order “to prohibit the feeding of milch cows on still slops, and the sale of milk from cows fed on still slops, and from sick or diseased cows,” approved September 18th, 1866.

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, C. J.

At the trial, it being admitted that the articles published were published of and concerning the plaintiff only in respect of his business of feeding cows upon still slops and vending their milk, and that he had sustained damage in respect of the profits of that business in a named sum, the plaintiff rested.

The defendants then offered in evidence said Order No. 730, which is as follows:

"ORDER No. 730.

"To Prohibit the Feeding of Milch Cows on Still Slops, and the Sale of Milk from Cows Fed on Still Slops, and from Sick or Diseased Cows. Approved September 18th, 1866.

The People of the City and County of San Francisco do ordain as follows:

"Section 1. No person shall feed, or cause to be fed, to any milch cow, any still slops, or other food calculated to render the milk of such cow unwholesome or unsuitable for human food.

"Sec. 2. No person shall sell, deliver, supply, or furnish to any person any milk from any cow fed, in whole or in part, upon still slops or other food calculated to render the milk of such cows unwholesome or unsuitable for human food; and no person shall sell, deliver, or supply to any person any milk from any sick or diseased cow.

"Sec. 3. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this order shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the County Jail not less than ten nor more than one hundred days."

This ordinance was offered for the purpose of showing that the business of vending the milk of cows fed on still slops, in which the plaintiff was engaged, was an unlawful business or pursuit, and as constituting a bar to the action. The plaintiff objected to the evidence upon several grounds, which will be noticed hereafter, but the objections were overruled and the ordinance admitted in evidence. Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the defendants, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

1. It is objected that the ordinance was one beyond the authority of the Board to enact. The statute of April 25th, 1863 (p. 540), confers authority upon the Board "to make all regulations which may be necessary or expedient for the preservation of the public health," etc.; and upon the authority of Ex Parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 279, and upon principle as well, we think, that statute to be one within the constitutional power of the Legislature to enact.

If it indeed be a fact that the milk of cows, fed in whole or in part upon still slops, is unwholesome as human food, there can be no doubt of either the authority or the duty of the Board to enact the ordinance in question, and the scientific correctness of the determination by the Board of the matter of fact involved is not open to inquiry here.

2. The ordinance imposing a penalty for the feeding of the slops to cows, as well as for vending the milk of cows so fed, amounted to an authoritative prohibition in both respects. (Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 267.) Besides the ordinance here contains express words of prohibition, and the prohibited acts became thereby unlawful acts.

3. And it thus appearing that the alleged libels were only in respect of an unlawful business carried on by the plaintiff, it results that the action cannot be maintained, "for I think (said Best, Ch. J.) that where a man complains of a libel written respecting an illegal transaction in which he is engaged, the illegality of that transaction is an answer to his complaints." (8 Bing. 440; see, also, Hilliard on Torts, 278; Townsend on Libel and Slander, 197-8, and cases there cited.)

Statement of Facts.

There is nothing in the other points.

The judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

CHARLES GRIMM v. WILLIAM CURLEY, DANIEL MEIKLEHAUGH, ELIZABETH MEIKLEHAUGH, JOHN NICKERSON, AND ELIZA ANN LYONS.

ADVERSE POSSESSION OF LAND OCCUPIED BY MISTAKE.—Where a grantee in taking possession of a lot in San Francisco under his deed, by mistake and in good faith entered into possession of a strip of land adjoining his lot, but not included within its boundaries, and remained in continuous, open, notorious, and adverse possession, claiming to hold adversely to all persons whomsoever: Held, that such possession comes fully within the definition of an adverse possession which will set the Statute of Limitations in motion.

LIMITATION TO RECOVER UNDER ALCALDE GRANT.—An adverse possession for five years subsequent to the passage of the Act of April 18th, 1868, amending the Statute of Limitations, will bar a cause of action under an Alcalde grant in San Francisco.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff deraigned title under a sale by the executors of William A. Woodruff, the original grantee, made by virtue of the following language in Woodruff's will: "It is my will that my executors shall, as soon after my death as they shall deem prudent, for the best interest of my estate, convert the same, real, personal, and mixed, of which I may die seized or possessed, into money."

The sale was made without having first obtained an order of the Probate Court. The Court subsequently confirmed it. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

George & Loughborough, for Appellant.

The land in suit is part of lot one thousand four hundred and two, and the defendant entered under deeds purporting to convey specific portions of the adjoining lot, number one thousand three hundred and eighty-one. They never intended to take, and they never claimed to own any land not included in their respective deeds. If they held any portion of the plaintiff's land, their possession originated in and was continued under a mistake as to the true boundary line. Their possession was not hostile until after the discovery of the mistake, and this happened less than five years before the commencement of this action. They, therefore, failed to prove an adverse possession for five years. (Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 505; Figg v. Mayo, 39 Cal. 262; McCracken v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 636; Howard v. Reedy, 29 Georgia R. 152; Brown v. Cockerill, 33 Ala. 43; Gilchrist v. McLaughlin, 7 Iredell, N. C. R. 310; Brown v. Gay, 3 Greenleaf, Me. 118.)

John M. Burnett and M. G. Cobb, for Respondents.

Adverse possession is sufficient if it excludes all title in the person against whom it is set up. (Wicklowl v. Lane, 37 Barb. 244, and authorities cited.) Defendants certainly excluded all title in plaintiff's grantors when they built on and improved the property in dispute.

The statute runs where parties claim up to a given line and occupy accordingly. (Burdell v. Burdell, 11 Mass. 297; Baldwin v. Brown, 16 N. Y. 359; Reed v. Farr, 35 N. Y. 113; Pierson v. Mosher, 30 Barb. 81; Sneed v. Osborn, 25 Cal. 619.)

If a grantee in a deed, in taking possession thereunder, goes by mistake beyond his proper boundaries, and enters upon, and actually occupies and improves, land not included in his deed, claiming and supposing it to be his, this occupation is deemed adverse, within the meaning of the Statute of Limitations, and, if continued for the proper time, will bar an action by the true owner.

In this case, the defendants entered upon, occupied, and improved the land in suit, claiming and supposing it to be theirs. (Crary v. Goodman, 22 N. Y. 170; Enfield v. Day, 7 N. H. 457; Hale v. Glidden, 10 N. H. 397; McKinney v. Kenney, 1 A. K. Marshall, 460; Hunter v. Chrisman, 6 B. Mon. 463; Sneed v. Osborn, 25 Cal. 626; City of San Jose v. Trimble, 40 Cal. 536.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The land in controversy is a narrow strip, five or six feet wide, included within the fifty-vara lot numbered one thousand four hundred and two, in the City of San Francisco, and fronts on the dividing line between that lot and the fifty-vara lot numbered one thousand three hundred and eighty-one. The plaintiff derails title under a valid Alcalde grant to that portion of lot one thousand four hundred and two which includes the demanded premises, provided the executors of Woodruff, the original grantee, had power, under his will, to sell and convey said premises without having first obtained an order of sale from the Probate Court; but I deem it unnecessary to pass upon that point, inasmuch as I think the defendants made out a valid defense under the Statute of Limitations. The action was commenced in June, 1869, and it appeared in proof that the defendants entered more than ten years before the commencement of the action, under deeds purporting to convey to them severally portions of lot number one thousand three hundred and eighty-one. It further appears that they entered upon the demanded premises in good faith, under the belief that said premises were a portion of lot number one thousand three hundred and eighty-one, and were included within their respective deeds.

It also appears that from the time of their entry they have been in the continuous, open, notorious, and adverse possession, claiming to hold and own the same adversely to all persons whomsoever. A possession of this character comes fully within the definition of an adverse possession, as established by an unbroken current of authorities. Nor can there be any doubt that the plaintiff, or his grantors, might, at any time during said adverse holding, within five years from the commencement thereof, have maintained an action to recover the possession. If the cause of action was not before barred, it was clearly so at the expiration of five years from the time, when the Act of April 18th, 1863, amending the Statute of Limitations, took effect. JOSEPH R. CORWIN v. JOHN BENSLEY, MANSFIELD COMPTON, FREDERICK MASON, AND FRANCIS DUMARTHERAY.

MOTION TO SET ASIDE A JUDGMENT.—If, under the sixty-eighth section of the Practice Act, authorizing the Court to relieve a party, or his legal representatives, from a judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, a motion is made, by persons other than the plaintiff, claiming to be his legal representatives, to set aside a judgment, and to be substituted as plaintiffs, the parties making such motion must show such a state of facts as would have supported such an application by the plaintiff in the judgment.

Argument for Appellants.

IDEM.—Possibly the above rule would not apply in case of an executor or administrator, moving in behalf of creditors, to open a judgment collusively or negligently suffered by the testator or intestate, by which the creditors may be damnified.

LIS PENDENS.—The point not decided, whether a lis pendens filed by a plaintiff, in an action to try the title to land, in which the defendants set up title in themselves, and ask for affirmative relief, imparts notice to purchasers from such plaintiff pending the action, of the pendency of the same, and the possible result that his title might be adjudged invalid.

PURCHASERS OF LAND PENDING ACTION TO TRY ITS TITLE.—If such a lis pendens is filed in an action to try the title to land as imparts notice to purchasers from a party to the action, during its pendency, such purchasers must apply for leave to protect their interest in the suit.

IDEM.—A person buying land without notice of the pendency of an action to try its title, is not affected by a judgment in the action, and, therefore, cannot support a motion to set aside such judgment, under the sixty-eighth section of the Practice Act.

IDEM.—If, during the pendency of an action to try the title to land, the plaintiff sells, and afterwards stipulates to a judgment in favor of the defendants, his grantees cannot support a motion to set aside the judgment, under the sixty-eighth section of the Practice Act.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Alameda County.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

James McM. Shafter, for Appellants.

As to the first point, we deny that a stranger to the record can be permitted to interfere with the judgment upon motion merely.

Before judgment a grantee, pending the action, must petition to be allowed to intervene, and hearing must be had upon this petition, and the right to intervene must be first decided. If affirmatively disposed of, then he becomes a party to the controversy. If the right to thus interpose before judgment is only obtained by force of the statute, how can it be claimed, in absence of such statute, that a stranger can interfere in the action after judgment? It seems that this precise point was decided in Dimack v. Deringer, 32 Cal. 488. In that case, a landlord whose tenant, "by neglect or design," had been defaulted in ejectment was denied the right to move in his own name to set aside the judgment.

We submit, the only way a stranger to a judgment can attack it in his own name, and on his own behalf, is to treat it like any other fact in pais, and enforce his claim — not to set it aside, but to have it declared of no effect as to him, on any ground which may be deemed sufficient. If the claim was sound it could only extend to the affirmative relief, and that portion of the judgment declaratory of title should stand.

The statute gives the power to set aside the judgment, upon the ground of the "mistake," etc., of the party to the record. The application can be made in the name of the party on behalf of "his legal representatives;" but the ground of the application must be "personal" to a party. The relief is from a "judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake," etc. The mistake of Corwin's grantees is of no consequence, except as it may explain their delay in making their application. The mistake must have been that of Corwin himself. No such mistake occurred as to him.

That "legal representative," in section sixty-eight of the Practice Act, was not used by the Legislature as synonymous with assignee, or successor in interest, or grantee, is evident from the fact that they have, ex industria et in pari materia, used those particular phrases in this Act, wherein the idea was involved, in their required expression. As to parties to actions, up to section sixteen, there is great care to provide for every contingency, so that "the real party" should appear upon the record. In section sixteen the case of transfer before judgment is provided for, and the grantee is called, not the "legal representative" of a party, but "the person to whom a transfer is made." Up to trial the only thing a "successor in interest" can do relative to the case is to apply to be made a party. (Sec. 55.) In section sixteen, "In case of death or other disability, the Court may allow the action to be continued by or against his representative or successor in interest." These terms are not used as convertible, but are descriptive of different characters. (Bouv. Law Dict. 357.)

W. W. Cope, for Respondent.

The application was addressed to the sound discretion of the Court below, and unless it can be seen that its discretion has been abused the order will not be reversed on the merits. (Roland v. Kreyenhagen, 18 Cal. 455; Woodward v. Backus, 20 Cal. 187; Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 422.)

A party entitled to relief must generally ask it in his own name; and there is nothing in the present case to take it out of this rule. There is no doubt that Stevens and Sweeny are the legal representatives of the plaintiff, within the meaning of the statute; and the statute provides that relief may be granted either to a party or his legal representatives. (Prac. Act, Sec. 68.)

The case of Dimick v. Deringer, 32 Cal. 488, was decided on a ground peculiar to the class of cases to which it belongs. The motion there was by a landlord to set aside a judgment in ejectment against his tenant; and it was held that the motion was improper, for the reason that the landlord could not be made a party to the proceedings. The tenant was the only person against whom the action could be maintained, and it was necessary that the defense should be conducted in his name. The landlord could not be substituted in his place, and was not in any sense his legal representative. The motion, therefore, was unauthorized by the statute; and the decision proceeded on a substantial and not on any technical ground. There is nothing in the case giving the slightest support to the objection taken here, and there are several cases which, according to our reading, are directly opposed to it. (People v. Lafarge, 3 Cal. 130, and cases already cited; see, also, notes to Sec. 68 of Prac. Act, by Parker.)

The statute provides that relief may be granted on the ground of surprise, mistake, or excusable neglect; and the proposition is that these grounds must exist with reference to the party to the record.

We see nothing in the statute requiring such a construction, and it would certainly be in conflict with the spirit and meaning of the provision. (Montgomery v. Ellis, 6 How. N. Y. 326.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

Corwin brought an action in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District against Bensley, Compton, Mason, and Dumartheray, in June, 1864, filing a lis pendens, and alleging himself to be the owner in fee and in possession of certain lands, consisting of several blocks, among the rest block one hundred and two, in the Potrero Nuevo survey, in the City and County of San Francisco, to which lands he alleged that the defendants claimed title adversely to him, etc., and prayed that the claim of title on the part of the defendants be adjudged to be invalid, etc.

The defendants, Bensley, Mason, and Dumartheray, filed an answer, in which they denied the possession of Corwin, and set up title in themselves to the lands in controversy, and demanded judgment for their costs — this answer was filed in July, 1864. In November, 1866, the defendants, under a stipulation they had obtained for that purpose from the attorney of Corwin, filed an amended answer, in which they again denied the possession of Corwin, and set up their own title to the premises, alleged that if Corwin was in possession, he was wrongfully so, and concluded with a prayer that the defendants be adjudged to be owners, and that they recover possession of the premises, etc. No notice of lis pendens seems to have been filed by the defendants. Upon motion of the defendants the cause was, within a few days after the filing of the amended answer, transferred to the District Court of the Third Judicial District, for the County of Alameda, for trial, in which Court, in March, 1868, in pursuance of a stipulation filed, a judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants, adjudging them to be, and to have been, at the commencement of the action, the owners of the premises, and that they recover the possession thereof without damages and costs. In December, 1865, pending the action, Corwin had conveyed block one hundred and two to one Conway, who subsequently, in August, 1867, conveyed it to Stevens and Sweeny, and these last, being in possession, were turned out on the 2d of April, 1868, under process issued upon the judgment of March, 1868. Stevens and Sweeny thereupon moved the Court below for an order setting aside the judgment as to that block, and allowing them to be substituted as plaintiffs in the action in which it had been rendered, with leave to prosecute it for their own benefit. This motion was granted, and the defendants, Mason and others, bring this appeal from the order.

The motion of the respondent was made upon the provisions of section sixty-eight of the Practice Act, authorizing the Court to relieve a party, or his legal representatives, from a judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Supposing, for the purposes of the case, that the respondents, who derive their title mediately from Corwin, are his "legal representatives" in the sense intended by the statute—a proposition to which I am by no means prepared to assent—I am of opinion that such legal representatives must be held to show such a state of facts as would have supported a similar application upon the behalf of the party whom they claim to represent — unless, possibly, in a case of an executor or administrator moving in behalf of creditors to open a judgment collusively or negligently suffered by the testator, or intestate, by which the creditors may be damnified. Ordinarily the successor in interest of a party to an action, if he would appear, must, in making his appearance, occupy the position of his predecessor, and, as succeeding him in the case, must be bound to the same extent to which the predecessor would have been bound had the application been made in his behalf. It is unnecessary to determine in this case the effect of the lis pendens filed by Corwin — if it is to be considered as imparting notice to his grantees of the pendency of the action he had brought, and of the possible result that his title might be adjudged to be invalid in that action, it would have been the duty of the respondents, in the exercise of ordinary prudence, to have applied for leave to protect their interest during the six months and upwards which actually intervened between the delivery to them of the deed under which they claim, and the entry of the judgment which they now seek to vacate. If, on the other hand, they are to be considered as having purchased without notice of the pendency of the action, it would result that their title, not being affected by the judgment as rendered, they cannot support an application to set it aside, any more than could any other person whose rights were not affected by it. These are considerations, however, which do not arise in the case. I am of opinion that if the vendees of Corwin can be heard at all in such a proceeding as this, in opposition to the judgment, they can be heard only as Corwin himself might have been heard, and that the appellants must be allowed to resist the application upon any ground of which they might have availed themselves had it been made by Corwin. If in such an application the moving party is to be heard upon new grounds of contest arising out of the mere conduct of the suit itself, it would be, in effect, the institution of a new suit under the name of a substitution or an intervention into an old one. Such a practice, if permitted, would tend to confuse and seriously embarrass the administration of justice in the Courts, and in my opinion, is not countenanced by the statute referred to. If the respondents have rights in the premises, they can be asserted in an independent action brought for that purpose.

I therefore think that the order should be reversed.

RHODES, J., concurring:

I concur in the judgment, not only on the grounds stated in the foregoing opinion, but also those mentioned in the former opinion in this case.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT dissented.

[The following is the opinion referred to by Mr. Justice RHODES in his concurring opinion. It was delivered by Mr. Justice RHODES at the April Term, 1869, and a rehearing was afterwards granted. Mr. Justice SANDERSON and Mr. Chief Justice SAWYER concurred.—REPORTER]:

The first point of the appellants is fatal to the order setting aside the judgment. Authority for the proceedings, it is claimed, is found in the sixty-eighth section of the Practice Act. The orders therein provided for are such as may be obtained in the usual and regular course of proceedings. They are proceedings in the action, or in the direct line of the judgment, if taken after judgment. No authority is thereby given to any person to intervene and take the proceedings, or the judgment out of the hands of the parties; but there the rule in all actions obtains, that the parties to the action alone are entitled to be heard, and make the motions, and obtain the orders in the cause. The section provides that the Court may, "upon such terms as may be just, and upon payment of costs, relieve a party, or his legal representative, from a judgment, or order, or other proceeding, taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect;" and this is relied upon as authorizing persons who have purchased the property in controversy from the plaintiff pendente lite, to move, in their own name, to set aside a judgment against the plaintiff. The answer to this position is: the plaintiff is not dead. The "legal representative" mentioned in the section is he who is authorized to take the place of a party in the action, made vacant by his death. Assuming that the moving parties had acquired the plaintiff's interest in the premises, the obstacle in the way of their taking any step in the action is the fact that they had not become parties to the action. They could not be substituted for the plaintiff after judgment — at least we have never heard of such a case, and no reason occurs to us why a substitution should be allowed at that stage of the action — and until they had become parties to the action, they could not participate in the proceedings.

It is provided by section sixteen that in the case of a transfer of interest, such as is set up in the moving papers, the action may be continued in the name of the original party, or the person to whom the transfer is made may be substituted in the action. In the first case all the proceedings are in the name of the party to the record, but for the benefit of the person in interest, and the latter person, though the proceedings are for his benefit, and though he virtually controls the prosecution or defense of the action, as the case may be, can proceed only in the name of the original party, and he could not refuse his consent to the use of his name for that purpose. Here, however, not only was the action not prosecuted for the benefit of those to whom the title of the plaintiff was transferred, but they did not know, as they allege, of the pendency of the action.

Opinion of Rhodes, J.

They might also have intervened in the action had they been apprised of its pendency, and they would have been entitled to be heard as parties, but having failed to intervene during the pendency of the action, are they authorized to intervene after final judgment? This is, in fact, an intervention after final judgment—a proceeding wholly unauthorized by the statute.

If these parties could make the motion, and were entitled to the order granted in this case, then there is no reason why they could not have taken any other step in the action that the plaintiff was authorized to take. Suppose that, instead of this motion, they had moved for a new trial, or had taken an appeal, will it be contended that they could have been heard? We think no one would so assert. If not, then they were not entitled to make this motion. (See Dimick v. Deringer, 32 Cal. 488.)

But leaving this question, and coming to the question of merits, it will be seen that the moving parties encounter insuperable obstacles. Judgments bind parties and their privies in representation and estate. The estate in land which is held by the party, against whom the judgment is rendered, and which is affected by the judgment while in his hands, is equally affected and bound, into whosoever hands it thereafter comes. And the law goes one step further, and binds all the estate held by such party at the commencement of the action, which was sold to a third person pendente lite with notice of the action. The rule declaring that the lis pendens was constructive notice to the purchaser from the defendant, and bound the estate in his hands, was borrowed from equity, and, after some changes, was incorporated into the statute. (Sears v. Hyer, 1 Paige, 483; Parks v. Jackson, 11 Wend. 442; Stuyvesant v. Hall, 2 Barb. Ch. 151; 1 Story Eq., Sec. 405; Bishop of Winchester v. Paine, 11 Ves. 197.)

Our statute first provided for a notice of lis pendens to be given by the plaintiff, but in 1862 it was extended to the defendant, when he claimed affirmative relief. (Sec. 27.) The section, also, provides that "from the time of filing only shall the pendency of the action be constructive notice to the purchaser or incumbrancer of the property affected thereby."

The object of the rule in equity, or of that of the statute, was not to restrict the right of alienation of the prevailing party, but to hold the interest of the losing party subservient to the judgment. The party wishing the benefit of the notice must himself give it, and if he is successful he may disregard the alienations of his adversary, made subsequently to the filing of the notice. We do not understand that the defendants filed the notice. Their judgment, therefore, bound only the estate held by the plaintiff at the time of the rendition of the judgment. The inquiry whether the respondent had actual notice is unnecessary, for, by the terms of the statute, the notice filed with the Recorder is the only notice of the pendency of the action that will bind subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers. (Richardson v. White, 18 Cal. 102; Ault v. Gassaway, id. 205.) The suit not having been prosecuted by the respondents, nor for their benefit, and neither they nor their estate being bound by the judgment, it is impossible to see what right they have to attack it.

Order reversed and remittitur ordered to issue forthwith.

Argument for Appellant.

[No. 2,541.]

HANS H. BUHNE v. JOSEPH CORBETT, WALTER OUTLER, AND E. H. PINNEY.

EJECTMENT—FAILURE TO SHOW POSSESSION IN DEFENDANT GROUND OF NONSUIT.—In an action of ejectment, where defendants in their sworn answer denied being or having been in possession, though in another defense, separately pleaded, they set up that they were in charge of a light-house on the premises as the employes of the United States; and on the trial plaintiff, relying upon the answer to show possession, offered no evidence to show the possession of defendants: Held, that a nonsuit for failure to show possession in defendants was correct.

NEITHER OF TWO INCONSISTENT DEFENSES TO BE DISREGARDED.—Though two defenses, separately pleaded under section forty-nine of the Practice Act, may be inconsistent, the plaintiff cannot disregard them, or either of them, on the trial.

SEPARATE DEFENSES MAY BE INCONSISTENT IF ANSWER IS NOT SWORN UNDER OATH.—A separate plea or defense should not contain matters repugnant or inconsistent in themselves; but a defense regarded as an entirety is not to be defeated or disregarded merely because it is inconsistent with some other plea or defense pleaded; and there is no distinction in this respect between verified and unverified pleadings.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Eighth Judicial District, County of Humboldt.

The facts, bearing upon the points decided, are stated in the opinion.

The plaintiff claimed under a location of a school land warrant upon the property and a patent therefor from the State, and appealed from a judgment of nonsuit.

Buck & Stafford and Coffroth & Spaulding, for Appellant.

It is said that we cannot take advantage of an admission in the sworn answer of defendants, without admitting all affirmative matters set up therein in avoidance. We are constrained to deny the truth of the proposition, and consider the reverse of the rule laid down too well established for argument.

That defendants were in possession and claimed a right to keep plaintiff out of possession of the premises, and that the answer admits these facts, cannot be questioned, if the English language can be made to say so. The quibble of the defendants is, that the United States, though not a human being nor capable of going on the land in person, is actually in possession by defendants as her servants; that defendants are merely the embodiment of the government. That they were there and that a part of them are there now, keeping plaintiff from taking possession of his property, defendants do not deny. They say, however, that a person in occupation of land is not necessarily in possession; and that ejectment must be brought against the terre tenant.

L. D. Latimer, for Respondent.

The plaintiff failed to show possession in the defendants. He relied solely upon what he termed admissions in the answer. I submit that the answer does not admit such possession. But if it be held that it does admit possession, then I say the character of the possession is not such as will authorize the maintenance of the action of ejectment against defendants. It is not disputed that the action of ejectment must be brought against the person in possession; but it does not follow because one is in occupation of land that he is in possession, within the meaning of the term as used in the law of ejectment. A mere servant or employé is not in such possession; his occupation is the possession of his employer. (Hawkins v. Reichart, 28 Cal. 537; Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 514.)

Whatever possession defendants may have is not their possession but that of the United States. And if a judgment should be obtained it would be fruitless — the United States would not be bound by it; and it would, no doubt, be considered her duty, required for the public good, to place other keepers in charge should the present ones be removed under a writ of restitution.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.

This action was brought to recover the possession of a tract of land situate in the County of Humboldt. The pleadings are verified. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner in fee of the premises which are described, and that the defendants "on the 2d day of February, 1870, entered into the possession of the demanded premises above described, and have ever since and still do unlawfully withhold the possession thereof from the plaintiff," etc., concluding with the usual prayer for judgment. The answer is as follows:

"Now comes Joseph Corbett, John Doe (Walter Cutler), and Richard Roe (E. H. Pinney), defendants in the above entitled action, and answering the complaint of the plaintiff herein, on their information and belief deny that on the 1st day of February, 1870, or at any other time, the plaintiff was or now is, or ever has been the owner of, or seized in fee, or entitled to the possession of the tract of land described in said complaint, or any part thereof; and deny that on said day, or any other time, the defendants entered into the possession of the same, or any part thereof, or that they ever withheld, or now withhold the possession of the same, or any part thereof from the plaintiff. Further answering, the said defendants aver that from the year A. D. 1848, down to the 23d day of May, A. D. 1867, inclusive, the tract of land described in the plaintiff's complaint, was public land of and belonging to the United States, and that on the day last named, and prior thereto, by orders of the President of the United States, one bearing date of that day and another prior thereto, and in due course of law, the said lands, and the whole thereof, was reserved to the United States for light-house purposes, and from thence hitherto have remained, and still do remain so reserved for the purposes aforesaid; and that during all of said time, from the year 1848 hitherto, the United States has been and still is the owner in fee and seized of said land and every part thereof.

“That from the 23d day of May, 1867, hitherto the United States has continuously occupied and possessed said lands for lighthouse purposes aforesaid, and has erected a lighthouse and light, and other improvements thereon, for the protection and safety of ships and other vessels navigating the waters of the Pacific Ocean, at an expense of about one hundred thousand dollars.

“That the said defendants are the keepers of the light and lighthouse aforesaid, employed for that purpose by the said United States at stipulated wages, and that they are, as such keepers, the mere servants and employés of the said United States, subject at any and all times to the orders, directions, and commands of the said United States and certain of the officers thereof, and to be discharged and removed from such service and employment.

“That as such lighthouse keepers, and under and in obedience to the orders, directions, and commands of the said United States and officers, these defendants, as such servants and employés for the year last past, have been and still are in the temporary charge of the light and lighthouse buildings on said land for the sole purpose of keeping the light burning at proper times, and keeping the same said lighthouse building in proper repair, all in performance of and in obedience to the duties of keepers as aforesaid, as the same are regulated and prescribed by the said United States and officers.

“The said defendants further aver that they do not now, nor have they ever claimed or had any interest in said land or improvements, or any part thereof; and that from the time of the reservation aforesaid the United States by and through these defendants and other of its servants and employés, has continually been and still is in the sole and exclusive possession and occupation of the said land and improvements, and every part thereof.

"Wherefore the defendants pray that they be hence dismissed, and that they may have judgment against the plaintiff for costs of suit."

At the trial the plaintiff offered no evidence whatever touching the alleged fact of the possession of the defendants, and, on motion of defendants, a judgment of nonsuit was rendered, on the ground "that the plaintiff has not shown the defendants to have been in the possession of the said premises at the commencement of this action, or at any other time;" and from that judgment this appeal is brought.

We are of opinion that the nonsuit was correct upon the pleadings.

The Practice Act (Sec. 49) provides as follows: "The defendant may set forth by answer as many defenses and counterclaims as he may have. They shall each be separately stated, and the several defenses shall refer to the causes of action which they are intended to answer, in a manner by which they may be intelligibly distinguished."

It will be observed that the answer here, in the first defense set forth, distinctly denies "that on said day, or any other time, the defendants entered into the possession of the same, or any part thereof, or that they ever withheld, or now withhold, the possession of the same, or any part thereof, from the plaintiff;" and while it is possible that, under the strict rules applicable to verified answers, an objection might have been made to the sufficiency of this denial in a single particular, none such was, in fact, made below, nor has any been pointed out here.

After this denial the defendants, "further answering," make certain affirmative averments, in the course of which they set up that they are in charge of the lighthouse on the premises as the employés of the United States, etc.; and it is upon the effect of these averments in pleading that we understand the plaintiff to claim that he was relieved from the necessity of proving that the defendants were in possession at the time the action was commenced.

1. Assuming that the defenses, as thus pleaded, were inconsistent upon the point of the possession of the defendants, it would not follow that the plaintiff would be at liberty to disregard them, or either of them, at the trial. If he desired to present that question, he should have moved to strike out the one or the other, or applied for an order compelling the defendants to elect as to which particular one of them they would rely upon. (Klink v. Cohen, 13 Cal. 623; Uridias v. Morrill, 25 Cal. 31.)

2. But even had he by motion presented the question of the supposed inconsistency of the several defenses in the answer, we think that it would not have availed him. A party defendant in pleading may plead as many defenses as he may have. If a plea or defense separately pleaded in an answer contain several matters, these should not be repugnant or inconsistent in themselves. But the plea or defense regarded as an entirety, if it be otherwise sufficient in point of form and substance, is not to be defeated or disregarded merely because it is inconsistent with some other plea or defense pleaded. And there is no distinction in this respect between pleadings verified and pleadings unverified. (Bell v. Brown, 22 Cal. 672; Wilton v. Cleveland, 30 Cal. 192.)

We are, therefore, of opinion that the judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

S. E. ALDEN v. THE COUNTY OF ALAMEDA

ACTION ON JUDGMENT AGAINST COUNTY.— If an action could be maintained in any case on a money judgment against a county, it certainly cannot be without first presenting such a judgment to the Board of Supervisors for allowance.

STATUS OF A MONEY JUDGMENT AGAINST A COUNTY.— The statute relating to Boards of Supervisors, and providing for the disposition of claims against counties (Stats. 1855, p. 51, Sec. 24), contemplates that when a judgment is obtained against a county it shall have the force and effect of an audited demand, in so far that it is no longer open to contestation, and makes it the duty of the Supervisors to allow it as an audited claim, if presented within the proper time.

ENFORCEMENT OF MONEY JUDGMENT AGAINST A COUNTY.— When a money judgment is recovered against a county, no execution can issue on it; and the only remedy is to present it to the Board of Supervisors for allowance as an audited claim within the time prescribed by law (Stats. 1855, p. 51); and if the Board refuse to perform its duty by allowing it as such, it may be compelled to do so by mandamus.

MONEY JUDGMENT AGAINST COUNTY MUST BE PRESENTED.— The language of the statute of March 20th, 1855, providing that no person shall sue a county in any case, or for any demand, without first presenting the claim to the Board of Supervisors (Stats. 1855, p. 51, Sec. 24), is sufficiently comprehensive to include a cause of action or demand founded on a judgment, which is itself but an adjudicated claim against the county.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Alameda County.

This was an action commenced on July 9th, 1869, to recover from the County of Alameda the sum of three thousand four hundred and one dollars and eighty-six cents, with interest thereon from June 2d, 1865. The complaint counted on four judgments recovered against the defendant on the last named day, in the County Court of said county, under section fourteen of "An Act concerning roads and highways in the County of Alameda," approved March 24th, 1862. (Stats. 1862, p. 81.) There was an allegation that the judgments had not been reversed, annulled, or set aside, and that no part of them had been paid or satisfied; but there was no allegation of any presentation of them, or either of them, to the Board of Supervisors. The defendant demurred, on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained; and plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered for defendant. The plaintiff appealed.

William H. Patterson, for Appellant.

The Court below erred in sustaining the demurrer, and rendering judgment thereon for defendant. The judgments were recovered in the County Court for damages awarded in proceedings under the Road Act of 1862, and were in full force, and unpaid and unsatisfied. The following authorities are relied on as establishing plaintiff's right to maintain his action: Stats. 1862, p. 81, Sec. 14; Hookers v. Trustees of Village of Rochester, 1 Wend. 53; People ex rel. Green v. Common Council of Syracuse, 20 How. Pr. 491.

The question of how the judgment shall be enforced is not at all involved. Once a judgment has been awarded and rendered in the County Court it may be sued over ad libitum, to save the Statute of Limitations, or for any reason, until it shall be paid and discharged.

S. P. Wright, District Attorney, for Respondent.

The County Government is a part of the State Government, and can only be sued in the manner provided by statute; and when judgment has been obtained it can only be satisfied in the same manner as any other lawful claim against the county. The complaint here does not show that the judgments sued on were ever presented to the Board of Supervisors for allowance, and, therefore, the suit cannot be maintained. (Hitt. Gen. Laws, 6993; Sharp v. Contra Costa County, 34 Cal. 284; People v. Lake County, 33 Cal. 487;

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

Price v. Sacramento County, 6 Cal. 254; McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 121; Crandall v. Amador County, 2 Cal. 72.)

If a judgment against a county be considered as an "audited claim," as intimated in the case of Sharp v. Contra Costa County, then plaintiff's remedy is by mandamus, to compel the Auditor to draw his warrant on the Treasurer, the drawing of the warrant being a ministerial duty. (Harpending v. Haight, 39 Cal. 189; Day v. Callow, 39 Cal. 593; Lake Merced Water Co. v. Cowles, 31 Cal. 215; Napa Valley R. R. Co. v. Napa Co., 30 Cal. 435; People v. Supervisors, 28 Cal. 430.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The only question on this appeal is whether an action can be maintained on a money judgment against a county in this State, there being no averment that the judgment had been presented to the Board of Supervisors for allowance as a claim against the county before the commencement of the action. The judgment itself has the force and effect of an audited claim against the county. It is conclusive evidence that the county owes the money for which the judgment was rendered. The Board of Supervisors has no discretion to exercise in respect to the justice or legality of the demand; nevertheless, the statute appears to contemplate that, after the judgment is obtained, it shall be presented to the Board of Supervisors, to be placed on file amongst the audited demands against the county. By section twenty-four of the Act of March 20th, 1855 (Stats. 1855, p. 51), providing for the organization of Boards of Supervisors in the counties of this State, it is provided that "no person shall sue a county in any case, or for any demand, unless he or she shall first present his or her claim or demand to the Board of Supervisors for allowance, and if they fail or refuse to allow the same, or some part thereof, the party feeling aggrieved may sue the county; and if the party suing recover in the action more than said Board allowed, or offered to allow, said Board shall allow the amount of the said judgment and costs as a just claim against the county; but if the party suing shall not recover more than the Board shall have offered to allow him or her, then costs shall be recovered against him or her by the county." In providing that no person shall sue a county in any case, or for any demand, without first presenting his claim for allowance, and that after it has been rejected, and he has obtained a judgment therefor, the judgment shall be allowed by the Board of Supervisors as an audited claim against the county, the statute evidently contemplates that when the judgment is obtained it shall have the force and effect of an audited demand, in so far that it is no longer open to contestation, and it is made the duty of the Board of Supervisors to allow it as an audited claim. If the Board refuses to allow it on presentation within the proper time, it can be compelled by mandamus to perform its duty in this respect. It has no discretion in the premises; and after the judgment is thus allowed, it stands upon precisely the same footing with all other audited demands against the county, and is thenceforth subject to all the conditions and limitations applicable to other audited demands, and payment may be enforced in the same manner, and not otherwise. No execution against the county can issue on the judgment, the only office of which is to establish the demand in so conclusive a manner that it can no longer be contested. It is equally clear that when the status of the claim is thus established the only remedy for enforcing it is to present the judgment to the Board for allowance as an audited claim within the time prescribed by law. No useful end whatever could be subserved by permitting the recovery of a second judgment, founded on the first; and if it were permissible in any case of this character, it is clear that the action could not be maintained without first presenting the judgment to the Board for allowance. When the statute declares that no person shall sue a county in any case, or for any demand, without first presenting the claim to the Board, the language is sufficiently comprehensive to include a cause of action or demand founded on a judgment, which is itself but an adjudicated claim against the county. The provision is founded in wisdom, and was intended to prevent the county from being harrassed by needless and expensive litigation.

Points decided.

Judgment affirmed.

H. P. LIVERMORE AND JULIUS CHESTER v. P. A. STINE.

OBJECTION TO AMOUNT OF VERDICT MUST BE PARTICULARLY SPECIFIED.—

On appeal from an order denying a new trial, a point that the verdict is for too small a sum cannot be considered in the Supreme Court, if it be not particularly specified as a ground of objection in the statement.

CONFLICT OF EVIDENCE.—A verdict will not be disturbed as against evidence where there is a substantial conflict of evidence.

OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE OF CONTRACT AS INCOMPETENT SHOULD BE MADE WHEN TESTIMONY OFFERED.—

If a party claiming under a contract, required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, be permitted without objection to prove a contract by parol, and a motion be afterwards made to strike out the testimony on the ground that the contract was not in writing, the fact that the evidence is already before the jury, without objection, is a sufficient answer to such motion.

DEFECTIVE INSTRUCTION HELPED OUT BY ANOTHER INSTRUCTION.—Where an instruction given at the request of one party was open to criticism as omitting an important element, but the point in which it was deficient was distinctly enunciated in an instruction given at the request of the other party: Held, that the jury had not been misled.

Statement of Facts.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixteenth Judicial District, Kern County.

This was an action for five hundred and sixty-nine dollars and sixty-eight cents on promissory notes and book account. The defendant answered, denying any greater indebtedness than sixty-nine dollars and sixty-eight cents in the first count, and in the second setting up a counterclaim for five hundred dollars, for bricks made for plaintiffs, and praying that such amount might be allowed as an offset to plaintiffs' demand.

There was testimony tending to show that the plaintiffs, by their agent, George B. Chester, made a contract with defendant to make fifty thousand bricks for them, and that he made them. After considerable testimony had been heard on the subject of the contract, the defendant, being recalled, testified that the contract was not in writing. Plaintiffs then moved to strike out all the testimony in relation to the contract, on the ground that such contract was invalid, under section thirteen of the Statute of Frauds, because it was not in writing. The motion was denied, and plaintiffs excepted.

The second instruction, asked by the defendant and given by the Court to the jury, was as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that defendant agreed with George B. Chester to make fifty thousand bricks for the sum of five hundred dollars, and that George B. Chester was agent of plaintiffs, they will allow the defendant an offset of five hundred dollars."

The Court also gave the following instruction asked by the plaintiffs: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant and George Chester entered into a contract by which the defendant was to make fifty thousand bricks and the plaintiffs were to pay him five hundred dollars therefor, that in order to bind the plaintiffs by such contract then it must be shown that the plaintiffs assented thereto or authorized George Chester to make such a contract in order to bind the plaintiffs thereby."

The trial, being before a jury, resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiffs for sixty-nine dollars and sixty-eight cents. Plaintiffs moved for a new trial, assigning as error, among other things, that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict, and that the same was against law, but not particularly specifying that the amount of their recovery was too small. The motion having been overruled, plaintiffs appealed from the order.

Clark & Carpenter, for Appellants.

The alleged sale of bricks was for five hundred dollars, and not in writing, nor was there any memorandum thereof, or partial payment, or any delivery or acceptance. Under these circumstances the Court below erred in refusing to strike out the testimony given in support of the sale. (Hitt. Dig. 457; Stevens v. Steward, 3 Cal. 143; Malone v. Plato, 22 Cal. 104; 1 Greenleaf on Ev., Sec. 267; 3 Parsons on Con. 335; 1 Den. 48; 1 Comst. 261; 2 Kent, 666; Smith on Con. 327; 3 Bouv. Ins. 19; 12 Pick. 82; 13 Pick. 183; Haskell v. McHenry, 4 Cal. 411.)

The second instruction given for defendant was erroneous for the reason that the right of defendant to his counterclaim did not depend alone upon the facts that George B. Chester made a contract with defendant, and that George B. Chester was the agent of plaintiffs, as indicated by the instruction; but it would have been necessary to show further that in making the contract he was acting as agent and made such contract for the plaintiffs. The form of this instruction is such that the jury, if they found the existence of those two facts set forth in the instruction, were not called upon to, and probably did not, consider the other instructions of the Court. (See Gallagher v. Williamson, 23 Cal. 334; Pearson v. Snodgrass, 5 Cal. 479.)

Coffroth & Spaulding and J. W. Freeman, for Respondent.

The first point made by appellants is first made in this Court; we are, therefore, not called upon to pay any attention to it.

The rule that a verdict will not be disturbed as against evidence, when there is a conflict in the evidence, as there is here, was adopted in the first volume of our Reports, in Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 49, and has been steadily adhered to ever since, inclusive of the last volume.

The contract did not come within the Statute of Frauds. It was simply to make fifty thousand bricks for plaintiffs, and there was nothing provided about a delivery. There was no contract for delivery, nor was the property susceptible of delivery. As soon as the bricks were burned they became unconditionally the property of plaintiffs. The defendant had no further interest in them. The obligations of the contract were concluded.

The instructions given to the jury were correct; by them the jury were allowed to pass upon the question of the contract.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This is an appeal from an order denying the motion of the plaintiff for a new trial.

First — The point made that the verdict is for too small a sum of money cannot be considered here, inasmuch as it was not specified in the statement filed in support of the motion with the particularity required by the statute.

Second — The evidence in relation to the subject of the counterclaim was substantially conflicting, and the verdict will, therefore, not be disturbed here.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

Third — The counterclaim does not purport to be a contract for the sale or delivery of chattels; but one for the performance of labor. If it had been otherwise, however, the defendant was permitted, without objection, to prove it by other evidence than that required by the Statute of Frauds, and an objection on that point cannot be made now. It is true that at a subsequent stage of the trial a motion was made to strike out the evidence of the contract, because it was not in writing, which motion was denied by the Court; but the fact that the evidence was already before the jury, without objection, was a sufficient answer to the motion. The supposed incompetency of the evidence appeared on its face, and the objection should have been made when it was offered.

Fourth — The second instruction given at the instance of the defendant is somewhat open to criticism, in the respect that the question of the authority of George B. Chester to enter into the contract was not adverted to in that instruction; but in the first instruction given, upon request of the plaintiffs, the jury were distinctly told "that, in order to bind the plaintiffs by such contract, it must be shown that the plaintiffs assented thereto or authorized George Chester to make such a contract, in order to bind the plaintiffs thereby." In view of this distinct enunciation upon the point the jury could hardly have been misled by the omission occurring in the other instruction.

The order denying new trial is affirmed.

Argument for Appellant.

E. S. UTTER AND M. E. CALDEN v. TRUMAN F. CHAPMAN.BREACH OF CONTRACT TO FURNISH FREIGHT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.—

Where a contract was made to furnish a steamboat with five hundred tons of freight, at two dollars a ton, and the freight was not furnished: Held, that the measure of damages for such breach was not the difference between the freight money and what the boat actually earned during the time it would have taken to perform the contract, but the difference between the net profits that would have been made under the contract and the net profits which were or might, with reasonable diligence, have been made during such time.

BURDEN OF PROOF TO REDUCE DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.—In an action for breach of contract to furnish freight to a steamboat, the plaintiff is entitled to recover only the actual loss suffered from the breach; but to show that such loss was less than the profits that would have been made under the contract, the burden of proof is on the defendant.

ELEMENTS OF DAMAGE FOR FAILURE TO DELIVER FREIGHT.—A person who contracts to deliver freight to a steamboat, and fails to do so, is liable in damages for the actual loss thereby sustained by the steamboat; but he does not become a guarantor against any further loss, such as the boat may sustain by reason of fruitless efforts to procure profitable employment.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

This was an action to recover damages for breach of a contract, by which defendant agreed to furnish plaintiffs, who were owners of the steamboat "Lark" and her barge, with five hundred tons of grain, as freight, to be transported from Paradise City, in Stanislaus County, to Stockton, at two dollars per ton. A former appeal of the same cause will be found reported in 38 Cal. 659. The material facts, as found by the Court below, are stated in the opinion. Defendant appealed.

George A. Nourse, for Appellant.

The Court below treated the case as if defendant had guaranteed plaintiffs a certain amount of profit from running their boat and barge a certain time. That is not the contract. Even if defendant had actually chartered plaintiffs' boat and barge for the three weeks, no such rule of damages could be adopted. The rule upon which the judgment of the Court below is based amounts to this: that if one agrees to furnish freight to a carrier, to be transported at a given rate, and fails so to do, and the carrier has a steamboat, on which he could have carried the freight, then the one contracting to furnish freight has that boat on his hands during the time it would have been carrying his freight, and must pay the same freight money as if he had actually had the freight carried for him, less only what such steamboat may happen to earn during such time. This will not do. What the steamboat may actually do in such case, during such time, is only important to reduce, in certain contingencies, the damages assessed under the rules of law.

The true measure of damages, as we understand it, is ordinarily the excess of the price to be paid under a contract for carrying freight over and above the cost of carriage, subject, however, to the qualification laid down in the former appeal in this action, that the freighter must, in case of such breach of contract, get other freight, if he can, and that the price received on such other freight must be deducted from the amount otherwise due as damages. But where, as in this case, there was a market price or ruling rate of freight, the measure of damages would be the excess of the contract price over the market price. (Hale v. Trout, 35 Cal. 229.) The market price or ruling rate, at the time defendant's grain was to have been transported, was two dollars and a half per ton, so that plaintiffs, instead of suing defendant for damages, ought to have been grateful to him for preventing them from carrying freight at less than market rates.

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

Terry & Carr, for Respondents.

The trial of this case in the Court below was, as we contend, in exact conformity with the opinion of this Court, rendered on the former appeal. After the breach of contract by the defendant, the plaintiffs used every effort to procure employment from others. In order to procure such employment it was necessary to go with their boat to places where freight was, and it was necessary to keep the usual number of hands on the boat, so as to be able to transport such freight as offered, and to incur the reasonable expenditure required for this purpose; and when freight was offered, it was plaintiff's duty to receive and transport it; and the Court below found that the necessary expenses were the same that they would have been in performing the contract.

The true measure of damages was that adopted — the actual loss sustained by plaintiffs by reason of defendant's breach of contract, which is the difference between the actual earnings of plaintiffs' boat for the time required to perform the contract and what it would have earned if defendant had complied with his agreement.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The only question on this appeal relates to the measure of damages for the breach of a contract between the plaintiffs and defendant, whereby the latter agreed to furnish the former five hundred tons of grain, to be transported as freight, at the rate of two dollars per ton, by way of the river, from Paradise City to Stockton. The plaintiffs were the owners of a steamboat and barge, whereon the grain was intended to be shipped; and they applied to the defendant for the grain in due time, and offered to perform the contract on their part; but the defendant refused to deliver any of the grain, except eight tons. The Court finds that after their failure to obtain the grain, the plaintiffs employed their boat and barge in navigating the San Joaquin River and its tributaries during the time which would have been required to perform the contract with the defendant, and during that interval used all reasonable effort to procure employment for said boat and barge, but succeeded in obtaining freights to the value of only three hundred and forty-one dollars and eighty-four cents; and that, whilst so endeavoring to obtain freights, the expenses of the boat and barge were the same that they would have been in performing the contract with the defendant, if it had been performed.

When this case was here on a former appeal we endeavored to lay down a proper rule for the measure of damages on the new trial, which was ordered. On the second trial the Court below decided the measure of damages to be the contract price, to wit: one thousand dollars, less the earnings of the boat and barge, during the time which would have been required to perform the contract. Deducting the three hundred and forty-one dollars and eighty-four cents, earned by the boat and barge, from the one thousand dollars, it entered a judgment for the plaintiff for the remainder.

On the former appeal we held that the proper measure of damages was the difference between the contract price and what it would have cost the plaintiffs to perform the contract, less what the boat and barge actually earned, or might have earned, with reasonable diligence, during the time which would have been consumed in performing the contract. The Court finds that it would have required three weeks time to perform the contract, and that during that period the expenses of the boat and barge would have been forty dollars per day when running, and twenty-eight dollars per day when lying at the dock, taking in or discharging cargo. It is clear, therefore, if the contract had been performed that the plaintiffs' profits would have been the difference between the contract price of one thousand dollars and the expense of forty dollars per day when running, and twenty-eight dollars per day when lying at the dock. The findings further show if the contract had been performed the boat and barge, while so employed, would have been running about three fourths of the time, and would have been lying at the dock, whilst taking in and discharging cargo, about one fourth of the time. Calculating the cost of performing the contract at this rate, it would have amounted to seven hundred and seventy-seven dollars, leaving as profit, on a full performance of the contract, the sum of two hundred and twenty-three dollars. But, as we held on the former appeal, there must be deducted from this sum whatever amount the boat and barge actually earned, or might, with reasonable diligence, have earned, during the time required to perform the contract. It appears from the findings that they, in fact, earned three hundred and forty-one dollars and eighty-four cents; but in earning this sum, and in a reasonable effort to earn other sums (which efforts, as we have heretofore decided, it was their duty to make), the plaintiffs have incurred an expense of seven hundred and seventy-seven dollars. Deducting the sum earned from the expenses, and it leaves an excess of expenses over earnings of four hundred and thirty-five dollars and sixteen cents. The only serious question in the case is whether the defendant should be charged with this excess of expenses over the earnings of the boat and barge. If this question be answered in the affirmative, the judgment ought to have been for this sum, and for two hundred and twenty-three dollars, the profit which the plaintiffs would have made by performing the contract, making in the aggregate the sum of six hundred and fifty-eight dollars and sixteen cents. On the other hand, if the defendant is not liable for these expenses, the judgment should have been for the profits only (two hundred and twenty-three dollars). The correct interpretation of our decision on the former appeal is that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover only the actual loss which they suffered from the breach of the contract; and if it appeared that during the space of time which would have been requisite for the performance of the contract by them they had, or by the use of reasonable diligence might have realized a profit from the use of the boat and barge equal to or exceeding the profit which they would have made by performing the contract, in that event they would have suffered no loss, and would have been entitled to nominal damages only. The burden of proof was on the defendant to show that the boat and barge had, or might have realized a profit, and if the net earnings did not equal or exceed the profit which the plaintiffs would have made by performing the contract, then such net earnings would reduce, pro tanto, the amount of plaintiffs' loss.

But we did not decide, nor intend to intimate, that the defendant stood in the relation of a guarantor, incurring the hazard of whatever loss the plaintiffs might sustain by reason of a fruitless effort to obtain a profitable employment for the boat and barge. It was incumbent on the defendant to show, if he could, that a profit had been or might have been realized by the boat and barge; and, failing in this, the only result would have been that the plaintiffs would have recovered the difference between the contract price and the cost of performing the contract. But if a person should charter a ship for a number of months, or for a long voyage, and should, immediately thereafter, repudiate the contract and refuse to perform it, no one, I apprehend, would seriously contend that the owner could send the vessel on a long and expensive voyage, in a fruitless effort to obtain profitable employment for her during the term of the charter party, without the consent of the charterer, and thereby fasten upon the latter the whole expense of the voyage. In such a case the proper measure of damages would be the difference between the contract price and the cost which the owner would have incurred if the contract had been performed, subject only to such a reduction as the charterer would have been entitled to on his proving affirmatively that the ship had, or might by a reasonable effort have earned a profit during the term of the charter party. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the defendant is not chargeable with the loss incurred by the plaintiffs whilst seeking for employment for the boat and barge, and that that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover only the profits they would have realized by performing the contract, viz: the sum of two hundred and twenty-three dollars in gold coin.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with an order to the Court below to enter judgment for the plaintiffs for two hundred and twenty-three dollars in United States gold coin.

FRANCISCO SABICHI v. MEREJILDO AGUILAR,
JOSE LA SUZ VALENZUELA, VICENTE RUIZ, AND GEORGE LEHMAN.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS UNDER ACT OF 1855.—The final confirmation of a Mexican grant, so as to set the Statute of Limitations in motion, under the Act of 1855, passed by the Legislature of California, was the issuance of a patent to the grantee.

NOTE.—Under the Act of 1863, amending the Statute of Limitations of 1855 (Laws 1863, p. 827), the final confirmation which set the Statute of Limitations in motion was the final confirmation of a survey by the Courts of the United States provided for in the Act of Congress of June 14th, 1860, or the issuance of a patent.

Argument for Appellant.

Issue.—The approval of a survey of a Mexican grant, by the Surveyor General alone, was not final, so as to set the Statute of Limitations in motion.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventeenth Judicial District, County of Los Angeles.

This was an action of ejectment, commenced April 18th, 1868, for a lot in the City of Los Angeles. Defendants answered, setting up the Statute of Limitations and adverse possession thereunder since 1856. The cause was tried, without a jury, in September, 1869, and the Court below found as facts the holding by the plaintiff of the pueblo title, and the various circumstances relating to its confirmation, survey, and approval of survey, as set forth in the opinion of Justice WALLACE, and concluded as follows:

“8. That about the month of July, 1867, an application was made on the part of the authorities of the City of Los Angeles to J. Wilson, United States Commissioner of the General Land Office, at Washington, for the issuance of a patent for said city lands, to which said application he replied: ‘That the Statute does not provide for the issuing of patents for this class of claims, and without authority of law it cannot of course be done. The confirmation under the statute, together with the plat of survey, constitute the evidence of title.’ And he, therefore, declined to issue any patent, and no further proceedings have been taken since.”

As a conclusion of law the Court found that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the Statute of Limitations, and rendered judgment for defendants. The plaintiff appealed.

Glassell, Chapman & Smith, for Appellant.

This action was commenced within five years from the passage of our Limitation Act of April 18th, 1863. His right to recover was therefore not barred, unless there was a final confirmation of the city title previous to the passage of that Act. The statute defines "final confirmation" to be "the patent issued by the Government of the United States, or the final determination of the official survey," under the Act of Congress of June 14th, 1860. The Court below held that the publication of the notice of approval of survey by the United States Surveyor General constituted a "final determination of the official survey," under the Act of 1860, and hence its conclusion that the action was barred. It held that the Act of 1860 was retrospective in its operation, and required the Surveyor General to publish notice of his approval of all surveys in his office—as well those already made and approved, as those thereafter to be made. And thus this survey, although already finally determined under the Act of 1851, became again finally determined under the Act of 1860. Such a construction is plainly erroneous. The Act of 1860, with the exceptions specified in section five, did not apply to surveys made and approved before its passage. (12 U. S. Stats. at Large, 33; United States v. Sepulveda, 1 Wall. 104.) The Surveyor General was neither required nor authorized by it to take any steps whatever in regard to such surveys. His proceedings under it, in regard to the survey in question, were therefore simply null and void, and the case stands precisely as if no such proceedings had been taken.

The Court below seemed to attach some importance to the opinion of the Commissioner of the Land Office, that, in the class of cases to which this belongs, the law gave him no authority to issue a patent. If this were so, it would only prove that under the law there could never be a "final confirmation" of the lands of the city. It would not alter the statute which provides that the time should only commence running from the final confirmation, or the date of the statute. It is plain, however, that the Commissioner was mistaken, as the law required him to issue a patent in every case. (1 Brightly's Dig. 118, Sec. 46; 12 U. S. Stats. at Large, 33, Sec. 5.) And this view of the case, we understand, has been finally adopted by the Land Office.

Argument for Respondents.

Howard & Sepulveda, for Respondents.

There is nothing in the case to show that the action of the Surveyor General in the approval of the survey was final, prior to the passage of the Act of 1860. Inasmuch as he acted on the survey under the law of 1860, the presumption is that it remained among the unfinished surveys and business when that Act went into operation. It is very probable that, after the indorsement, it remained in his office, on objections, and not remitted to the General Land Office, and came within the operation of the Act of 1860. That is the presumption, and it is not rebutted by the proof of the plaintiff. It was within the jurisdiction of the Surveyor General to decide whether the survey came under the Act of 1860. (12 U. S. Stats. at Large, 35.) His decision cannot be attacked collaterally. (6 Pet. 739.) It binds the government, the city, and those claiming under the city. (Menard v. Massey, 8 How. 293.) In order to show that the survey was final, it would be incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that at the date of the passage of the Act of 1860 no further act remained to be performed in relation to the survey. So long, however, as it remained in the office of the Surveyor General it was under his control. It must be held as a then "pending survey," in favor of the presumption created by the act of the officer and the findings of the Court below.

The case of United States v. Sepulveda, 1 Wallace, 104, does not apply, because it there appeared affirmatively that the survey was complete under the Act of 1851.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, to whom the decision of the question was confided by law, held that in this class of claims the decree and survey introduced in evidence was all the patent authorized by law. By the Act of July 4th, 1886, that officer has control of "the issuing of patents for all grants of land, under the authority of the Government of the United States, and Spanish grants under the President of the United States. (1 Brightly's Dig. 462; 18 How. 48; 19 How. 202; 9 How. 449.) The decision of the Commissioner, that a patent could not issue in the case, was a valid decision, which could not be attacked collaterally, even if he could be compelled by mandamus to act, which is doubtful, as the case is one in which the officer must exercise discretion. (Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 497; 17 How. 225.) If the decision of the Commissioner is correct that the decree of confirmation and the survey are the patent, and the counsel for plaintiff are correct, that the survey was under the Act of 1851, then the confirmation was final on July 2d, 1859.

The Act of 1860, section five, gives to a survey, approved under the Act, "the same effect and validity in law as if a patent for the land so surveyed had been issued by the United States." It cannot be doubted that it was the intention of this Act, as well as that of the Legislature of 1863, to give to an approved survey all the force of a patent. After the survey there was no reason why the owner should delay his action of ejectment.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The plaintiff derails title to the premises in controversy (a lot in the City of Los Angeles) by grant from the municipal authorities; and the only question presented upon this appeal is the effect of the Statute of Limitations pleaded by the defendant in bar of the action.

The claim of the city as successor of the Pueblo of Los Angeles, including the lot in controversy, was duly confirmed under the Act of Congress of March 8d, 1851, providing for the settlement of private land claims in California; but no patent pursuant to such confirmation has been issued by the authorities of the United States. The defendants have been in possession of the premises ever since the year 1856. In September, 1858, a survey in the field was made of the lands confirmed, and in July, 1859, this survey, and the plat thereof, were approved in due form by the Surveyor General of the United States for the time being; and the plat thus approved by him remained in his office, subject to inspection, until the month of November, 1860.

In the meantime, on the 14th day of June, 1860, Congress passed the Act defining and regulating the jurisdiction of the District Courts of the United States in regard to the survey and location of confirmed private land claims in this State (12 U. S. Stats. at Large, 33); and in the months of September and October next succeeding its passage the Surveyor General, ex mero motu, and in assumed compliance with its provisions, published in the newspapers a notice of the fact of survey made, and its approval by him, which publication was conducted in the manner prescribed by the first section of the Act. The action having been commenced on the 13th day of April, 1868, and the defendants having pleaded the Statute of Limitations upon the foregoing facts appearing, the Court below rendered judgment in their favor.

The title of the plaintiff is derived from the Mexican Government, and it will be seen by reference to the Statute of Limitations, as amended in 1855, p. 109, that under its provisions he was at liberty to assert that title by an action "commenced within five years from the time of final confirmation of such title by the Government of the United States, or its legally constituted authorities."

Final confirmation within the intent of that statute (until the passage of the Act of Congress of January 14th, 1860, already referred to) was held by this Court to be "the issuance of the patent," and not the approval by the Surveyor General of a survey made by himself. (Johnson v. Van Dyke, 20 Cal. 225; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 46; Beach v. Gabriel, 29 Cal. 580.)

This construction of the Act of 1855 necessarily followed upon the views then recently announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in Castro v. Hendricks, 23 How. 438, where it was substantially held that over a survey, which had not itself been the subject of judicial proceedings to determine its correctness, but had merely been approved by the Surveyor General, the Commissioner of the General Land Office had supervisory authority. Of course this authority would terminate only with the issuance of the patent itself; for until then the duty of the Commissioner would continue, and his authority to see that the location, as actually made, was in conformity to the decree of confirmation as rendered — and until then the survey, as made and approved by the subordinate, the Surveyor General, so far from being definitely final, must necessarily be in fieri merely.

Congress having, however, passed the Act of June 14th, 1860, providing for the final determination of surveys by judicial proceedings before the Courts of the United States, the amendatory Statute of Limitations of the State, passed in 1863 (p. 327, Sec. 7), thereupon enacted that final confirmation should be the patent, or the final determination of the official survey under the provisions of that Act of Congress.

That a survey, if become final through judicial proceedings, under the Act of Congress of 1860, amounted to final confirmation, even under the Statute of Limitations of 1855, had been distinctly intimated here, in the year 1862, in the case of Johnson v. Van Dyke, supra, and the statute of the following year (1863), in this respect only, embodied in terms a rule already practically reached by this Court upon construction of the Act of April 11th, 1855. In Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 33 Cal. 448, it was held that in all cases in which the survey fell within the provisions of the Act of Congress of 1860, the final confirmation mentioned in the statute of 1855 "must be held to be the final judgment of the Courts on the question of location, and the date of such judgment, or the time when it becomes final, must be the terminus a quo of the statute period."

But I think it clear that the survey in question was not one of that character. It is found as a fact by the Court below that it was made pursuant to a decree of confirmation, rendered by the Board of United States Land Commissioners, and that the Surveyor General approved it on the 2d day of July, 1859.

As thus approved by that officer it was subject only to the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington. In United States v. Sepulveda, 1 Wallace, 104, it was held by the Supreme Court of the United States that a like survey, approved by the Surveyor General prior to the passage of the Act of June 14th, 1860, was not subject to revision by the District Court of the United States under that Act, unless at the time of the passage of the Act such survey was already returned into the District Court, or proceedings to contest it were already pending there. In that case, upon the suggestion of the District Attorney, to the effect that the survey as made did not conform to the final decree of confirmation rendered by the Board, an order had been made by the District Court of the United States that the Surveyor General return into Court for examination the plat of survey which he had approved. The return was made accordingly, and, upon hearing the objections, it was determined that the survey, as made and approved by the Surveyor General, was erroneous, and thereupon certain corrections, in that respect, were ordered by the Court. Upon appeal, however, the decree was reversed, and the District Court directed to dismiss the proceedings for want of jurisdiction. That case is, upon all points involved, conclusive of this—even had the District Court here, as there, attempted an adjudication of the survey, which, however, it did not. For in that case, and in this as well, the decree upon which the survey was founded was one rendered by the Board of Land Commissioners, and not by the District Court. The survey itself, there as well as here, had been approved by the Surveyor General at the date of the passage of the Act of Congress, and was not, at that time, already returned into the District Court, nor were any proceedings concerning it then pending before that tribunal. The publication of the notice by the Surveyor General, made in the case at bar, being wholly unauthorized by the Act, was, therefore, nugatory. The purpose of such a notice, when given in a proper case, is merely to initiate judicial proceedings looking to a decree concerning the validity of the particular survey to which the notice refers. It necessarily presupposes a case in which a decree may be rendered definitively determining the survey to be valid, and thereafter not open to question. Here, however, had any party in interest, pursuant to the notice given, sought to intervene for the protection of his supposed interest, the Court could have made no valid order in the premises, except an order dismissing the proceedings for want of jurisdiction to entertain them.

The approval of the official survey in this case was not a determination of its validity had under the Act of Congress of 1860. It was not the judicial determination provided by that Act, but was one made by the Surveyor General in the exercise of the quasi-judicial authority vested in him by the antecedent Acts of Congress, and subject to the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington; and the lapse of five years, after the approval so made by the Surveyor General, is ineffectual to bar a recovery by the plaintiff.

The judgment must, therefore, be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to render judgment for plaintiff upon the findings.

And it is so ordered.

Ejectment to recover the possession of a lot in the City of Los Angeles. The plaintiff claims title under a grant made by the proper municipal authorities of the city, and such title, it is assumed by both parties, was sufficient to enable the person holding it to maintain ejectment. The title of the city was finally confirmed in 1858. No patent has issued to the city, but the survey was approved by the Surveyor General, July 2d, 1859, and since that time has remained in his office and has not been returned into the District Court, nor have proceedings been initiated to contest it. The defendants and their grantors have been in the adverse possession since 1856. The action was commenced April 13th, 1863. The Court below held that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations as amended April 18th, 1863.

The statute had not commenced to run in this case when the Act of 1863 took effect. It was held in Johnson v. Vandyke, 20 Cal. 295; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 46; and Beach v. Gabriel, 29 Cal. 580, that "final confirmation," within the meaning of the Act of 1855 amendatory of the Statute of Limitations, was the issuing of the patent. As no patent had issued to the city, the time had not commenced to run under the Act of 1855 against the plaintiff's grantor when the Act of 1863 took effect.

The seventh section of the statute of 1863 defined "final confirmation" for the purposes of that Act alone, and was not intended to have a retroactive effect, so as to set the statute running by construction. And it may be added that an approval of a survey which became final in any other mode than under the provisions of the Act of Congress of June 14th, 1860, will not come within the provisions of section seven of the Act of 1863.

This action having been commenced less than five years after the Act of 1863 took effect, and no portion of the time provided by the statute of 1855 for the commencement of actions having run when the Act of 1863 took effect, the action was not barred by the Statute of Limitations.

The appeal is taken from the judgment. The findings show that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the possession of the premises in suit.

I am of the opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment, on the findings of fact, for the plaintiff.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT concurred in the opinion of Mr. Justice WALLACE.

Mr. Justice NILES concurred in the opinion of Mr. Justice RHODES.

BRODISH JOHNSON, MOSES LAZARUS, AND FRAN-COIS W. BROOKS v. LOUIS CHELY.

ACTION AGAINST TENANT FOR HOLDING OVER.—In an action of unlawful detainer, against a tenant for holding over, the mere fact that the defendant has been in the quiet and peaceable possession of the premises for one year before the commencement of the suit, will not defeat the action.

ISSUE.—In such action the relation of landlord and tenant must be shown to exist, otherwise the plaintiff cannot recover, and if that relation is shown to exist, the defendant must be permitted to prove, if he can, that he did not enter under the lease, but, being already in possession, was induced to accept a lease from the plaintiff by fraudulent and false representations that the plaintiff owned the property, when it belonged to another, and, if the tenant can show such state of facts, he is not estopped by the lease.

RULE.—The rule in ejectment, that if the defendant can show that he did not enter under the lease, but, being already in possession, was induced by the plaintiff through false representations that he owned the premises, to accept the lease, that then this state of facts destroys the relation of landlord and tenant and removes the estoppel, is also the rule in an action of unlawful detainer against a tenant for holding over.

Argument for Appellant.

JURISDICTION OF COUNTY COURT.—The County Courts have jurisdiction of actions of unlawful detainer against tenants for holding over.

APPEAL from the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiffs recovered judgment in the Court below, and the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

B. S. Brooks, for Appellant.

The County Court, under the Constitution, had no jurisdiction of the action. It was not intended that the summary proceeding provided for in the Act should be a substitute for the action of ejectment. (Owen v. Doty, 27 Cal. 502; Hodgkins v. Jordan, 29 Cal. 577.)

The defendant had a right to show that the relations of landlord and tenant did not exist between him and the plaintiff, because the action could only be maintained between those who hold that relation by express contract and directly; and in order to show that, the proof which he offered was pertinent—that is, to show that he did not enter under plaintiff; that being in possession of the property he was induced by fraud and false representations to attorn to the plaintiff and to recognize him as a landlord; but afterwards, finding out the falsity of these representations and the fraud which had been perpetrated upon him, he repudiated the plaintiff and attorned to the true owner. (Fewksbury v. Magraff, 33 Cal. 237; McDevitt v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 592; Walls v. Preston, 28 Cal. 224; Connor v. Jones, 28 Cal. 59; Henderson v. Allen, 23 Cal. 519; Wheelock v. Warshauer, 34 Cal. 265; Reay v. Cotter, 29 Cal. 168.)

In an action of forcible entry and detainer all matters of legal excuse, justification, or avoidance, can be given in evidence under a general denial of the allegations of the complaint. (Watson v. Whitney, 23 Cal. 375.)

Argument for Respondent.

Edward J. Pringle, for Respondent.

If the latter part of section three thousand one hundred and thirty-eight (Hittell) refers to the whole Act, and not to cases of force only, it means that the landlord must bring his suit before the expiration of one year from the denial of his title, or from the last payment of rent; any other construction would defeat the main purposes of the remedy. The last rent was paid on November fifteenth, and the suit was brought on September fourth, thereafter.

The facts which the defendant sets up to avoid the lease constitute an equitable defense, if any, and the County Court has no jurisdiction. An equitable defense may be interposed to an action of ejectment, because under our system the same Court has jurisdiction as well of the equitable remedy invoked by the defendant, as of the legal remedy invoked by the plaintiff. When the defendant presents his equitable defense he becomes an actor, and his defense must have all the essentials of a bill in equity. (Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 671.) As such a bill could not be presented by a plaintiff to the County Court, it follows necessarily that the defendant cannot make himself actor or plaintiff by the presentation of such a defense. Such a defense involves the question of title.

In Reay v. Cotter, 29 Cal. 170, the Court said: "The Act in question was not intended to apply to any case where the title to the land could be made a question, but only to cases where, from the nature of the relation between the parties, no such question could be made because prohibited by law." * * * "In such case title is not, and cannot be made, a question."

In Mecham v. McKay, 37 Cal. 164, the Court says: "But a more valid objection, even than this, to the admissibility of this testimony, may perhaps be found in the fact that it is an attempt to try title in an action for unlawful detainer."

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, C. J.

What is the appellant's offer in this case, but an attempt to prove that the true title is in Le Roy and not in the respondents?

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This is an action brought in the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco, under the provisions of the Act of April 27th, 1862 (p. 652), to recover of the defendant the possession of certain tenements as a tenant holding over after demand of rent due under a lease, and failure to pay such rent for the space of three days.

The complaint alleges that in 1867 the plaintiffs, Johnson, Lazarus, and Francis Brooks, as landlords, leased the premises to the defendant, to hold from month to month, at the rent of thirty-five dollars per month, payable in advance; that the defendant entered under said lease, and still occupies said premises; that on the 15th August, 1868, three hundred and fifteen dollars was due for rent; that on August thirtieth thereafter demand was made for a surrender of the possession, and that defendant refused to quit the possession, or to pay the rent due, etc.

The answer denies the making of the lease alleged, or any lease, or that the defendant went into possession thereunder; denies that any rent is due from the defendant to the plaintiffs; alleges that the defendant was in adverse possession in 1862, occupying the premises by himself and tenants for many years; that while so in possession the plaintiffs falsely represented to him that they were the owners in fee of the premises, and had been so adjudged to be by the Supreme Court of the State, and threatened to bring a suit against him unless he would attorn to them, etc. The answer further alleges that the defendant believed these statements of the plaintiffs, and, being induced and deceived thereby, he agreed to become their tenant, and under the influence of such belief he did for some time thereafter pay rent to the plaintiffs; but in December, 1867, one Le Roy, who was the true owner of the premises, brought an action against the defendant for their recovery, and the defendant then ascertaining that the representation of the plaintiffs in that respect was false, and that Le Roy was the owner in fee of the premises, renounced and disavowed his tenancy to the plaintiffs, and became and still is the tenant of Le Roy.

At the trial the plaintiffs put in evidence the following agreement:

“ This instrument witnesseth, That I, Louis Chely, have this day hired of George J. Brooks & Co., of the City of San Francisco, all that certain lot of land in said city situate on the westerly side of Battery street, and now known as number eight hundred and fifteen and eight hundred and thirteen Battery street, being thirty-five feet in width, for the term of two years from date, at the monthly rent of forty dollars per month, payable in gold coin every month in advance. And I, Louis Chely, do also agree to pay all assessments levied on said lot during said term, for the keeping of the street and crossings in repair.

“ In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, at the City of San Francisco, this 15th day of June, A. D. 1865.

“ LOUIS CHELY.

“ In presence of G. W. H. Faulkner.”

And proved in connection therewith, that at the time it was signed by the defendant the firm of George J. Brooks & Co. was composed of Francis W. Brooks only, and that at the expiration of the term of two years mentioned in that instrument, the defendant not desiring “ to take another written lease,” had agreed with the agent of the plaintiffs that he would continue to occupy the premises at the rent of thirty-five dollars per month, and that under this arrangement he had paid the rent up to November 1867, making his last payment on that day.

The defendant moved for a nonsuit on several grounds; but the motion was denied, and this presents the first point for our consideration. The first and second grounds of the motion were, that there was a variance between the evidence and the complaint, in that the demise proved was not the one counted upon. But it is obvious that the demise counted upon and proven was that made in 1867, at thirty-five dollars per month, by the witness Howard, as agent for the plaintiffs, at the expiration of the term of two years, mentioned in the writing of date of June 15th, 1865. The third ground of the motion for a nonsuit was, that the evidence showed that the defendant had been in the quiet possession and occupation of the premises for more than one year before the commencement of the action.

The mere fact of the defendant having been in the quiet and peaceable possession for one year before the commencement of the suit would not defeat the action in this case. Such a possession would defeat an action counting upon a detainer by actual force, under section ten of the Act — the action here, however, is for an unlawful detainer — occurring by reason of occupation continued, with non-payment of rent due, though the rent was demanded within one year after it so became due — the proceeding being under sections three and four of the statute. The last ground of the motion was that the County Court had no jurisdiction of the action, but that the District Court alone has cognizance of such a case. This point, however, is answered by the cases of Caulfield v. Stevens, 28 Cal. 118; Brummagim v. Spencer, 29 Cal. 661, and Mecham v. McKay, 37 Cal. 154.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the motion for a nonsuit was properly denied.

Second — The Court below refused to permit the defendant to prove that he was already in possession of the premises when he agreed to become the tenant of the plaintiffs, and that they induced him to assume the relation of tenant to them by their fraudulent misrepresentation that they were the owners of the premises.

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, C. J.

In this, I think, the Court was in error. In this action the relation of landlord and tenant must be shown to exist, otherwise the plaintiff cannot recover, and if the facts alleged by the defendant in these respects be established, the tenancy set up by the plaintiffs would be disproven.

In an action of ejectment the tenant cannot be permitted to dispute the title of his landlord. That is the general rule. If, however, the defendant in ejectment be able to show that he did not enter under the lease, but that being already in possession he was induced to accept a lease from the plaintiff, through deception and imposition practised upon him by the latter, then he is not estopped to dispute the title of the plaintiff. Such circumstances appearing destroy the relation of landlord and tenant, and so remove the estoppel, which must otherwise conclude the defendant by reason of such a relation existing, and the plaintiff is thus thrown back to establish his title in the ordinary way, if he can. He cannot turn the defendant out by mere force of such a lease.

I think that the same result must follow, so far as the defendant is concerned, in an action of unlawful detainer, in which a lease relied upon to establish the relation of landlord and tenant is shown to have been obtained under such circumstances as would not have estopped the tenant from disputing the title of the landlord in a Court in which the title could be tried. The defense, wherever set up, is of legal and not of merely equitable cognizance; and it is unreasonable that one who might rely upon that defense, if sued for the possession in the District Court, is not to be heard to do so in the County Court, and is thus to be turned out of possession because his adversary has summoned him to one Court of law instead of to another Court of law.

I am of opinion, therefore, that if the defendant prove his defense in this respect it must defeat the action in the County Court, where a recovery can only be had by establishing the relation of landlord and tenant to be existing between the parties.

BROKER'S COMMISSION ON SALE OF LAND.—If the owner of land employs another person to sell for him his land, at an agreed rate of commission, and the broker finds a purchaser who is willing to take the land at the price fixed, the owner cannot, by a refusal to sell to him, or by a sale to another, avoid the contract, and escape the payment of the commission.

CONCLUSIVENESS OF JUDGMENT.—A judgment is conclusive only upon questions involved in the action, and upon which it depends, or upon matters which, under the issues, might have been litigated and decided in the suit.

FINDING OF COURT ON MATTERS NOT IN ISSUE.—A finding by the Court, without the issues made, is unnecessary, and is not conclusive on the parties in another action, in which the question upon which the finding was made is in issue.

INTOXICATION AT TIME OF CONTRACTING.—A party may show, in order to defeat a settlement made by him, that, at the time, he was incapable of contracting intelligently, by reason of intoxication, and evidence of the party's condition, as to being intoxicated several hours after the settlement, may be given, as tending to throw light on his condition when the settlement was made.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

In August, 1869, the plaintiff in this action brought an action of forcible entry and detainer against the defendant in this action, to recover possession of a lot in San Francisco.

Statement of Facts.

The defendant filed a supplemental answer, in which he set up, that since the commencement of the action he had paid the plaintiff the sum of three hundred dollars, in full satisfaction of the cause of action, and of all other claims which the plaintiff had against the defendant, and particularly of the cause of action in this suit, which was then pending in the Fourth District Court. The Court found that there had been a forcible entry, but found, also, the facts set up in the supplemental answer, and gave judgment for the defendant.

The defendant in this action pleaded said judgment in the County Court as an estoppel.

On the trial of this action the defendant, to show that the cause of action herein had been adjudicated, offered in evidence the judgment roll in the forcible entry case; but the Court ruled it out on the objection of the plaintiff.

The defendant offered in evidence a receipt given by the plaintiff at the time of the alleged settlement, above spoken of.

The Court gave the following instruction to the jury:

"Yet, if you believe from the evidence that the defendant found the plaintiff in an intoxicated condition, on or about the 13th day of May last; that he took him to a saloon for the purpose of plying him with more liquor; if you believe he did take him to a saloon, and plied him with liquor until he got him in a stupefied state, and in such state that he did not know what he was doing, and then pretended to make a settlement with him, and pass over a sum of money to him, and got him to sign a receipt, such a settlement as that is void, and not binding upon the plaintiff; consequently, if you believe that the settlement spoken of is such a settlement as that, and no other, then you will find for the plaintiff the amount that was due him, less the sum of money that was paid him at that time."

The defendant, by his counsel, excepted, on the ground

Argument for Appellant.

"that it is in effect a charge upon the facts and the evidence in the case; that it argues the case in favor of the plaintiff, presenting forcibly to the jury what said plaintiff sought to prove, and claimed to have proved by the evidence; and that to charge upon the legal effect, upon a contract of drunkenness of a party thereto, at the time he entered into such contract, it was not necessary or proper to allude to, nor present to the jury, the matters recited in said charge, but only the charge in general terms as to the effect upon any alleged contract, of the drunkenness of one of the contracting parties at the time of assenting to such contract."

The plaintiff recovered judgment, and the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

George A. Nourse, for Appellant.

The Court erred in refusing to admit in evidence the judgment roll in the forcible entry and detainer action. The claim of plaintiff in this action, and the action itself, could be settled by agreement between the parties, by payment of a less sum than that claimed by plaintiff, it not being a liquidated debt. (Cumber v. Wane, 1 Smith, Lea. Cases, p. 439,* and cases there cited, by editor in the notes to sixth American edition; Harper v. Graham, 20 Ohio, 105; Stata. 1867-8, p. 31.)

The settlement pleaded by the defendant in this action is shown by the judgment roll offered in evidence to have been adjudicated between the same parties in another action, so that it was res judicata at the time of the trial in this action. The judgment being pleaded as an estoppel, the judgment roll should have been admitted, and the jury instructed, that by the judgment the plaintiff was estopped to deny the settlement alleged in the answer. (Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 How. St. Tr. 538; Gahan v. Mainly, 1 Irish T. R.

Argument for Respondent.

54; Outram v. Morewood, 8 East, 345; Baxter v. N. E. M. Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 277.)

The evidence in said action is insufficient to sustain the verdict, in that it fails to show that plaintiff ever became entitled to the commissions for which he sues.

The defendant did not give to plaintiff the exclusive right to sell the land. Not having done so, defendant had the right to sell the land at any time before the plaintiff should bring to him a purchaser able and willing then and there to buy the land on the terms proposed. (Chilton v. Butler, 1 E. D. Smith, 150; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. S. C. 145; Barnes v. Roberts, 5 Bosworth, 73; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462.)

When plaintiff brought Cusheon to defendant, as a purchaser, nothing further was done than for defendant to give Cusheon, without consideration, a promise that he should have fifteen days to complete his search and purchase at a price certain.

The defendant had the right, at any time before the bargain was closed, to recall his offer and sell to another. (1 Parsons on Contracts, 353; id. 405.)

B. S. Brooks, for Respondent.

The plea of a former adjudication could not be an answer to this demand. The matter set up is no defense. The question whether the cause of action in this suit was released could not by any possibility be at issue in that suit, nor was that Court competent to determine the question. The rule is well settled in this Court: 1. It must be the judgment of a competent Court. 2. It applies only to matters put in issue on the record, and not to matters which come in question incidentally—that is, it applies to facts in issue as distinguished from facts in controversy. 3. The point must be directly determined by the former judgment. The issue here is whether Phelan's claim for brokerage was paid or settled. That question could not possibly be at issue on the record, or tried, or determined by the County Court in the action of forcible entry, though it might become incidentally a fact in controversy; but it did not become even that. (Fulton v. Hanlon, 20 Cal. 450; Hardenbergh v. Bacon, 33 Cal. 356; Garwood v. Garwood, 29 Cal. 514; Love v. Waltz, 7 Cal. 250; Chase v. Swain, 9 Cal. 130; Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266; Boston v. Hayes, 33 Cal. 31; People v. Sups. of S. F., 27 Cal. 655; Hobbs v. Duff, 23 Cal. 596; Hough v. Waters, 30 Cal. 309; Earl v. Bull, 15 Cal. 421; Pico v. Webster, 12 Cal. 140; Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 Cal. 11.)

Upon these undisputed facts the defendant owed the plaintiff the precise liquidated sum of one thousand five hundred dollars according to the authorities cited by the defendant's counsel in his brief, and the case in this Court of Middleton v. Findla, 25 Cal. 76, and Blood v. Shannon, 29 Cal. 359.

There was no error in excluding the judgment roll in the County Court.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

1. The defendant employed the plaintiff as his broker, to sell for him certain land at an agreed commission of five per cent on the amount of the sale. The plaintiff procured and brought to the defendant one Cusheon, who agreed with the defendant, verbally, to purchase the land for the sum of thirty thousand dollars. The defendant gave Cusheon a memorandum in writing, by which he promised to sell to him for the price named, and to give him fifteen days to complete the search and purchase of the land. Before the expiration of the fifteen days, Cusheon tendered to the defendant a performance in accordance with the agreement, and was informed that the land had been sold to another party. The plaintiff brings suit to recover the amount of his commissions.

Opinion of the Court — NILES, J.

It is not contended upon either part that there was a valid and binding contract of sale between Cusheon and the defendant. The defendant claims that for this reason the plaintiff's commission was not earned. This theory is untenable. The plaintiff could do no more than procure a purchaser who was acceptable to the defendant, and willing and able to purchase the land upon terms satisfactory to him. He could not control the will of the defendant or force him to make a binding contract with the purchaser, or prevent him from selling to another. In the absence of an agreement to that effect, the principal cannot refuse to pay the broker's commissions upon the ground that he did not choose to make the sale. He cannot avoid the contract by his voluntary act disabling himself from performance.

2. The judgment roll in the action of forcible entry and detainer was properly excluded. The issue in that case was whether a certain sum of money had been paid by the defendant and received by plaintiff in satisfaction, discharge, and settlement of the cause of action involved in that suit. It was alleged in the answer in that case, and found by the Court, that the money was paid and received in discharge and settlement of this present action as well as of the one then pending. But this was a finding without the issues made, and unnecessary in the decision of that case. It was not necessary that the court should find that the payment to plaintiff was made and received in "satisfaction, discharge, and settlement of every claim, debt, or cause of action," but only of the cause of action then under consideration. At most, the fact of the settlement of this case could be only incidentally in controversy in the County Court. It is even difficult to see how it could be in controversy at all. A judgment is only conclusive upon questions involved in the suit, and upon which it depends, or upon matters which might have been litigated and decided in the suit.

3. It was competent for plaintiff to rebut defendant's evidence of the settlement and receipt by proof that at the time of the transaction the plaintiff was incapable of contracting intelligently by reason of intoxication. The proof upon this point was conflicting. There was evidence tending to show that the plaintiff was intoxicated when he signed the receipt, and other evidence to the effect that he was then sober, but that the completion of the business was followed by a protracted carouse. The Court permitted the plaintiff's wife to testify that he was brought to his home by the defendant and another person several hours after the time when the receipt was shown to have been signed, and in a state of thorough intoxication. The fact to be arrived at was the mental condition of the plaintiff at the time the business was transacted. We cannot say that under the circumstances of the case the Court erred in holding that his condition a few hours later in the same evening would throw some light upon the question under consideration.

 Points decided.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Louis Branson, for Appellant.

The defendants took the first step, but not the second, or third. Failing to file the statement within five days after the filing of the notice, they lost their right to move for a new trial, and the County Court had no power to restore it, and had no jurisdiction to make the order for a new trial. (Practice Act, Sec. 195; Adams v. The City of Oakland, 8 Cal. 510; Caney v. Silverthorne, 9 Cal. 67; Wing v. Owen et al. 9 Cal. 247; Munch v. Williams et al. 24 Cal. 167; *Easterly v. County Courts have jurisdiction to grant new trials. (Dickinson v. Van Horn, 9 Cal. 211.)

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

The County Court did not exceed its jurisdiction in granting the defendants' motion for a new trial. It had rendered judgment in the case, and had jurisdiction both of the subject matter and of the parties. The power to grant new trials has been considered, from a very early day, to be inherent in all Courts of superior jurisdiction; and in this State County Courts are declared to be Courts of that character. (Stats. 1863, p. 337, Sec. 37; Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391.) If Courts grant new trials in disregard of the statutory methods of procedure, it is error; but it cannot be said that for that reason there is a want of jurisdiction, and that their orders are, therefore, void.

In this case the order of the County Court granting the new trial was clearly erroneous. The paper of the 22d of March, which counsel for defendants call a motion and statement for new trial, and on which the order seems to have been made, was not a statement. It, in no respect, meets the statutory requirements. It contains no part of the evidence, nor a reference thereto, nor does it directly state any facts. Moreover, it was never, in any manner, certified to be correct.

But however erroneous the order may have been, it cannot be brought up for review by a writ of certiorari. The District Court was right, therefore, in denying the application for the writ, and its order is affirmed.

HOMESTEAD — PATENT.— Upon the death of a husband, who has taken up and entered a homestead, under the Act of Congress of May 20th, 1862, if the five years have not expired for a patent to issue, the widow, upon performing the remaining conditions, is entitled to a patent, and acquires a title in fee, free from all trust in favor of the children, whether adults or minors.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, Yolo County.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argument for Respondents.

C. P. Sprague, for Appellants.

It is the theory of the common law that all property that is descendible is also devisable. (4 Kent, 511.) Is not the reverse of this proposition true? Is not all descendible property also devisable? If this proposition be true, the land in controversy could not descend to the heirs, from the fact that St. Louis, under the statute, could not have disposed of it by will, or otherwise. Our statute appears to sanction the common law rule, with the additional provision that all property devisable is subject to the payment of the debts of deceased persons. The land in dispute not being subject to St. Louis' debts, is neither devisable nor descendible. (Hittell, 7326.)

A State homestead, under our statute, is neither common property, subject to distribution, nor the separate property of either husband or wife, but is a joint tenancy, with the right of survivorship, and vests absolutely in the survivor immediately upon the death of one of the parties. (Buchanan Estate, 8 Cal. 507.) This seems clearly to be the intent of the Act of Congress of May 20th, 1862; the widow taking by right of survivorship, which is analogous to "irregular succession" in the civil law, defined to be "that which is established by law in favor of certain persons." (Bouvier's Law Dictionary.)

The questions of law to be determined on this appeal are:

I. Did the plaintiff, Margaret, by the patent from the United States Government, take the legal title in her own right, or as trustee for all the heirs of Colbert St. Louis, deceased?

II. Did Colbert St. Louis take the interest he held in said land by gift, within the meaning of section one of the Act

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

In 1864 one Colbert St. Louis took up and entered as a homestead, under the Act of Congress of May 20th, 1862 (Stats. 1862, p. 392), a quarter section of the public land of the United States, in Yolo County, and immediately entered upon and continued to occupy and cultivate said tract as a homestead until his death, in 1866. When he entered upon the land as a homestead he had a wife and several children, who resided with him on the tract until his death, after which the widow and children continued to occupy and reside upon it until the year 1867, when she intermarried with one Jarvis, and from thenceforth she and her husband, together with her children, have resided upon and occupied the land until the present time. At the time of his death, St. Louis left several children by a former marriage, all of whom have attained their majority, and also several children by his last marriage, who then were, and yet are, minors. At the expiration of five years from the time when the land was entered by St. Louis as a homestead, the widow, on making the proper proofs, obtained a patent in her own name from the United States, vesting in her the legal title to the premises. This action is brought by the widow and her present husband against the adult and minor children of her deceased husband to quiet her title to the land, the fee of which she claims to hold in her own right, and for her own exclusive use, free from any trust for either the adult or minor children. On the other hand, the children, in their answers, claim that she holds the legal title partly, if not wholly, in trust for them, and they pray to have the trust declared, and for a partition according to their respective rights. The Court below decided that the widow was entitled to eight twenty-fourths of the land, and that the children were entitled to the remainder, in certain proportions. From this judgment the widow and her husband have appealed, claiming that she is entitled to the whole. Section two of the Homestead Act provides "that no certificate shall be given, or patent issued therefor, until the expiration of five years from the date of such entry; and if, at the expiration of such time, or at any time within two years thereafter, the person making such entry, or if he be dead, his widow, or, in case of her death, his heir or devisee, or in case of a widow making such entry, her heirs or devisee, in case of her death, shall prove by credible witnesses that he, she, or they have resided upon or cultivated the same for the term of five years immediately succeeding the time of filing the affidavit aforesaid, and shall make affidavit that no part of said land has been alienated, and that he has borne true allegiance to the Government of the United States; then, in such case, he, she, or they, if at that time a citizen of the United States, shall be entitled to a patent; as in other cases provided for by law. And provided further, that in case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children under twenty-one years of age, the right and fee shall inure to the benefit of said infant child or children; and the executor, administrator, or guardian may, at any time within two years after the death of the surviving parent, and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such children, for the time being, have their domicile, sell said land for the benefit of said infants, but for no other purpose; and the purchaser shall acquire the absolute title by the purchase, and be entitled to a patent from the United States, on payment of the office fees, and sum of money herein specified."

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

These provisions leave no room for a reasonable doubt that, on the death of the husband, his widow, on performing the remaining conditions of occupation and payment, became entitled to the patent in her own name. The statute so expressly declares, and it is only in the event that there is no widow, or if there be one, then in the event of her death, that the patent shall go to the children. That this was the intention of Congress is made perfectly manifest by the provision that in case of the death of both the father and mother, "the right and fee shall inure to the benefit of said infant child or children; and by the further provision that at any time within two years after the death of the surviving parent the land may be sold for the sole benefit of such minor children, and the purchaser will be entitled to a patent in his own name. But by the very terms of the Act, even the minor children, whose interests are so tenderly regarded, will not be entitled to the right and fee of the land, except in the event of the death of both their parents. The considerations which prompted these provisions doubtless were that on the death of the father, the mother became the head of the family, and would be impelled by her natural affection for her children to use the property for their advantage as well as her own. She was deemed to be the safest depository of the title, as she was the head of the family and the natural guardian of the children, charged with their support and maintenance. It was evidently the intention of Congress that on the death of the father the mother should be subrogated to all his rights in the land; and on performing the remaining conditions, should acquire and hold the title precisely as he would have held it if he had lived. But if the father and mother should both die before the conditions were fully performed, leaving minor children, the right and fee of the land would immediately inure to their benefit and might be sold for their use at any time within two years, without the performance of any further conditions, and the purchaser would immediately become entitled to the patent, on payment of the office fees, and such other sum of money as might then remain unpaid to the Government or its officers. But if the father and mother should both die before the conditions were performed, leaving adult children or devisees and no minor children, then such adult children or devisees, on performing the remaining conditions, would be entitled to the patent, and thus acquire a title in fee. But when the widow performs the conditions and obtains the patent the statute attaches to it no trust in favor of either the adult or minor children. As already stated, she takes the title as her deceased husband would have taken it had he lived. In confiding the title to her, Congress trusted to her natural affection for her children as the guaranty that she would use the land judiciously and for their mutual advantage. The law annexes no conditions or trusts to her title, and the Courts have no power to do it. In my opinion the patent vests the widow with an absolute title in fee to the land, and the defendants have no interest therein.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.

The appeal here is taken from an order granting the motion of the defendant for a new trial.

The action was tried by the Court without the intervention of a jury. Findings were filed and judgment rendered for the plaintiff on the 25th day of January, 1869. On that day an order was entered which, so far as is material, is as follows:

“On motion of the defendant, it is ordered that all proceedings by the plaintiff on the decision and judgment this day rendered be stayed for thirty days, wherein the defendant may prepare papers on application for a new trial. The time given by statute for preparing and filing and serving on plaintiff's attorney exceptions to the findings herein is extended thirty days, and the defendant is allowed also like thirty days for preparing and filing motion for a new trial and a statement or affidavits, or both, therewith.”

On the twenty-eighth of January the defendant filed and served his notice of intention to move for a new trial, and on the twenty-ninth of January the plaintiff served and filed notice of the filing of the findings. On the twenty-fifth of February the defendant filed the statement in support of the motion for a new trial, and on the sixth day of May following the plaintiff filed his proposed amendments to the statement “without waiving any right to move to deny said motion on the ground that defendant's statement was not filed in time;” and subsequently filed additional proposed amendments.

First—The order of January twenty-fifth extended the time of the defendant to give notice of intention to move for a new trial thirty days. (Practice Act, Sec. 530; Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 113.) He, however, derived no benefit from that extension, because he saw fit to give notice of his intention to move for a new trial on the twenty-eighth of January, which was before he had received notice of the filing of the findings and before even the ten days allowed him by the statute itself had commenced to run.

Second — Looking at the order as one extending the time allowed by statute to file the statement, the most favorable view that can be taken for the defendant is to hold it as an order extending the time twenty days — not thirty, as on its face it purports to do — for the statute forbids any extension greater than twenty (Sec. 195), and section five hundred and thirty has no applicability to the time for filing a statement on motion for a new trial. (Harper v. Minor, supra.)

Third — The defendant having, on January twenty-eighth, given notice of his intention to move for a new trial, the subsequent service upon him of the plaintiff's notice of the filing of the findings effected nothing and may be laid out of the case, for its effect could only have been to force the defendant to give the notice of intention to move for a new trial, and that notice he had, by his own election, given already.

Fourth — It resulted, therefore, that the defendant had five days by statute and twenty more by the order of the Court — in all twenty-five days — from January twenty-eighth, in which to file the statement; his time for that purpose expired on the twenty-second day of February, and the statement was filed only on the twenty-fifth day of that month.

Fifth — In the case of Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 309, this Court held that proposing amendments to a statement which had been filed too late would not be a waiver of objection upon that ground, if the objection be at the same time expressly reserved. The views upon this point expressed in that case have ever since been followed here, and the practice theretofore prevailing of moving to strike the statement from the files, because filed too late, has ever since been repudiated. No particular form of reserving the objection, however, is prescribed; it is enough that it is pointed out as an objection upon which the party intends to rely in resisting the motion for a new trial. The phrase here employed—"without waiving any right to move to deny said motion on the ground that defendant's statement was not filed in time"—though somewhat inartificial in expression must be taken as substantially importing a reservation of the objection that the statement came too late, and the objection as thus pointed out on the record must be considered to have been overruled by the Court below in granting the motion for a new trial.

These views dispose of the case, and the order granting a new trial is reversed.

This case was before the Court on two former appeals, as will be seen by reference to 85 Cal. 118, and 39 Cal. 345. At the last trial the evidence was substantially the same as at the one preceding it. The Court rendered judgment for the plaintiff for seven hundred and fifty dollars—the action was upon a certificate of deposit for one thousand five hundred dollars—and the plaintiff appealed.

Opinion of the Court — RHODES, J.

The other facts are stated in the reports of the former appeals.

Coffroth & Spaulding, for Appellant.

Robert Robinson, for Respondent.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

On the two former appeals in this case it was held that the certificate of deposit, on which the action is brought, was a promissory note. (35 Cal. 118; 39 Cal. 345.) It was also held on the last appeal that the certificate of deposit will not be regarded as overdue or dishonored until after the lapse of a reasonable time after its date, and that it having been indorsed on the day of its date, it is to be regarded as indorsed before it was overdue or dishonored. It was further held that the evidence showed that Eli M. Skaggs, the first indorser, was a bona fide holder, for value; that the case did not come within the statute of 1863, to prohibit gaming; and that the alleged mistake in the amount of the certificate could not be set up against the indorsee, nor any subsequent holder. The decision on those points has become the law of the case. The evidence at the last trial was substantially the same as that which was presented in the record on the last appeal; and there is no substantial conflict on either of those points mentioned.

The plaintiff requests this Court to direct the Court below to enter judgment for him for the full amount of the certificate of deposit. There would be no hesitation in doing so if the Court below had expressly found the facts, which, we think, the evidence tends to prove. But as the Court decided for the defendants, it will be implied that one or more of the material facts were found against the plaintiff. It is not the province of this Court, as we have often held, to find the facts of a case, but only to correct the errors, if there be any, of the Court below.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

[No. 3,160.]CHARLES WITTE v. PIERRE VINCENOT.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS — PASS BOOK WITH BANK.—A by-law of a savings bank, assented to by its depositors, that the pass book of each depositor containing his account shall be transferable to order, does not render such pass book a negotiable instrument, and even if it did make it a negotiable instrument between the parties, it would not be so as to third parties.

GARNISHMENT OF MONEY IN SAVINGS BANK.—A savings bank cannot avoid its liability to pay over the money of a depositor, on a garnishment at the suit of the depositor's creditor, on the ground that its by-laws, assented to by the depositor, make his pass book, in which his account is kept, transferable to order.

PASS BOOK OF BANK.—A pass book of a depositor in a bank in which his account is kept is not a negotiable instrument in a commercial sense, nor can the agreement of the parties make it so.

NEGOTIABLE SECURITY.—The character of a security, as being negotiable or otherwise, must appear, not by force of the stipulation of the parties that it shall be such, but must be implied by law as the result of the form and effect of the security itself.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN PARTIES TO INSTRUMENT.—An agreement between the parties to an instrument, that it may be transferred to order, is not an agreement that it shall become a negotiable instrument.

BANK ACCOUNT NOT NEGOTIABLE.—A mere agreement between a bank and its depositors cannot impart the character of negotiability to a mere deposit account, not of itself a negotiable instrument under the law merchant.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Gallagher & Pierson, for Appellant.

We think the case falls within all the reasoning of the cases of McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365; Gregory v. Hig- gins, 10 Cal. 340; Sheets v. Culver, 14 La. 449; Kimball v. Plant, id. 511; Denham v. Pogue, 20 La. An. 195; Timmins v. Johnson, 15 Iowa, 7 Wright, 23; Church v. Simpson, 25 Iowa, 408; Weil v. Tyler, 38 Mo. 558; Mims v. West, 38 Ga. 18. It is true that these cases are all based upon the principle that the instrument was a negotiable one; but, under our statute, all instruments that can be assigned are made negotiable. (1 Hitt. Dig. Arts. 371, 372.) Thus bringing this case directly within the principle enumerated in those cases.

Argument for Respondent.

George & Loughborough, for Respondent.

The Act of April 20th, 1850, relative to bonds and other unnegotiable instruments (1 Hitt. Dig. Art. 371, et seq.), merely makes assignable certain instruments that are not negotiable, provides how the assignment may be made, and permits an action to be brought in the name of the assignee. The Act not only fails to confer upon unnegotiable instruments the privileges which belong to negotiable paper under the law merchant, but expressly withholds them, and saves to the defendant, in an action brought by the assignee, any defense which he might have had against the assignor before the assignment or notice thereof.

The appellant has no right to legislate for the protection of the assignees of its depositors; and even where similar institutions have bargained for their own protection, by requiring a return of the pass book before the deposit could be withdrawn, the Courts have held them liable as garnishees, though the pass book was not produced, nor any evidence given of its loss. (Nichols v. Schofield, 2 Rhode Is. R. 123; Clapp v. Hancock, 1 Allen, 394.)

Even if the pass book had been assigned, payment by the garnishee to the Sheriff without notice of the assignment would be a sufficient discharge, and this protection is all that the garnishee can require. (Practice Act, Sec. 5; id.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

Sec. 130; 1 Hit. Dig. 373; Drake on Attachment, Sec. 575; Nichols v. Schofield, supra; Clapp v. Hancock, supra.)

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

In January, 1871, the plaintiff commenced an action of assumpsit against the defendant, and in the following July obtained judgment against him for some five hundred and fifty dollars, and costs of suit. Upon filing the complaint a writ of attachment was issued, under which writ the Sheriff duly attached all moneys of the defendant in the hands of an incorporated saving and loan society in San Francisco, called "La Societe Francaise d'Epargnes et de Prevoyance Mutuelle," in which bank the defendant was a depositor. Upon the service of the writ of attachment the bank gave answer as follows: "There are six hundred dollars standing to the credit of P. Vincenot on the books of the society, for which he holds a pass book. I do not know if said pass book has been assigned or not. On the presentation of said pass book the amount will be paid to the holder thereof."

Upon rendition of the judgment an execution was issued, and being levied upon the moneys in the hands of the bank, an order was subsequently obtained to examine its manager before the Court Commissioner touching the moneys of the defendant on hand. Upon this examination it was disclosed that by the books of the bank it appeared that some six hundred dollars and upwards remained on hand to the credit of the defendant. It further appeared that among the by-laws of the bank were the following:

"Art. 13. A pass book with a copy of these by-laws annexed is delivered to each depositor at the price of fifty cents, payable into the Sinking Fund. In this pass book is entered to the credit of the depositor all sums deposited by him, and to his debit all sums reimbursed to him. Pass books are transferable to order."

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, C. J.

“Order for Money on Deposit.

“Societe Francaise d'Epargnes et de Prevoyance Mutuelle.

“SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.

“Pay to — or order the sum of — dollars standing to my credit on the books of said Society, and charge the same to my account.

“Dated the — day of —, 187—.”

An order having been subsequently entered by the Court that the bank pay over to the Sheriff such portion of the moneys in its hands standing to the credit of the defendant as would satisfy the judgment and costs, it prosecutes this appeal from the order.

First—It is claimed for the bank that its indebtedness to the defendant, as one of its depositors, shown by the pass book delivered to him, must be considered to be an indebtedness evidenced by a negotiable instrument issued by the bank, and yet outstanding, and that it results that the proceedings had under the attachment were ineffectual. It is said that the by-law which authorized the pass book to be transferred “to order” constituted it a negotiable instrument, and the moneys thereupon appearing to be owing must be considered as moneys owing upon an outstanding negotiable security.

But we are of opinion that this view cannot be supported. Even supposing that the by-laws in question fairly import an attempted agreement to that effect between the bank and each individual depositor, it is clear that such an agreement, if it could operate between the parties, could not defeat the rights of any one not a party to the agreement—as the plaintiff here. The character of a security, as being negotiable or otherwise, must appear not by force of the mere stipulation of the parties that it shall be such, but must be implied by law as the result of the form and effect of the security itself. The pass book of the bank here is an account kept between the bank and the depositor—an account acknowledged and certified from time to time, showing the business transactions of the parties with each other at those periods, and carrying upon its face a fluctuating balance. As being such an account it is not of itself a negotiable instrument, nor could any mere agreement of the parties to it have the effect to invest it with that character in a commercial sense. In this respect the account shown in the pass book is not to be distinguished from the account of a merchant or tradesman kept with his customer in the same way, nor would the agreement of the parties to such account, that the account itself might be transferred “to order,” have any more effect upon the rights and remedies of any third party in the one case than in the other.

Second.—But were this otherwise, we see nothing in the by-laws of the bank which imports such an agreement. Counsel claim that the pass book “under the by-laws of the bank was made payable to order, or, in other words, negotiable.” We are unable to assent to this view.

That a negotiable instrument may be transferred “to order” is clear; but it does not follow that every instrument which may be transferred “to order” thereby necessarily becomes a negotiable instrument. A collateral agreement between the parties that an instrument of writing, not negotiable, might be transferred by the holder to order, would not alter the character of the instrument itself.

That a negotiable instrument may be transferred by indorsement is also a general rule; but that every instrument transferable in that manner is necessarily negotiable in the commercial sense is not true. Non-negotiable instruments are transferable by assignment; but in this State such assignment may be effected by indorsement, “in the same manner as bills of exchange are." (Hitt. Gen. Laws, Sec. 372.) The bank here and the depositors might, for their own convenience, and as between themselves, agree upon any method of transfer of deposit books—they might adopt the method usually pursued with reference to negotiable paper, or they might require the transfer to be attested and acknowledged with the formalities and solemnities requisite in a conveyance of real estate—these are mere regulations of their own business transactions inter sese; but whatever the method authorized by their by-laws, these cannot impart the character of negotiability to a mere deposit account, or to any other writing not of itself a negotiable instrument under the general law merchant, or by the statutes of the State.

The order is affirmed.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v. WILLIAM M. EDDY.

PURPOSE OF THE ACT TO PREVENT DOUBLE TAXATION.—It was the purpose of the first section of the Acts of April 1st and April 4th, 1870, (Stats. 1869-70, pp. 584, 710), to exempt from taxation solvent debts secured by mortgage upon real estate, and not merely to regulate the duties of Assessors.

POWER OF LEGISLATURE AS TO ASSESSING AND EXEMPTING PROPERTY.—It is within the power and is the duty of the Legislature to prescribe the mode in which all property shall be assessed; but the Legislature cannot, under the pretense of regulating the duties of Assessors, exempt property from taxation which the Constitution requires to be taxed.

A SOLVENT DEBT IS PROPERTY AND CANNOT BE EXEMPTED BY THE LEGISLATURE.—Cases on this point cited with approval: People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 433; People v. Gerke, 35 Cal. 677; People v. Black Diamond O. M. Co., 37 Cal. 54; People v. Whartonby, 38 Cal. 461.

MEANING OF THE WORD "PROPERTY" IN THE CONSTITUTION.—The word "property" is used in section thirteen of Article XI of the Constitution in its ordinary and popular sense, and includes not only visible and tangible property, but also choses in action such as solvent debts secured by mortgage. In no section of the Constitution is the word "property" employed as comprehending only visible and tangible property and excluding choses in action.

CONSTRUCTION OF WORDS AS USED IN CONSTITUTIONS AND STATUTES.

— It is the general rule in the interpretation of Constitutions and statutes that words shall be taken in the ordinary and popular sense, unless the context shows that the words are used in a technical or in some arbitrary sense.

NO PROPERTY TO BE EXEMPT FROM TAXATION.— It was not intended by the framers of the Constitution that the Legislature should have the power to exempt any kind of property from taxation.

LAW EXEMPTING DEBTS FROM TAXATION UNCONSTITUTIONAL.— Where the general revenue law subjects all solvent debts to taxation, any other law which singles out a class of such debts and exempts them from taxation, is repugnant to the clause of the Constitution which provides that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District, Nevada County.

The assessment was made for the year 1870.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

A. C. Niles, Dibble & Byrne, for Appellant.

The Assessor exceeded his powers in assessing for taxes the property described, and the assessment is therefore void. (Stats. 1869-70, p. 584; id. 710; Myers v. English, 9 Cal. 349; McKune v. Weller, 11 Cal. 60; Sedgwick on Const. and Stat. Const. 183-188.)

The statute of 1869 (p. 70) does not purport to exempt any property from taxation. It is merely an exercise of the legislative power over assessors, forbidding them to do a certain thing. Evidently, then, the Assessor was not only without authority for the assessment, but acted in the face of a direct prohibition.

All presumptions are in favor of the constitutionality of an Act of the Legislature. (Bourland v. Hildreth, 26 Cal. 183; People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 458; Sedgwick on Const. and Stat. Const. 482, note and cases cited.)

Argument for Appellant.

These views are not inconsistent with the doctrine announced by this Court in former cases. (People v. McCreery, 84 Cal. 432; Att'y Gen. v. Squires, 14 Cal. 18; People v. Hastings, 29 Cal. 451; Art. XI, Sec. 13, Constitution; People v. Gerke, 35 Cal. 678; People v. Black Diamond C. M. Co., 37 Cal. 54.)

J. M. Wilson, also for Appellant.

After a very careful and extensive search for authorities and precedents to throw light on the subject of the proper construction of our Constitution in this respect, I find none. where the general words "property," or "real and personal property," or "real and personal estate," have been held to embrace incorporeal hereditaments of any kind, much less mere debts or other choses in action. In no Constitution or law have these words been so construed, but choses in action and other incorporeal property are always treated as intentionally omitted, unless specially enumerated. (Bank of the U. S. v. Huth, 4 B. Monroe, 449; Johnson v. City of Lexington, 14 B. Mon. 657; City of Covington v. Elliston, 2 Met. Ky. R. 231; City of Louisville v. Henning, 1 Bush Ky. Moore*, 1 Bro. C. C. 127; Mann v. Executors of Mann, 1 J. C. R. 232.)

Niles Searles, J. I. Caldwell, District Attorney, and Jo Hamilton, Attorney General, for Respondents.

Opinion of the Court — RHODES, J.

The Assessor had power to assess for taxes the property in question, and the assessment is therefore valid. (Stata. 1867-8, pp. 674-5; Minturn v. Hays, 2 Cal. 590; People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432; People v. Gerke, 35 Cal. 677; People v. Black Diamond Coal Mining Co., 37 Cal. 54; People v. Whartenby, 38 Cal. 461.)

The statutes of 1869-70, pp. 584, 710, cited by appellant, are unconstitutional, and therefore void. (See section 13, Art. XI, of the Constitution of the State of California, and the authorities above cited; Thorne et als. v. San Francisco Co., 4 Cal. 127; Tuolumne Redemption Co. v. Sedgwick, 15 Cal. 515; Scarborough v. Dugan, 10 Cal. 305; Tims v. The State, 26 Ala. 165; People v. Hastings, 29 Cal. 451; People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 437; People v. B. D. C. M. Co., 37 Cal. 55.)

The prohibitory Act cited above of 1869-70, forbidding the Assessor to list or assess the property in question, is an attempt to exempt it from taxation, and therefore void under the Constitution of this State. (See authorities above cited.)

The legislature of the State of California, acting under the limitations of the Constitution of the State, cannot exempt property from taxation within the State by a prohibitory Act, that it cannot directly exempt. (See authorities above cited.)

The statute cited by appellant of 1869-70, being void, the general revenue laws apply, and having been complied with in all respects, the tax is a valid demand against appellant, and the judgment should be affirmed. (See authorities above cited.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

This action was brought for the recovery of the taxes which were assessed upon certain solvent debts due to the defendant upon certain promissory notes, which were secured by mortgages upon real estate. The defendant demurred to the complaint, on the grounds that the property was not subject to assessment or taxation under the laws of the State; and that the assessment of such property is prohibited by law. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant appeals.

The demurrer presents the question of the constitutionality of the Act of April 1st, 1870, entitled "An Act to prevent double taxation." (Stats. 1869-70, p. 584.) The first section of the Act of April 4th, 1870, to relieve owners of incumbered real estate from double taxation (id., p. 710) is identical with the first section of the first mentioned Act. The second section of the latter Act, which purports to make new contracts between borrowers and lenders, and the third section, which provides for the forfeiture to the State, in a certain contingency, of moneys belonging to the borrowers, are not involved in this case. The validity of only the first section of each Act is drawn in question. The section is as follows: "No mortgage or lien given and held upon real estate, or the debts thereby secured, or promissory notes secured by mortgage, shall be assessed upon the books of any Assessor, State, county, or otherwise." That portion of section thirteen, Article XI, of the Constitution, by which the validity of the legislation in question is to be tested, is as follows: "Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law."

That the purpose of the first section of the Act was to exempt from taxation solvent debts secured by mortgages upon real estate is, we think, beyond all question. An ingenious argument is presented by the appellant to show that such is not the purpose of the Act — that it was merely to regulate the duties of Assessors. It is insisted — and correctly so — that it is within the power and is the duty of the Legislature to prescribe the mode in which all property shall be assessed; and it is claimed that this Act is only a legiti-mate exercise of such power. But the argument is merely specious. Looking beyond the mere words of the Act — the shadow — it is seen that the Act, if enforced, effectually prevents the taxation of debts secured by mortgages upon real estate. And this is the direct effect, as we have no doubt it was the purpose, of the Act. If the Constitution requires this property to be taxed, the Legislature, under the guise of regulating the duties of Assessors, can no more exempt it from taxation than they could accomplish the same result by providing that the Collector should return to the taxpayer the amount collected on such property, under the pretense of regulating the duties of Tax Collectors. The manifest purpose of the Act is to exempt such property from taxation. Its true features are quite apparent, notwithstanding its attempted disguise.

The nature and object of the Act having been ascertained, and it having been decided in People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 433, that a solvent debt, whether secured by a mortgage or not, is property within the meaning of the section of the Constitution relating to taxation, already cited, and the doctrine of that case that all property in the State is subject to taxation, and cannot be exempted by the Legislature, having been repeatedly affirmed in this Court (People v. Gerke, 35 Cal. 677; People v. Black Diamond C. M. Co., 37 Cal. 54; People v. Whartenby, 38 Cal. 461), the case might well be left at this point. But as the discussion of some of the questions decided in those cases has been renewed by the defendant, a few of his positions will be noticed. It is insisted that the "property" mentioned in section thirteen of Article XI of the Constitution comprises only real estate and movable property — that it is limited to tangible, visible property, and does not include choses in action. The word "property" is used in that section of the Constitution in its ordinary and popular sense, and this is the general rule in the interpretation of Constitutions and statutes, unless the context shows that the words are used in a technical or in some arbitrary sense.

There is no good reason to believe that the word was used in that section in a sense materially differing from that which it has in other sections of that instrument. There is a manifest propriety in giving a word the same definition in each of the sections in which it occurs, unless there is something in the context in one section showing that it has a different meaning there, from what it has in another section. The section following the one under consideration (section fourteen) provides that "All property, both real and personal, of the wife, owned or claimed by her before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, devise, or descent, shall be her separate property." It is apparent that the purpose of that section was to abrogate the common law rule in respect to the right which the husband acquires by marriage in the property of the wife. At common law the husband had the right to sue for, recover and reduce to his possession, for his own use, the choses in action of his wife; and in case of her death, before he has reduced them to his possession, he may still proceed, as her administrator, but for his own use, to recover the same. Suppose the wife, at the time of her marriage in this State, had owned Government bonds, shares of stock, certificates of deposit, promissory notes, etc., can the husband, under the provisions of our Constitution, collect the money due thereon for his own use? Had she collected, just previous to her marriage, the amount of one of her bonds in gold, it is admitted that the gold would have remained her separate property, because gold is tangible and visible; and it would require an unusual amount of hardihood to assert that the bond, had she retained it, would not have remained her separate property, merely because it was a chose in action. It would almost revolutionize the law regulating the rights of husband and wife to hold that the "all property" in that section, or the sections of the statute in respect to common property, does not comprise choses in action. But the cases in this Court which hold that the choses in action of the wife are her separate property are too numerous to require citation. It may safely be asserted that in no section of the Constitution is the word "property" employed as comprehending only visible and tangible property, and excluding choses in action. In the first section of the declaration of rights it is declared, among other things, that all men have the inalienable right of "acquiring, possessing, and protecting property." Will it be contended, in the face of this declaration, that a man has not the same right to acquire, possess, and protect choses in action as property of any other description?

In the eighth section of the same Article it is provided that no person shall be "deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law;" and that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. Should the Government attempt arbitrarily to seize the debt on which the tax in this case was levied, or to confiscate a State bond, the owner could confidently rely upon those provisions of the Constitution for his protection.

Section nineteen of the same Article declares that "foreigners who are, or may hereafter become, bona fide residents of this State, shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property as native born citizens." The foreigner who, after having been protected by the Constitution in the enjoyment of his lands, should find that he was liable to be plundered of the bill of exchange which he had received on his sale of the land, because the bill was only a chose in action — only the evidence of a debt — and, therefore, not under the protection of the Constitution, might well conclude that those who framed that instrument, instead of being statesmen, as we have been accustomed to regard them, were only savages, whose untutored minds were incapable of entertaining the idea of any property, except such as they could both see and touch.

If legislation of this character can be sustained, why may not the exemption proceed until the whole burden of taxation is cast on one species of property? Debts secured by mortgages have now the benefit of the exemption; but by a change in the tone and temper of the Legislature they might be made to bear the whole burden of the taxes. It was not intended by the framers of the Constitution that the Legislature, whether actuated by honest or corrupt motives, should have the power to exempt any kind of property from taxation. The exercise of the power would be dangerous. The Legislature of this State, even in full view of the unmistakable injunctions of the fundamental law, have repeatedly exempted certain species of property; and it is notorious that for years one kind of property, which during a portion of the time was probably of greater value than that of any other kind, was by the power of a numerical majority exempted altogether from taxation.

There is another and a very serious objection to the Act. Under the provision of the general revenue law solvent debts over and above indebtedness are subject to taxation. It is impossible to conceive of any law which is more imperatively required by the principles of good government and the just rules of political economy to be equal and uniform than a revenue law. That the burdens of taxation should rest equally upon all property within the State ought to be axiomatic, not only in theory but in practice. To enforce this rule the Constitution has provided that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State." Is any argument needed in order to make it apparent that where the general law subjects all solvent debts to taxation, that another law which singles out one class of debts — whether the classification is based on the circumstances that their payment is secured by mortgages, or that they are owing to savings banks, or to a particular bank, corporation, or person, or are owing by a particular person, whether natural or artificial, or a particular class of persons — and exempts such debts from taxation, is repugnant to the Constitution? If this Act, with the manifest inequality which it produces when put in operation along with the general revenue law, can be upheld, no discrimination which the Legislature might devise, for the purpose of relieving a particular species or parcel of property from its proper share of the burdens of taxation, would conflict with the organic law.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action to quiet the title to a tract of land in San Francisco, being a portion of the pueblo lands confirmed to said city.

The tract in controversy was granted to William Chandler, by the Alcalde of the pueblo, on the 30th day of December, 1848. Said Chandler, in 1849, conveyed the land by a deed of bargain and sale to Jones and McCormick, and their title passed by sundry mesne conveyances to the defendants. On the 29th day of November, 1853, said Chandler executed to Arthur Eggleso a quitclaim deed of the same land, and the plaintiffs claim under him.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

The deed from William Chandler, dated November 29th, 1853, under which plaintiffs claim, was merely a quitclaim deed and conveyed no title, said Chandler having previously conveyed the land to Jones and McCormick. A quitclaim deed of land affects land, conveys such land, and is therefore a conveyance. (Jackson v. Fish, 10 John. R. 456; Beldoe's Ex'r v. Wadsworth, 21 Wend. 126; McConnell v. Reed, 4 Scammon, Ill. 121; Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumner, 486; Brady v. Spurck, 27 Ill. 482; Sherwood v. Barlow, 19 Conn. 471; Pray v. Pierce, 7 Mass. 381.)

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

This is an action to quiet the title to certain real property in the City of San Francisco. Both parties claim under one William Chandler, who, it is admitted, became the owner of the premises in fee in December, 1848.

There can be no doubt that Eggleso purchased of Chandler in good faith and for a valuable consideration, for it is admitted that he paid three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars for the property, and took his deed without notice, actual or constructive, of any prior deed or other defect in the title. It is manifest that he supposed he was purchasing a good title. He received a quitclaim deed and at once placed it on record. The plaintiffs also purchased of him in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and placed their deed of record. As early as 1856 they entered into the actual possession of the premises, and have held that possession ever since.

It appears that Chandler in fact conveyed the premises to Jones and McCormick in 1849, but their deed was destroyed by fire in June, 1850, and was never recorded, and no possession was ever taken under it. The defendants claim under this deed, and insist that it was effectual to pass the title as against the subsequent quitclaim deed to Eggleso.

Opinion of the Court — Belcher, J.

The plaintiffs had judgment in the Court below, and the defendants appeal.

Sections twenty-six and thirty-six of the Act concerning conveyances are as follows:

"Sec. 26. Every conveyance of real estate within this State, hereafter made, which shall not be recorded as provided in this Act, shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, of the same real estate, or any portion thereof, where his own conveyance shall be first duly recorded."

"Sec. 36. The term 'conveyance,' as used in this Act, shall be construed to embrace every instrument in writing by which any real estate or interest in real estate is created, aliened, mortgaged, or assigned, except wills, leases for a term not exceeding one year, executory contracts for the sale or purchase of lands, and powers of attorney."

The Act concerning conveyances was passed April 30th, 1850, and it is settled that it requires conveyances made before its passage to be recorded, and denounces the same penalty for failing to record them as in the case of conveyances made after its passage. (Stafford v. Lick, 7 Cal. 479; Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 219; Anderson v. Fisk, 36 Cal. 625.)

It is said this rule ought not apply in this case, because the deed to Jones and McCormick was burned and could not be recorded. It will be observed that it was not destroyed till more than a month after the passage and taking effect of the Act; but if it had been destroyed before the Act was passed, we do not see how it could help the defendant's case. It is a familiar rule, that when the fault or misfortune of one has caused a loss to another, he whose fault or misfortune it is to have caused the loss must bear its consequences.

There can be no doubt upon the question presented, if real estate, or an interest in real estate, can be aliened or assigned by a quitclaim deed. To alien or alienate means simply to convey or transfer title to another. In this State, from the earliest times, quitclaim deeds have been in every-day use for the purpose of transferring title to land, and have been considered as effectual for that purpose as deeds of bargain and sale. It is true they transfer only such interest as the seller then has, and do not purport to convey the property in fee simple absolute, so as to pass an after-acquired title, but to the extent the seller has an interest they divest him of it and vest it in the purchaser.

We consider, therefore, that a quitclaim deed received in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, which is first recorded, will prevail over a deed of older execution which is subsequently recorded.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

CONTINUANCE OF CRIMINAL CASE.—If the person indicted for murder, at the time and just before he killed the deceased, stated that he was about to kill him, and asked others to witness the killing, the absence of a witness who saw the defendant and the deceased have a friendly conversation the day before, is no ground for a continuance, for the fact, if sworn to, would be no defense.

SUMMONING TRIAL JURY.—If no trial jury has been drawn before the term, and a necessity for one arises during the term, the District Court may order a trial jury to be summoned by the Sheriff. It is immaterial whether the cause for this necessity arose before or after the commencement of the term.

ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL, WHEN TO BE MADE.—The counsel for the prisoner is not entitled to make his argument on the case made out by the prosecution when the prosecution closes. The argument is to be made when the evidence is concluded.

HOMICIDE.—If a homicide is committed by means of wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, it shows an abandoned and malignant heart.

INSTRUCTIONS SHOULD BE BASED ON EVIDENCE.—If there is no evidence on the subject as to which an instruction is asked, it should be refused.

Statement of Facts.

DELIBERATION OF ACCUSED BEFORE KILLING.—When the question of the capacity of the accused to deliberate, at the time of the homicide, is before the jury, the Court may also instruct as to what might amount to such deliberation.

ITEM.—In deliberating, there need be no appreciable time between the intention to kill and the act of killing.

INSANITY PRODUCED BY INTOXICATION.—Insanity produced by intoxication does not destroy responsibility for crime, if the accused, when sane, voluntarily made himself intoxicated.

DRUNKENNESS IN CONNECTION WITH PREMEDITATION.—Drunkenness cannot be given in evidence as an excuse for crime; but when, in a case of homicide, the jury are to pass on the question of premeditation, for the purpose of fixing the degree of the crime, drunkenness may be taken into consideration for the purpose solely of passing on the fact of premeditation, keeping in view the fact that a drunken man may act with premeditation as well as a sober one.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Ninth Judicial District, Siskiyou County.

The indictment was found and certified to the District Court before the commencement of the term at which the accused was tried.

The fifteenth instruction, referred to in the opinion, was as follows:

“It is a well settled rule of law that drunkenness is no excuse for the commission of a crime. Insanity, produced by intoxication, does not destroy responsibility, when the party, when sane and responsible, made himself voluntarily intoxicated; and drunkenness forms no defense whatever to the fact of guilt, for when a crime is committed by a party while in a fit of intoxication, the law will not allow him to avail himself of his own gross vice and misconduct to shelter himself from the legal consequences of such crime. Evidence of drunkenness can only be considered by the jury for the purpose of determining the degree of the crime, and for this purpose it must be received with great caution.”

Statement of Facts.

The eighteenth instruction referred to in the opinion was as follows:

"In this case, if the killing was willful (that is, intentional), deliberate, and premeditated, it is murder in the first degree; otherwise, it is murder in the second degree, and in determining the degree, any evidence tending to show the mental status of the defendant is a proper subject for the consideration of the jury. The fact that the defendant was drunk, does not render the act less criminal, and in that sense it is not available as an excuse, but there is nothing in this to exclude it as evidence upon the question as to whether the act was deliberate and premeditated. Presumptively, every killing is murder, but so far as the degree is concerned, no presumption arises from the mere fact of killing, considered separately and apart from the circumstances under which the killing occurred. The question is one of fact, to be determined by the jury from the evidence in the case, and it is not a matter of legal conclusion, and drunkenness, as evidence of a want of premeditation, is not within the rule which excludes it as an excuse. Drunkenness neither excuses the offense nor avoids the punishment which the law inflicts, when the character of the offense is ascertained and determined, but evidence of drunkenness is admissible with reference solely to the question of premeditation.

"In cases of premeditated murder, the fact of drunkenness is immaterial. A man who is drunk may act with premeditation as well as a sober one, and is equally responsible for the consequences of his act. In murder in the first degree, it is necessary to prove the killing was premeditated, which involves, of course, an inquiry into the state of mind under which the party committed it, and in the prosecution of such an inquiry, his condition as drunk or sober is proper to be considered. The weight to be given to it is a matter for the jury to determine, and it is sufficient for the Court to say to the jury that it should be received with caution, and carefully examined in connection with all the circumstances and evidence in the case. In determining the question of premeditation, you can take into consideration previous threats of the defendant against the deceased, if the evidence satisfies you, beyond a reasonable doubt, there were any such threats made."

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

E. Steele, for Appellant.

The true interpretation of section seventeen of the Criminal Practice Act is that the cause for a jury shall arise during the term, and not in a case that has been certified to the Court long anterior to the term.

The practice has always been to allow defendant's counsel to comment on the testimony for the prosecution when the prosecutor closes his case. It was error for the Court to refuse this privilege.

John L. Love, Attorney General, for the People.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The prisoner having been convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree in taking the life of John Todhunter, and adjudged to suffer death, brings this appeal:

1. The first error relied upon is the refusal of the Court to continue the case upon affidavit filed. This affidavit of the prisoner sets forth that he expected to prove by the absent witness, Clay Todhunter, a son of the deceased, that two or three days before the homicide the witness and the deceased visited the house of the prisoner, situated in a secluded place, and there met the prisoner, and that the interview then had between the parties was friendly in its character.

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, C. J.

This, it was supposed, would tend to show that if the prisoner entertained any preconceived design of taking the life of the deceased he might have then and there executed it. In view of the case made by the prosecution, however, this evidence was entirely immaterial. It appears that on the day of the homicide, and before its commission, the prisoner announced his purpose to take the life of the deceased. He stated to the witness, Meagher, that Todhunter was in town and that he was going to kill him, and being advised to go home he replied that he would not go home until he had killed Todhunter, and invited the witness to go with him and see him do it. When on his way to the saloon in search of Todhunter, he said in the hearing of Eubanks, another witness: "I will cut his d—d guts out," and stepping into the saloon commenced an assault upon Todhunter with a bowie knife. He had also, on the same day, told the witness, Michilwait, that he was going to kill Todhunter "because he had killed his colt;" and about the same time he invited Dr. Conlan "to come up and see him kill him," and starting toward the saloon looked back at Conlan and said: "Are you coming?" The deceased, who was unarmed, retreated from the assault; the prisoner pursued him out of the saloon and across the street—a considerable distance—and stabbed him to the heart. There is not the slightest contradiction in the evidence in respect to the circumstances of the killing, and the testimony of Clay Todhunter, as to the visit of his father, two or three days before, to the house of the prisoner, could have had no appreciable bearing upon the case, nor would it have tended in the slightest degree to the exculpation of the prisoner.

2. The challenge of the defendant interposed to the panel of trial jurors summoned was properly overruled. No trial jury for the District Court having been drawn and summoned, and it having therefore "become necessary" during the term of the District Court to order a trial jury to be summoned, the case came precisely within the provisions of section seventeen of the Act of 1868-4 (p. 527), and the order to summon the jury was properly made by the Court. The necessity for this course arose during the term — that is enough; whether this necessity be attributable to a cause existing before or only arising after the commencement of the term is immaterial. The language of the statute is as follows: "Sec. 17. When from any cause it shall become necessary during the term, the Court may order the Sheriff to summon * * * a sufficient number of persons," etc. This is the view announced in People v. Stuart, 4 Cal. 225, also in People v. Vance, 21 id. 400.

3. The Court correctly refused to allow the prisoner's counsel to make his argument upon the case made by the prosecution in opening the case of the prisoner. The argument is to be made "when the evidence is concluded." (Crim. Pr. Act, Sec. 362, Sub. 5.)

4. At the instance of the prisoner the Court gave the jury the following instructions: "1st. Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, either express or implied. Express malice is that deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature which is manifested by external circumstances capable of proof. Implied malice is where no considerable provocation appears, or where all the circumstances of the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart. 2d. All murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison or lying in wait, torture, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, and pre-meditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, shall be deemed murder in the first degree. All other kinds of murder shall be deemed murder in the second degree."

Immediately succeeding these instructions there is found in the record a third instruction asked by the prisoner, and the refusal of which by the Court is relied upon as error. The third instruction thus refused refers to the two preceding instructions given and is as follows: "3d. The above grades of murder are fixed by our statute and malice is an ingredient of both degrees. If you find that the defendant committed the homicide with malice aforethought, but not under circumstances showing an abandoned and malignant heart, and that it is perpetrated by means of poison or lying in wait, torture, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, you will find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree."

The instruction as thus asked was correctly refused. Its hypothesis is an inherent impossibility. If the jury find that the defendant committed the homicide with malice aforethought, but not under circumstances showing an abandoned and malignant heart, how are they to find that it was perpetrated by means of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing? How could the jury find that the homicide was effected by means of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, and at the same time that the killing was not done under circumstances showing an abandoned and malignant heart? I should be inclined to suspect, from the reading of the proposed instruction, that a clerical error had occurred in the transcript, were it not that the learned Judge of the Court below, in refusing the motion for a new trial, in adverting to this instruction, uses the following language: "The third instruction asked by defendant specifies several kinds of murder, which the statute declares to be murder in the first degree, and asks the Court to charge the jury that they are only murder in the second degree."

5. The ninth instruction asked and refused is as follows: "9th. If, in your judgment, the homicide complained of was voluntary upon a sudden heat of passion, caused by a provocation apparently sufficient to make the passion irresistible, the offense is but manslaughter—and in considering the provocation you can take into consideration the state of mind of the accused as to intoxication, and his capacity to then resist provocation.”

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

It is sufficient to say of this proposed instruction that there is no evidence in the record upon which to predicate it, and as was said here in People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 217, and often since then repeated in substance, “instruction in civil and criminal trials should be drawn with some slight reference to the case made by the evidence.”

6. The Court, at the instance of the prisoner, having instructed the jury that if they entertained a reasonable doubt whether or not the prisoner was capable of deliberation at the moment of committing the homicide, they must give him the benefit of such doubt, the prisoner thereupon asked, the Court to give the following instruction:

“19th. And if you have such reasonable doubt as to the capacity to deliberate—of defendant—at the time the act was committed—he is entitled to an acquittal of the crime of murder in the first degree.” The instruction was given; but the Court thereupon added the following:

“In deliberating there need be no appreciable space of time between the intention to kill and the act of killing. They may be as instantaneous as successive thoughts of the mind. It is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by a concurrence of will, deliberation, and premeditation on the part of the slayer; and if such is the case the killing is murder in the first degree, no matter how rapidly these acts of the mind may succeed each other, or how quickly they may be followed by the act of killing.” It is now claimed that there was an error in giving this last instruction in connection with the other.

The question of the capacity of the prisoner to deliberate at the time of the homicide having been, at his instance, placed distinctly before the jury, there was obviously no error in also instructing them as to what might amount to such deliberation on his part — and in doing so the Court below gave the precise instruction which had been given and was approved here in People v. Nichols, 34 Cal. 211.

7. The fifteenth instruction given to the jury, as to insanity produced by intoxication, is correct. It is the same which was approved here in People v. Lewis, 36 Cal. 531.

8. In its eighteenth instruction, as to the effect of the intoxication of the prisoner in connection with determining the degree of the murder, the Court but followed the rule laid down here in the case of The People v. Belencia, 21 Cal. 544, and subsequently approved in the case of The People v. King, 27 Cal. 507, and other cases in this Court. In this there was no error.

We discover no error in the action of the Court below in any of the proceedings of the trial. The various legal propositions involved were correctly and distinctly placed before the jury by the learned Judge, in an elaborate charge, remarkable for its clearness and force.

9. The last point made is that the Court erred in denying the motion for a new trial, on the ground that the entire evidence taken together shows that the offense of the prisoner amounted to no more than murder in the second degree. I have carefully read and attentively considered the record in this connection, and am entirely satisfied that upon the case presented no enlightened and conscientious jury could have done otherwise than find a verdict of murder in the first degree.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Argument for Petitioner.

[No. 2,839.]

HENRY E. ROBINSON v. THE SUPERVISORS OF BUTTE COUNTY.

MANDAMUS TO SUPERVISORS TO LEVY A TAX.—When the Legislature makes it the duty of the Supervisors of a county to levy a tax sufficient to pay the interest on, and ultimately satisfy the principal of, outstanding bonds of the county, the Board must fairly exercise its judgment with a view to effect the end contemplated, and if it refuses to do so, may be compelled by the writ of mandate.

SUM.—If in such case the Board levies a tax which its members know will not produce a sufficient sum, it will be compelled by writ of mandate to levy the additional percentage required.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Beatty & Denson, for Petitioner.

There was no discretion in the Board. It was simply a matter of calculation. The law provides that it shall yearly raise enough to pay the interest and the bonds at maturity. The annual interest is twenty thousand dollars, and, as the bonds had ten years to run after 1870, the Board should have levied a tax in 1870 that would yield twenty thousand dollars and one tenth of the principal. It is true that, there being no exact method of determining the precise percentage necessary to raise the forty thousand dollars, the Board must exercise its judgment (not discretion) in determining the necessary percentage. But this is just what the Board did not do, admitting the petition to be true. The Board exercised its discretion in refusing to carry out the law, and in determining it would only raise a fraction of the yearly interest. We want them compelled to exercise their judgment in determining what percentage will be required to pay the entire interest and the proper proportion of principal.

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, C. J.

Haymond & Stratton, for Defendants.

The power of the Supervisors is exhausted. (People v. Supervisors of Schenectady, 35 Barb. 408.)

When discretion enters into the act of the inferior tribunal or Board, it ousts the jurisdiction by mandate. (People v. Sexton, 24 Cal. 78; Magee v. Calaveras County, 10 Cal. 376; Flugley v. Hubbard, 22 Cal. 37.)

Discretion, in the sense in which it is used by the authorities cited, is the exercise of judgment—the power of acting without being bound by any fixed rule. (Burrell's Law Dictionary.)

The laws in question prescribe a fixed rule, and also provide for the exercise of judgment. The fixed rule is that a tax must be levied. Judgment is exercised as to the amount to be levied. The Supervisors have levied a tax, and have exercised their judgment as to the amount. For these reasons the writ should be denied.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This is an application made to this Court for a writ of mandamus directing the Board of Supervisors of Butte County to increase the levy of taxes for the Railroad Fund of that county from forty cents to eighty cents on each one hundred dollars worth of property in the county. The Board have appeared and filed a general demurrer to the petition.

It appears that the petitioner is the holder of thirty-two of the bonds, each for one thousand dollars, issued under the Act of March 14th, 1860 (p. 90); the amendatory Act of March 29th, 1860 (p. 133), and the Act of April 8th, 1863 (p. 237), authorizing the County of Butte to purchase and hold two hundred of the first mortgage bonds of the California Northern Railroad Company (each for one thousand dollars) and to issue two hundred bonds of said county (each for one thousand dollars), in the purchase of the same, and for other purposes connected therewith. The petition alleges that a large sum for interest accrued is due and unpaid, and that the Board levied a tax of forty cents upon each one hundred dollars worth of taxable property in the county, and no more, for the Railroad Interest Fund; and further, that it is the fact, and the Board at the time well knew it to be the fact, that that rate of taxation is insufficient to produce the amount necessary to pay the annual accruing interest upon these bonds, etc.

The Acts referred to, and under which the bonds were issued, provided that the Railroad Interest Fund, in the County Treasury of Butte County, should be made up of moneys to be collected upon the interest coupons of the two hundred thousand dollars of bonds issued by the railroad (and which the county held in exchange for her own bonds issued for the same amount), and that any deficiency resulting should be supplied by taxation, to be levied and collected in the same manner as other taxes. But, by an Act passed in the year 1866 (p. 338), the Board were authorized to exchange the railroad bonds held by the County of Butte for her own bonds outstanding, at the rate of two railroad bonds for one county bond; and the Act further provided (section four) that "the Board of Supervisors shall annually, at the same time and in the same manner as other taxes are levied, levy and cause to be collected a tax upon all the taxable property of the county sufficient for the payment of the interest accruing from year to year upon all the bonds of the county outstanding, the proceeds of which tax shall be paid into the Railroad Interest Fund of said county; and on and after the year 1870, in addition thereto, shall cause to be levied and collected, in like manner, yearly, a tax sufficient to redeem said bonds at maturity."

The effect of the statute was to make it the duty of the

Points decided.

Board to provide by taxation a sufficient amount to meet the accruing interest on the county bonds outstanding, and also to create a Redemption Fund.

This is the duty of the Board, specially enjoined upon them by the statute of 1866, and one to the effective performance of which they are bound, and in so doing are to fairly exercise their judgment with a view to effect the end contemplated, to wit, the payment of the accruing interest, and providing a fund for the redemption of the bonds. The petition alleges, and the demurrer admits, for the purpose of this determination, that when the Board made the levy of forty cents it, and each of the members thereof, well knew that the forty cents levied would not produce enough to pay the annual accruing interest upon the outstanding county bonds by from some two thousand dollars to six thousand dollars — would not pay any of the interest already accrued and remaining unpaid, nor provide any sum whatsoever for the Sinking Fund, out of which the bonds are to be ultimately redeemed.

Upon the allegations of the petition the petitioner is unquestionably entitled to the writ, and the demurrer must be overruled.

WRIT OF ASSISTANCE IN CASE OF PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY.— A party who forecloses a mortgage, given by one partner, on, and obtains a sheriff's deed for, an undivided interest in partnership property, without making the other partner a party to the action, is not entitled to a writ of assistance to be placed in possession, as against a receiver who has been appointed by the Court, at the instance of such other partner, in an action commenced by him to dissolve the partnership, and have the partnership property sold to pay the debts.

Opinion of the Court—Belcher, J.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Ninth Judicial District, County of Siskiyou.

Autenreith, in the foreclosure suit, made Pfenninger, Buck, and Lang defendants, because they had caused attachments to be levied on the property, claiming that the liens they had acquired by the attachments were subsequent to the lien of his mortgage. Junker, in his complaint against Hessenauer, claimed that the partnership was indebted to him. Autenreith obtained the Sheriff's deed under his foreclosure sale on the 8d day of May, 1870, and on the ninth of May demanded of Junker, the receiver, possession of the property. His demand not being complied with, on the 21st of May, 1870, he moved the Court for a writ of assistance, and the motion was denied. From the order denying the motion he appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

We do not think the Court erred in denying the plaintiff's application for a writ of assistance.

When he commenced the action to foreclose his mortgage, and from that time till the application for the writ was denied the Pacific Brewery—the undivided one half of which was covered by the mortgage—was in the hands of a receiver appointed by the same Court in the case of Junker v. Hessenauer. The plaintiff's mortgage was dated January 28th, 1869, and on that day Junker filed his complaint against Hessenauer, alleging therein among other things, that the plaintiff and defendant became equal partners in the brewing business in June, 1864, and had continued to be such up to the time of the filing the complaint, and that the partnership property consisted in part of the Pacific Brewery, and praying that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the property; that there be an accounting between the parties, and that the partnership be dissolved, etc.

The plaintiff did not make Junker a party to his foreclosure suit, nor did he ever in any way intervene in the action commenced by Junker to dissolve the partnership. Both actions were pending at the same time and were tried independently, one resulting in a decree that the undivided half of the Pacific Brewery be sold to satisfy the plaintiff's mortgage, and the other adjudging that the whole property was partnership property, and directing it to be sold to satisfy partnership liabilities. Whether the property was in fact partnership property, and, if it was, whether it became so before the execution of the plaintiff's mortgage, and whether there were partnership liabilities, are questions which, as against the plaintiff, had not been tried when this application was heard, and could not be without some appropriate proceedings instituted for that purpose.

Until such proceedings were taken, and the respective rights of the parties determined thereunder, the Court did not err in refusing to surrender to the plaintiff a possession which it had taken and was holding by its receiver.

Order affirmed.

CYRIL V. GREY AND J. R. BRANDON v. HIRAM TUBBS.

CONTRACTS.— Courts of equity have not the power to make contracts for parties, nor alter those which have been deliberately made.

CONTRACT TO CONVEY LAND.— If, in a contract for the sale and conveyance of land, it is provided that the purchaser shall pay certain sums at specified times, and that, if he fails to do so, the seller shall be released from all his obligations in law or equity to convey the premises, and the purchaser shall perfect his right to a conveyance, and the purchaser makes default in his payments, without excuse, a Court of equity will not enforce the contract against the seller.

ISSUE.— In such contract the parties have made time essential in performing the conditions of the contract, and Courts of equity will not inquire into their motive for doing so.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The following is the contract for the sale of land, referred to in the opinion. An action was commenced on the 4th day of January, 1869, to enforce a specific performance of the contract. Wright assigned the contract to the plaintiffs on the 27th day of November, 1868:—

“ Article of agreement made and entered into the 1st day of July, 1867, between Hiram Tubbs, party of the first part, and Horace Wright, both parties of the Town of Clinton, Alameda County, State of California, of the second part, in the manner following:

“ That the said party of the first part, for the consideration hereinafter expressed, hereby agrees to sell unto the said party of the second part a certain parcel of land in the Town of Clinton, in block number (105) one hundred and five, commencing fifty feet from the corner of Jones and Lacy streets, on Jones street; and thence along Jones street one hundred feet; and thence parallel with Lacy street one hundred and fifty feet; and thence parallel with Jones street

one hundred feet; and thence parallel with Lacy street one hundred and fifty feet, to Jones street, the place of beginning; the same being a lot of land one hundred by one hundred and fifty feet, in block number one hundred and five, as per official map of the Town of Clinton, recorded at San Leandro, Alameda County, State of California, for the sum of four hundred United States gold dollars, which the said party of the second part hereby agrees to pay to the said party of the first part, as follows: Four hundred dollars on or before July 1st, 1870, with interest at the rate of one per cent per month, payable quarterly, in advance, on the first days of January, April, July, and October of each year till paid. Principal and interest payable in United States gold coin. And the said party of the second part agrees to pay all State, city, and county taxes, or assessments of whatsoever nature, which are or may become due on account of above mentioned. In the event of failure to comply with the terms hereof by the party of the second part, the party of the first part shall be released from all obligations in law or equity to convey said property, and said party of the second part shall forfeit all right thereto. And the said party of the first part, on receiving such payment at the time and in the manner above mentioned, shall execute and deliver to the said party of the second part, or to his assigns, a proper deed. And it is understood that the stipulations aforesaid are to apply to and bind the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the respective parties.

“In witness whereof the parties to these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year above written.”

The Court below gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Argument for Appellant.

Campbell, Fox & Campbell, for Appellant.

While there are many cases where time is not in equity held to be of the "essence of the contract," yet the parties by their express agreement may make it so, and in such case equity will not change the agreement to benefit either party, but will leave them to their legal remedy. (Fry on Spec. Perf. of Contracts, Sec. 710.)

Time is originally of the essence of the contract in view of a Court of equity, whenever it appears to have been the real intention of the parties that it should be so, etc. (Potter v. Tuttle, 22 Conn. 512; Benedict v. Lynch, 1 John. Ch. 319; Colslake v. Tell, 1 Russell, 375; Bodine v. Gladding, 21 Penn. 54; King v. Wilson, 6 Beaver R. 124; *Brown v. Grey & Brandon, for Themselves.

The result in equity of a contract of sale is, that the thing sold becomes the property of the purchaser, and the purchase money the property of the vendor, and the vendor holds the estate in trust for the purchaser subject to the payment of the purchase money. (Story's Equity Jurisprudence, Vol. II, Sec. 790; Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, *114; Fry on Specific Performance, *377; Hilliard on Vendors, 6. 7.)

In the case at bar, therefore, the defendant held the estate in trust, subject to the payment of the purchase money, four hundred dollars, on or before July 1st, 1870, with interest.

The money and a deed for execution were tendered in December, 1868.

The question of the hardship of a contract (which is to prevent its enforcement) is to be judged of at the time it was entered into; if it be then fair and just, it will be immaterial that it may, by the force of subsequent circumstances and a change of events, have become less beneficial to one party, except where those subsequent events have been in some way due to the party who seeks the performance of the contract. (Fry on Specific Performance, *116, 107, 119.)

Equity discriminates between those terms of the contract which are formal, and a breach of which it would be inequitable in either party to insist on as a bar to the other's rights, and those which are of the substance and essence of the agreement, and applies to contracts those principles which have governed its interference in relation to mortgages. (Fry on Specific Performance, *312.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The contract of sale which the plaintiffs, who are the assignees of the purchaser, seek to have specifically enforced provides that the interest on the purchase money shall be paid quarterly in advance on the first days of January, April, July, and October. The principal sum was to be paid on or before July 1st, 1870—three years from the date of the contract. The interest up to January 1st, 1868, was paid in advance, but the interest for the next quarter was not tendered until the last day of February, 1868. The defendant refused to receive the money and stated to the purchaser that he had forfeited his contract. The plaintiff, in December, 1868, before the commencement of the action, tendered to the defendant the principal sum and all the interest then due, according to the terms of the contract.

The fact that the purchaser did not tender the amount which became due on the first of the two quarters succeeding January 1st, 1868, is not material; for if a Court of equity can excuse the delay in tendering the money which became due on the last mentioned day, the failure to tender the interest for the next two quarters at the times mentioned in the contract is, under the circumstances, readily excusable.

The contract contains the following covenant: "In the event of failure to comply with the terms hereof by the party of the second part [the purchaser] the party of the first part shall be released from all obligations, in law or equity, to convey said property, and said party of the second part shall forfeit all right thereto." The plaintiffs rely upon the rule which has so frequently been applied by Courts of equity, that time is not of the essence of the contract, or as it is better expressed by Parsons in his excellent work on Contracts, that time is not necessarily of the essence of a contract. The defendant, while denying the applicability of the rule to contracts for the sale of property of the character of that in controversy—city or town lots—particularly in this State, where such property is as marketable and as subject to fluctuations in value, and is bought and sold with the same facility as personal property, yet he relies more upon a necessary qualification of the rule: which is that time is of the essence of a contract, if it be made so by the parties themselves, or by the circumstances of the case. He insists that the clause of the contract above cited, shows that the parties intended that the time for the performance of the contract on the part of the purchaser should be material, and of the essence of the contract. The parties agreed that a failure on the part of the purchaser "to comply with the terms hereof"—that is to say, to pay the money according to the terms of the contract—should operate as a release of the vendor from all obligation to convey the premises to the purchaser or his assignees; and to make the matter still clearer, and to show that the parties intended to make time essential, it was agreed that such failure should release him from all obligation "in law or equity" to convey the premises. The parties further agreed—as if to place the matter beyond all doubt—that in case of such failure on the part of the purchaser he should forfeit all right to a conveyance. It would be difficult to express with greater clearness and certainty, than the parties did in this contract, that time is of the essence of the contract, except it were done by the insertion of those very words in the instrument. Courts of equity have not the power to make contracts for parties, nor to alter those which the parties have deliberately made; and whenever it appears that the parties have in fact contracted, that if the purchaser make default in the payments, as agreed upon, he shall not be entitled to a conveyance, and shall lose the benefit of his purchase; and when it also appears that the purchaser is without excuse for his delay, the Courts will not relieve him from the consequences of his default. They will not inquire into the motive or the sufficiency of the motive that induced the parties to contract, that time should be essential in the performance of any of the agreements contained in the contract of purchase; but if it appears that the parties have thus contracted, the Courts of equity will not disregard the contract in order to give effect to some vague surmise, that all that the vendor intended to secure by the contract, was the payment of the purchase money, with interest, at some indefinite time.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY v.
THE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION OF PLACER COUNTY.

CASES IN WHICH CERTIORARI WILL LIE.—The only cases in which the writ of certiorari will lie are those in which an inferior tribunal, Board, or officer exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunals, Board, or officer, and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the Court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

JURISDICTION—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.—The words in section four hundred and fifty-six of the Practice Act "has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, Board," etc., present substantially the same idea as the words "has regularly pursued the authority of such tribunal, Board," etc., in section four hundred and sixty-two of that Act.

DEFINITION OF JURISDICTION.—The general definition of jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine, and, as applied to a particular claim or controversy, is the power to hear and determine that controversy.

ERROR AS TO REASONS AND EVIDENCE NOT TO BE REVIEWED UPON CERTIORARI.—Erroneous views entertained, or incorrect reasons assigned, or evidence erroneously admitted in deciding the controversy, do not make a case of want of jurisdiction, and are not to be considered upon certiorari.

CERTIORARI to the Board of Supervisors of Placer County, sitting as a Board for the equalization of taxes.

The plaintiff is the owner of forty and one half miles of railroad in Placer County. The property was valued by the Assessors at twelve thousand dollars per mile, and the plaintiff applied to the defendant to reduce the valuation to six thousand dollars per mile.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

[For reports of a similar proceeding between the same parties, see 32 Cal. 582 and 34 Cal. 352.]

S. W. Sanderson, for Petitioner, argued that the review of the proceedings of the inferior tribunal is not to be confined to the bare question whether the subject matter, as a whole, or the parties, or either of them, were within or without the jurisdiction, but must extend to all questions affecting the mode in which the jurisdiction or the power of the inferior tribunal has been exercised. He also argued that section four hundred and sixty-two of the Practice Act should be construed as enlarging the meaning of section four hundred and fifty-six so as to give a united meaning, to the effect that the review may extend far enough to determine whether the subject matter and the parties were such as the inferior tribunal had authority to deal with, and whether it dealt with them in the manner authorized by law. (Nible v. Post's Administrators, 25 Wend. 291, and cases cited in brief in that case; Rathbun v. Sawyer, 15 Wend. 451; Morehouse v. Hollister, 2 Seld. 324; Whitney v. Board of Delegates of San Francisco Fire Department, 14 Cal. 500; Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 300; Blair v. Hamilton, 32 Cal. 49.)

T. B. McFarland and E. L. Craig, for Respondent, argued that the writ of certiorari can be granted only where the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal has been exceeded, and that mere error committed in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence by such tribunal, having full power and authority to hear and determine a matter, is not in excess of jurisdiction within the meaning of the Practice Act. (Ex Parte Hanson, 2 Cal. 263; Clay v. Hoagland, 5 Cal. 476; Coulter v. Stark, 7 Cal. 244; Whitney v. Board of Delegates, 14 Cal. 479; Comstock v. Clemens, 19 Cal. 7; People v. Burney, 29 Cal. 459; People v. Dwinelle, 29 Cal. 632; People v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 98; Winter v. Fitzpatrick, 35 Cal. 269.)

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This is an application made to this Court for a writ of certiorari to review the proceedings of the Board in the valuation of the railroad of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, in Placer County. The proceedings instituted before the Board, and to review which is the purpose of the present application, were proceedings commenced there by the railroad company, by its petition filed, praying the Board to reduce the amount at which the respective Assessors of the several revenue districts of Placer County had fixed the taxable value of said road. The Board, after a hearing, denied the petition.

The office of the writ of certiorari in this State is defined by statute (Pr. Act, Sec. 456), and only embraces cases in which "an inferior tribunal, Board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, Board, or officer, and there is no appeal nor, in the judgment of the Court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy." These are the only cases in which the writ lies, and upon its return the sole inquiry to be made is "whether the inferior tribunal, Board, or officer, has regularly pursued the authority of such tribunal, Board, or officer." (Sec. 462.) "Has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, Board," etc., and "has regularly pursued the authority of such tribunal, Board," etc., as expressed in these two respective sections of the Practice Act, present substantially the same idea. Mere irregularity intervening in the exercise of an admitted jurisdiction — mere mistakes of law committed in conducting the proceedings in an inquiry which the Board had authority to entertain — as, for instance, the admission of evidence not the best in degree, or not applicable to the issue in hand, are not to be considered here upon certiorari, otherwise that writ is to be turned into a writ of error.

That the Board of Equalization of the County of Placer had authority in the first instance to entertain the complaint made to them by the railroad company in this case is not questioned. It is claimed, however, that the Board, in determining the assessable value of the railroad proper, received and acted upon certain illegal evidence adduced before it by the people who resisted the application of the railroad company for a reduction of the valuation of their road. This evidence concerned the amount of profits which had been earned by the road in the prosecution of its business.

The valuation which the Assessor had placed upon the property of the road was not disturbed by the Board—no affirmative action was taken by it—it simply refused to disturb that which had already been done by the Assessor, and left unchanged the valuation he had made.

It is now claimed that in this respect the Board exceeded its jurisdiction—that it did not regularly pursue its authority in the premises.

Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine—this is its general definition. Jurisdiction, as applied to a particular claim or controversy, is the power to hear and determine that controversy.

The mere grounds upon which the determination is reached may or may not be correct in themselves. These may be supported by evidence inadmissible when tested by the rules governing the introduction of evidence. The reasons given for the conclusion arrived at may or may not be such as address themselves to the judgment of others; but erroneous views entertained, or incorrect reasons assigned, or evidence erroneously admitted in deciding the controversy, do not make a case of want of jurisdiction. The judgment of the Board of Equalization upon the question of valuation involved was the purpose, and the lawful purpose, had in view by the railroad company when it presented its petition before it praying a reduction of valuation. The judgment of the Board upon that question was obtained. That judgment was to the effect that no reduction ought to be made. The company now come here to say that in arriving at that particular judgment the Board exceeded its powers. The proposition then is, that if a question of valuation be brought before the Board, and it determine it one way—that is, reduce the valuation—then it is a determination within its jurisdiction to make; but if it determine it the other way — that is, refuse to make the reduction — then such determination is one without the lawful jurisdiction of the Board to make. But the conclusive answer to this is, that jurisdiction over a question presented being conceded, carries with it necessarily the authority — the mere power — to decide the question either way — that to hold that there was jurisdiction to decide in only one way, and not in the other, is to say that there was in reality no question before the Board at all — it is to dictate the determination in advance.

Statement of Facts.

We are of opinion that the writ be dismissed; and it is so ordered.

DENNIS C. FEELY v. SILAS SHIRLEY.

STRIKING OUT PART OF A PLEADING.—The ruling of the Court in striking out a portion of a complaint or answer does not form a part of the judgment roll, and cannot be reviewed on appeal, unless made a part of the record by a statement or bill of exceptions.

ISSUES IN PLEADINGS.—If the complaint avers that the defendant wrongfully broke down the plaintiff's flume for carrying water, and the answer denies that the defendant, wrongfully or otherwise, broke down the flume, it is an admission that the defendant broke down the flume, and only a denial of its wrongful character.

DAMAGES FOR WRONGFUL ACT.—If a complaint avers the commission of a wrongful act by the defendant, and the answer merely denies the wrongful nature of the act, and the plaintiff owns the property upon which the injury was done, the plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages without proof that the defendant committed the act.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

The complaint averred that the plaintiff was the owner and in possession of a ditch and flume, constructed for conducting water, and that he had for a long time been conveying water in the same for irrigating his land, and that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully pulled down and destroyed the flume and diverted the water. There was a prayer for an injunction and for judgment for damages.

The answer denied that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully, or otherwise, pulled down or destroyed the flume and ditch.

The Court, on motion of the plaintiff, struck out a portion of the answer.

The defendant filed a statement and moved for a new trial, and appealed from the judgment, and from an order of the Court below denying a new trial.

In the printed transcript, the appellant included in the judgment roll the respondent's notice of motion to strike out a portion of the answer, and the order made by the Court granting the motion, but said notice and order were not made a part of the bill of exceptions or included in the statement.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

C. C. Stephens, for Appellant.

Belden & Younger, for Respondent.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The ruling of the Court in striking out a portion of the answer cannot be reviewed upon this appeal, since it forms no part of the judgment roll. (Dimmick v. Campbell, 31 Cal. 238; Moore v. Del Valle, 28 Cal. 174.)

The motion for a nonsuit was properly denied. The breaking of the flume was distinctly alleged in the complaint, and the answer took issue upon the wrongful character of the act merely, but did not deny its commission. The breaking was, therefore, an admitted fact; and, conceding the plaintiff's right of property in the flume, no proof of the breaking was requisite to establish his right to recover at least nominal damages.

The testimony in the case was conflicting, and there appears sufficient testimony to support the findings of the Court upon all the issues made by the pleadings.

Judgment and order affirmed.

APPROPRIATION OF WATER.—If the first appropriator of water takes only a part of the quantity flowing in a stream, another may afterward appropriate the remainder, and if the first appropriates the water only during certain days in the week, another may afterward take during the remaining days of the week.

SALE OF A DITCH.—The sale of a ditch used for appropriating water must be evidenced by a deed. Such sale cannot be proved by parol evidence.

PRIOR APPROPRIATION OF WATER.—One who enters into the possession of a ditch used for appropriating water, under a verbal sale made to him of the same, does not succeed to the rights of the seller, so as to claim the benefit of the seller's prior appropriation of the water flowing in the same, but must date his appropriation from the time he enters into possession.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, Tuolumne County.

The plaintiff alleged in his complaint that he and his grantors, since 1851, had owned a ditch known as Woods' Ditch, and had, until prevented from doing so by defendants, appropriated in it all the night and Sunday water flowing in Woods' Creek, to the extent of eighty-four inches, and had also appropriated in it all the day water, to the extent of eighty-four inches, except the first twenty-five inches flowing down the same; that plaintiff became the owner of said property in 1868, and that defendants had diverted said waters and appropriated the same, and threatened to continue to do so. Judgment was asked for damages and a perpetual injunction.

Statement of Facts.

The defendants were miners, who were using the water in Woods' Creek for mining purposes, and claimed that they had located their mining ground before the water was appropriated in the ditch.

The Court gave the jury the following instructions:

"That if at the time Woods constructed his ditch the waters of Woods' Creek had to a certain extent been used by miners at work in the bed and banks of said creek in the working of their mining claims, they making no claim to the use of the waters of said creek on Sundays or in the night-time, then Woods might, during Sundays and the night-time, take for his own use, for a useful purpose, the waters of said creek, and turn them into his ditch, to be used elsewhere than in the bed or banks of said creek; and if you believe, from the evidence, that such use and appropriation of the waters of Woods' Creek was acquiesced in by the said miners, Woods and the miners mutually using the waters of said creek in the manner and at the times indicated, then Woods, by such appropriation, followed by a continued use of the same, would acquire such a right to the use of the waters of said creek during Sundays and night-time as would forbid the said miners, without his consent, from taking for their use the waters of said creek during Sundays and night-time, when by such taking they should deprive Woods of the use of the waters by him so originally taken and continuously used for a useful purpose during Sundays and night-time."

The defendants excepted to this charge.

The Court then submitted the following special issues to the jury, which, after they had retired, they answered as follows:

Argument for Appellants.

"1st. To how many inches of water is plaintiff entitled of the waters of Woods' Creek during the night-time and Sundays, as against defendants in this action?

"Answer—Eighty-four (84) inches.

"2d. To how many inches of water of Woods' Creek were the miners in Woods' Creek entitled in the day-time, prior to any appropriation of the waters of Woods' Creek by the plaintiff?

"Answer—Twenty-five (25) inches.

"3d. After allowing for the amount of water of Woods' Creek to which you may find the miners of Woods' Creek entitled as against plaintiff, to how many inches of water is plaintiff entitled as against the defendants?

"Answer—Eighty-four (84) inches.

"4th. Did the defendants, between the 1st day of October, 1868, and 25th day of June, 1869, deprive the plaintiff of the use of any water to which he was entitled as against the defendants?

"Answer—Yes.

"5th. If defendants have deprived the plaintiff of the use of any water to which he was entitled, what damage has plaintiff sustained by reason of such acts of defendants?

"Answer—One hundred and four (104) dollars."

The Court rendered judgment for the plaintiff, and enjoined the defendants from appropriating the night and Sunday water to the extent of eight-four inches, and any of the day water to the extent of eighty-four inches, after they had first taken out twenty-five inches. The defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Caleb Dorsey, for Appellants.

other times. Because a party did not use his property at the times when the laws of nature and the law of society require him to rest from his labor, and because he acts in obedience to such laws, is no reason why he should be deprived of his property on account of its non-user during such times. Such a principle would certainly be novel and very unjust. The answer to the question did not tend to prove any appropriation at all, and only tended to confuse and mislead the jury. It was error to have permitted the question to be asked the witness. The mere fact that defendants did not object to plaintiff taking the water when they were not using it, without suspecting or knowing that he intended to claim the water as against them, was no acquiescence on the part of defendants such as would afterwards estop them from claiming the water from plaintiff. The silence of defendants under such circumstances was no estoppel which would prevent them from asserting their rights to the water during the night-time and Sundays. In order to create an estoppel by silence, there must be something fraudulent in the silence. The silence must be equivalent to an admission of plaintiff's right to the water, and it must appear that plaintiff relied on such admission and was misled by it. (Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 68; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 41.)

Edwin A. Rodgers, for Respondent.

Respondent contends that there may be an appropriation of the waters of a stream by A. for a given portion of the time and for a particular purpose, and also by B. for the remainder of the time and for a different purpose, and that such appropriation being recognized and acquiesced in by all parties interested through a series of years, is binding on all parties interested. Again, the right of such appropriation for a given portion of the time is one of the rights upon which the material interests and prosperity of the mining section of the State depends. The fact of such joint appropriation forms a part of the history of every mining community. Vineyards have been planted and gardens cultivated, dependent entirely for irrigation upon water collected nights and Sundays from streams the waters of which were used for mining purposes during the day-time. Ditches have been dug, as in this instance, at great expense, in good faith, for collecting and subjecting to a useful purpose the night and Sunday waters of a creek which were otherwise running to waste.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

It is not to be doubted, that the person who first appropriates for mining or other purposes the waters of a stream running upon the public lands, is entitled to the same, to the exclusion of all subsequent appropriations by other persons for the same or other purposes. The defendants do not question this doctrine, but deny its application to this case.

The Court instructed the jury, in effect, that if the miners who were using the waters of the creek, made no claim to the use of the waters during Sunday and in the night-time, another person might appropriate the water, during such time, to his own use; and if he did so appropriate and continuously use the waters, the miners could not thereafter deprive him of the use of the waters during those times to the extent to which he had appropriated them. The jury found that the plaintiff was entitled to eighty-four inches of the water of Woods' Creek during the night-time and Sundays, as against the defendants. It results from the proposition first stated, that if the person who first appropriates the waters of a stream only appropriates a part, another person may appropriate a part or the whole of the residue; and when appropriated by him his right thereto is as perfect, and entitled to the same protection, as that of the first appropriator to the portion appropriated by him. In Ortman v.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

Dixon, 13 Cal. 34, it was decreed that the defendants were entitled to the waters of the creek for the use of their mill; that the plaintiffs were then entitled to sufficient water to fill their ditch, No. 2; and that the defendants were next entitled to the residue to fill their ditch, No. 3. The cases are very numerous which affirm, or assume without question, this doctrine. It is usually the case that the amount of water to which the several persons claiming its use are entitled, is measured by inches, according to miner's measurement, or by the capacity of the ditches through which it is conducted from the stream, but there is no reason why the amount may not be measured in some other mode. They hold the amount appropriated by them respectively as they would do had the paramount proprietor granted to each the amount by him appropriated. The right to use the waters, or a certain portion of them, might be granted to one person for certain months, days, or parts of days, and to other persons for other specified times. An agriculturist might appropriate the waters of a stream for irrigation during the dry season, and a miner might appropriate them for his purposes during the remainder of the year. And so may several persons appropriate the waters for use during any different periods. There is no difference in principle between appropriations of waters, measured by time, and those measured by volume.

The plaintiff adduced no written evidence of the transfer to himself of the right to the ditch through which were conveyed the waters claimed by him, from those who had constructed it, or been in possession of it, but he proved by oral testimony that it was sold to him by Woods, the person, or one of the persons, who had constructed and used it. This evidence was properly stricken out by the Court. But the Court, in instructing the jury in respect to the appropriation and use of the waters of the creek, charged them in respect to the relative rights of Woods and the miners who used the waters of the creek. This was calculated to mislead the jury, by giving them the impression that the plaintiff had succeeded to the rights of Woods. The instruction, in that respect, was erroneous, and the defendants, in order to correct that erroneous impression, were entitled to have the instruction given which was asked by them, to the effect that the plaintiff could not connect himself with the rights acquired by Woods and Sedgwick except by deed. We cannot say that this error did not injure the defendants, for it cannot be ascertained from the record whether the jury found for the plaintiff upon his own appropriation and use of the waters, or upon that of Woods and Sedgwick.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

FEES OF SHERIFF ON EXECUTION SALE.—If an execution is placed in the Sheriff's hands, and he advertises property for sale, and the judgment debtor pays the full amount of the judgment to the judgment creditor before sale, he cannot deprive the Sheriff of his fees, but is liable to him for the fees allowed in case of a sale.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Alameda County.

The plaintiff claimed four hundred and seventy-seven dollars and sixty-seven cents in gold coin as his fees in the foreclosure suit mentioned in the opinion. The controversy was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts without action. The Court below gave judgment for plaintiff. The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Argument for Respondent.

Williams & Thornton, for Appellant.

This claim is based upon the following paragraph in section nine of an Act of the Legislature entitled "An Act to regulate fees of office," etc., approved March 5th, 1870, viz: "For commissions for receiving and paying over money on execution without levy, or when the lands or goods levied on shall not be sold, on the first one thousand dollars, one and one half per cent, and one per cent on all over that sum." (Stats. 1869-70, p. 159.)

This language seems too plain to admit of doubt in its construction. It gives the percentage for receiving and paying over money in one or the other event specified. How, possibly, can the percentage be claimed, when, in fact, the money was neither received nor paid?

In California the plaintiff may send his execution to every county in the State. Suppose he were to do so, and each Sheriff were to advertise some property for sale, and then return the execution under order of plaintiff's counsel, could it be plausibly contended that each Sheriff would be entitled to his commissions? Our statute, framed with a different intent, would bear no such inequitable construction.

Stephen G. Nye, for Respondent.

Respondent relies on the Act to regulate fees, approved March 5th, 1870: "For commissions for receiving and paying over money on execution without levy, or where the lands or goods levied on shall not be sold, on the first one thousand dollars one and one half per cent, and one per cent on all over that sum."

The next clause provides for the collection of these fees from the judgment debtor. (Stats. 1869-70, p. 159.)

The compensation therein provided is what is known under the English and New York laws as poundage. (Practice Act, Sec. 222.)

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, C. J.

And this compensation attaches the moment any act is done under the execution or order by the Sheriff.

No judicial construction has ever been placed upon this or any kindred Act in this State; but we are not without light from the decisions of other Courts upon statutes of a like nature. (Hildreth v. Ellice, 1 Caine, 192; Adams v. Hopkins, 5 Johnson, 258; Scott v. Shaw, 18 Johnson, 378; Bolton v. Lawrence, 9 Wendell, 487; Parsons v. Boudoin, 17 Wendell, 14.)

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

Du Pont had recovered judgment against Gibbons for forty-seven thousand two hundred and sixty-seven dollars, and directing a sale of certain mortgaged premises, which are admitted to have been in value sufficient to satisfy that sum and all costs.

An order of sale had been placed in the hands of Morse, the Sheriff, who had duly advertised the sale of the premises, and would have actually sold them had not the sale been repeatedly postponed from time to time by the direction of Du Pont.

During this postponement Gibbons paid the forty-seven thousand two hundred and sixty-seven dollars, not into the hands of the Sheriff, as he might have done, but directly to Du Pont himself, and the latter, having acknowledged satisfaction, ordered the Sheriff to discontinue further proceedings and to return the process in his hands.

Had the payment been made to the Sheriff it is not disputed that he would have been entitled to charge against Gibbons the half commission allowed by statute for receiving and paying over money where no sale of the property has been had. (Stats. 1869-70, p. 159.)

It is said, however, that as the Sheriff did not in fact receive nor, of course, pay over this money he is not entitled to the commission. I am of opinion, however, that the payment made to Du Pont under these circumstances must be considered, for this purpose, to have been made to the Sheriff, whose official duty and interest it was to have received it had it been tendered to him. The statute has allowed the judgment debtor to reduce the commissions of the Sheriff by one half should he pay off the judgment before sale actually made, but has not permitted him to deprive the officer of the whole compensation by ignoring him and making such payment directly to the judgment creditor.

This was the construction given by the New York Courts to their statutes allowing fees for serving an execution — and as subsequently amended for collecting money thereon. (Bolton v. Lawrence, 9 Wend. 435; Parsons v. Boudoin, 17 Id. 14.)

Indeed any other construction of the Act would practically convert the statutory fees of the officer upon the collection of money into a mere honorarium — to be allowed or to be withheld from him at the absolute election of the judgment debtor, who could in every instance relieve himself by making payment of the judgment directly to the judgment creditor.

Judgment affirmed.

GEORGE D. ROBERTS v. R. H. EVANS.

WAIVER OF TORT.—When the goods of one are wrongfully taken and used by another, the owner may waive the tort, and sue in assumpsit for their value, as for goods sold and delivered.

ACCEPTANCE OF OFFER TO SELL PERSONAL PROPERTY.—An offer to sell personal property, when no time is given, must be accepted at once, or within a reasonable time, and six months afterwards is not a reasonable time, as matter of law, to accept the offer.

OFFER TO TAKE PAY FROM ONE JOINT WRONGDOER, NO WAIVER OF ACTION AGAINST THE OTHER.—Roberts owned personal property, and offered to sell it to Ellsworth, but his offer was not accepted. More than six months afterwards Ellsworth went with a servant of Evans and took the property, and delivered it to Evans, who kept and used it, and paid Ellsworth for it. Roberts afterwards wrote to Ellsworth to pay him for the property, but not being paid sued Evans for its value: Held, that Roberts' right of action against Evans was not waived by this offer to accept of pay from Ellsworth, and that his purchase from Ellsworth did not release him from liability to Roberts for the value of the property.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixteenth Judicial District, Kern County.

The defendant, on the trial, asked the Court to give the following instruction to the jury, which was refused. It is the third instruction referred to in the opinion:

"If the jury believe that Evans, the defendant, purchased the shoes and dies in question, in good faith, of Ellsworth, and without notice of fraud, then you will find for defendant."

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Appellant.

An offer is binding, if accepted before withdrawal. (1 Par. on Con. 480.)

J. W. Freeman, for Respondent.

[No brief on file.]

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

This is an action to recover the value of certain cast-iron shoes and dies, alleged in the complaint to have been sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant. The answer denies that the defendant purchased or received the shoes and dies from the plaintiff. The plaintiff had judgment, and the appeal is from the judgment and from the order overruling the defendant's motion for new trial.

Opinion of the Court — Belcher, J.

The testimony shows that the shoes and dies were the property of the plaintiff, and that they were at a quartz mine owned by him in Kern County; that in December, 1869, one Ellsworth went with a teamster, who was at work for defendant, to the plaintiff's mill, and having tried and failed to obtain permission from one of the parties in charge of the mill to take the shoes and dies, took them without such permission, and carried them to the quartz mill of the defendant, where they were received and used by the defendant; that the defendant furnished the wagon to haul them to his mill, and knew where they were obtained.

When the plaintiff rested, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show any sale or delivery of the shoes and dies by the plaintiff to the defendant, or by any one acting under his authority, and also on the ground that he had failed to show any authority from the defendant to contract with the plaintiff, or any one else for them.

We think the Court did not err in overruling the motion. It is well settled that when the goods of one are wrongfully taken and used by another, he may waive the tort, and sue in assumpsit for their value, as for goods sold and delivered. (Fratt v. Clark, 12 Cal. 89; 2 Greenleaf on Ev., Sec. 108.)

The defendant claimed, and introduced witnesses to prove, that he bought the shoes and dies from Ellsworth, and paid him for them; that about a year before they were taken the plaintiff had offered to let Ellsworth have them for their cost and freight, but that he did not want them at that time, and did not then accept the offer; that knowing the plaintiff wanted to sell them, Ellsworth thought it safe to go and take them without any new permission; and that some seven or eight months after they were taken plaintiff wrote to Ellsworth to remit to him the money in payment for them.

If all this were so, we do not see how it would constitute any defense to the action. An offer to sell, when no time is given, must be accepted at once, or within a reasonable time thereafter. A year, or even six months, must be held, as a matter of law, to be an unreasonable time.

When Ellsworth, therefore, took the property he had no more right to take it than he would have had if there had been no conversation or correspondence between him and the plaintiff in reference to it; and he could clothe the defendant with no better right to it than he had. The fact that the plaintiff was willing to have other shoes and dies returned in the place of those taken, or to receive pay for them from Ellsworth, was not material; for his right of action had already accrued against the defendant as well as against Ellsworth, and the offer was not a waiver of that right.

Some of the instructions given at the request of the plaintiff might have been better, and perhaps more accurately expressed, but they did not mislead the jury to the prejudice of the defendant.

The third instruction asked by the defendant was properly refused. It was not law as applied to the facts of the case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
PHILIP KEARNEY.

CHARGE OF COURT IN CRIMINAL CASE.—The Court may, in a criminal case, by the express consent of the defendant, or by the mutual consent of the parties, charge the jury orally.

NOTE.—An entry in the minutes of the Court, in a criminal case, that "the Court charge the jury orally (a written charge being expressly waived)," must be construed as a "mutual consent" to an oral charge.

APPEAL from the County Court of Alameda County.

Opinion of the Court — NILES, J.

The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

G. W. Tyler, for Appellant, argued that the entry in the minutes did not show that the defendant waived a written charge.

Jo Hamilton, Attorney General, and W. R. Hinkson, for the People, argued that the words "a written charge being expressly waived" applied to both the people and the defendant.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The defendant was tried and convicted of the crime of robbery. The minutes of the trial contain the following entry: "And the Court charge the jury orally as to their duty under the statute (a written charge being expressly waived), and the jury retire," etc. The oral charge by the Court is assigned as error upon appeal.

It is settled by a uniform series of decisions that a Court cannot charge the jury orally in a criminal case without the express consent of the defendant. (People v. Sandford, ante, p. 29, and case cited.) But the same section of the statute, which requires the charge to be reduced to writing, provides the exception to the rule that the charge may be given orally "by the mutual consent of the parties." (Stats. 1855, p. 275.) In this case it appears from the minutes of the trial which form a part of the record, that an oral charge was expressly waived. This cannot be construed otherwise than as a mutual consent — for the right to a written charge cannot be waived without the assent of each of the parties entitled to the privilege.

Judgment affirmed.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
BLANDA CASTRO DE BERNAL, AND CERTAIN REAL ESTATE.

SERVICE OF SUMMONS.— In making service of a summons, and in the return of such service, the provisions of the statute must be, and must be shown to have been, substantially observed and followed by the officer, otherwise the proceedings cannot be supported upon a direct appeal taken.

IDEM.— If the statute for the collection of a tax and the enforcement of its lien on real estate provides that a summons may be served by delivering a copy to each defendant, but if the personal defendant cannot be found, by posting a copy for twenty days at the Court House door, and that no personal judgment shall be rendered unless the person against whom it is rendered shall have been personally served, a personal judgment rendered on a service made by posting a copy at the Court House door, is erroneous, and will be reversed if attacked by direct appeal.

IDEM.— Whether such judgment is void, so that it may be attacked collaterally, not decided.

IDEM.— If in such case the statute requires the service of summons on the real estate to be made by delivering a copy to the person in possession thereof, and by posting a copy in some public place thereon, a return by the Sheriff that he posted a copy on the premises, without stating that it was posted in a public place on the premises, will not support a judgment if attacked by direct appeal. In like manner, the judgment will be reversed, unless the return falls to show that a copy was delivered to a person in possession of the premises, or that there was no person in possession.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Monterey County.

Action against Bernal, and an undivided one half of two thousand nine hundred and seventy acres of land owned by him, to recover judgment for five hundred and eighty-nine dollars and ninety-one cents tax assessed against the land in 1869. The case came up on the judgment roll.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Argument for Respondent.

J. A. Moultrie, for Appellants.

The rule is too well established to require comment or citation of authorities that, in a proceeding against property for the collection of taxes, each act required by the statute to be performed is necessary to be done to give the Court jurisdiction. (Mayo v. Ah Loy et al., 32 Cal. 477; People v. Fox, 39 Cal. 621.)

No personal service was made on the defendants, nor did they appear in the action. No personal judgment was or could be entered. (Hitt., Vol. 2, para. 6193; Revenue Act, 1861, Sec. 44.)

The Sheriff's return shows that ten days before the return was made he posted a copy of the summons at the Court House door; but ten days posting is worthless, twenty days are required to give the Court jurisdiction. (Hitt., Vol. 2, para. 6190; Rev. Act, Sec. 41.)

John L. Love, Attorney General, for Respondent.

There is nothing in the record to show that the defendant Bernal was not personally or otherwise served somewhere. If it be contended that the service by posting was constructive merely and bad, it is answered by the language of Eitel v. Foote, 39 Cal. 439: "In a tax suit a recital in the decree 'that all owners and claimants of the property have been duly summoned to answer the complaint herein, and have made default in that behalf,' there being nothing contradictory to it in the record, is conclusive, in a collateral proceeding, that the Court acquired jurisdiction of the owner of the premises."

The recital of a fact in the judgment, there being nothing to contradict it in the record, is conclusive. The judgment should be affirmed.

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, C. J.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The people on the 6th day of October, 1870, had judgment by default against the personal defendant and the real estate, also made a defendant in the action, and the defendants have appealed from the judgment. The question, as made by the appellants, is as to whether or not it sufficiently appears in the record that the Court below obtained jurisdiction of the defendants by the service of process, so as to authorize the entry of judgment against them, the judgment reciting the fact of service.

1. As to the personal defendant: The return, made by the Sheriff upon the summons, is to the effect that after a diligent search the personal defendant could not be found, and that on the 5th day of August, 1870, he posted a copy of the summons on the door of the Court House in the City of Monterey. The Act (Hitt., Sec. 6190), requires that the summons shall be served by delivering a copy thereof to each defendant named—"provided, that if the personal defendant cannot be found in the county in which said action is brought, then service may be made upon such defendant by posting a copy of the summons for twenty days at the Court House door of said county." The return of the Sheriff shows that the personal defendant could not be found, and that thereupon he posted the copy of the summons at the Court House door, and was so far forth a compliance with the requirements of the statute, for the personal defendant was thereby served, though not personally served, with the summons. But the same Act in an after section (Sec. 6193) also provides in terms "that no personal judgment shall be rendered unless the person against whom it is rendered shall have been personally served with the summons, or shall have appeared in said action." The purpose usually had in view in effecting the service of a summons upon a defendant in a civil action, whether such service be personal or constructive merely, is to acquire that jurisdiction of his person which is ordinarily indispensable to enable the Court to proceed to judgment, and if such service of the one character or the other be effected pursuant to the provisions of law in a case where the subject matter is itself one cognizable by the particular Court before which the defendant is cited to appear, it results upon general principles that the Court may rightfully proceed to determine the cause, and that its judgment concerning the subject matter of the suit cannot be questioned for mere lack of jurisdiction to render it. The statute having provided that though under certain circumstances a service not personal in its character might be properly effected upon a personal defendant, yet that in such case no personal judgment should be rendered against him, and the judgment here having been in fact rendered against him without such personal service and without appearance, it is not necessary (as it would have been in case the proceeding before us were a mere collateral attack upon the judgment) to determine if a judgment so rendered would be absolutely void — a mere nullity in the strict sense. Whether void or not, it is certainly erroneous, and upon direct appeal, as here, cannot be supported.

2. As to the real estate made a defendant in the action: The return of the Sheriff appearing upon the summons is to the effect that he served the summons upon the real estate "by posting a true copy hereof on the same said premises, and by posting a copy on the door of the County Court House in Monterey City," etc. The statute (Sec. 6190) provides that service of the summons shall be made "as to said real estate * * * by delivering a copy thereof to the person or persons in possession of the same, and further as to all real estate by posting a like copy in some public place thereon," etc. The return does not show service upon the real estate made or attempted by delivering a copy of the summons to any person in possession of such real estate, nor does it show that the officer was unable to find any person in possession thereof; nor does it show or set forth that a copy of the summons was posted in a public place on the premises—by which the statute means some place on the premises most likely to meet the eye of a person passing upon or near them. A copy of the summons merely posted on the premises is not all that the statute has provided for in that respect; but at some public place thereon is also required. In making service of the summons, and in the return of such service, the provisions of the statute must be and must appear to have been substantially observed and followed by the officer, otherwise the proceedings cannot be supported upon a direct appeal taken.

ERROR TO BE POINTED OUT.—Error will not be presumed; but the presumption is that the proceedings below were correct, so far as such presumption is not overcome by the record.

INJUNCTION TO RESTRAIN TRESPASS.—In an action for damages and to enjoin future trespasses upon land, the Court, in granting the injunction, should not extend it to land not owned by the plaintiff, although included in the description given in the complaint.

APPEAL from the District Court of the First Judicial District, Santa Barbara County.

The facts are stated in the opinion, and in the report of the case on the former appeal, 37 Cal. 432.

Albert Packard and W. H. L. Barnes, for Appellant.

J. P. Hoge and John Reynolds, for Respondent.

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, C. J.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The case was here in 1869, and is reported in 37 Cal. R. 432. It was then determined that the confirmation and patent to Hill were bounded on the south by the seashore—that is, by the line of high water—notwithstanding the calls and distances contained in the patent include portions of the sea. The judgment was then reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial, and the plaintiff having again recovered, the appeal now brought here is from the judgment alone, and rests upon the judgment roll containing the findings of fact, no statement upon appeal being found in the record. The only question made is as to whether or not on the second trial the Court below observed the distinction between land above and land below high-water mark upon the southern boundary of the rancho.

The Court found that the patent, according to the lines of the survey, by course and distance, included all that tract of land described in the complaint, to wit, bounded and described as follows: "Commencing at the southeasterly corner of the rancho called 'La Goleta;' thence running along the eastern boundary line of the said rancho to the tract of land occupied by A. C. Scull, and the line of the tract occupied by Samuel Sharp, and along the bed of a creek to the eastern line of the tract now owned and occupied by the plaintiff; thence along the line of the last before mentioned tract of land southwardly, westwardly, and northwardly, to the bed of the creek; thence following the course of the bed of said creek to the Pacific Ocean and the front line of the survey of said rancho (being the low-water mark); thence along the said front boundary line of said rancho to the place of beginning."

The Court further found "that said patent recites that said confirmation was to a tract of land bounded on the south by the seashore; but the survey, as made and approved, and upon which said patent is based, according to the courses and distances thereof, notwithstanding such recital, includes the land lying between the present line of ordinary high and low water;" and further, "that there are upon the premises described in the complaint large banks or veins of asphaltum, commencing in the bank many feet above the beach and the highest flow of the tides, and extending out in spurs connecting with the banks beyond the line of ordinary low water, and rising above the flow of the tides, and which are very hard and can only be removed by quarrying the same." Further, that in 1858 and 1859 Hill, the grantor of the plaintiff, gave a verbal license to the defendant Pierce "to take from said veins asphaltum for the sum of one dollar per ton," etc.; that Pierce and the other defendants under him took out asphaltum under this license until 1860, when Hill terminated it and gave it to other parties, who took asphaltum by Hill's permission until 1861; but the defendants also continued to take out and remove asphaltum from said veins from July 1st, 1861, to May, 1864, against the will and without the consent of Hill; that the quantity of asphaltum thus taken by defendants was one thousand nine hundred and sixteen and seventeen one-hundredths tons, of the value of four dollars per ton; that in November, 1864, Hill conveyed the premises to the plaintiff, with all claim for damages sustained by the taking of the asphaltum, etc. Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the plaintiff for seven thousand six hundred and sixty-five dollars and costs.

1. The rule is familiar that a party complaining of alleged error committed to his injury must point it out — error will not be intended, but the presumption indulged is that the proceedings below were correct so far as such presumption is not overcome by the record. If the plaintiff was permitted to give evidence of the taking of the asphaltum by the defendants at points below the line of high-water mark on the southerly side of the rancho; and if the value of such asphaltum taken from such points formed an element in the judgment rendered, it was error. But we cannot discover from the record here that such was the case. It is true that the Court finds as a fact that the survey upon which the patent is based includes, according to its courses and distances, land lying between high and low-water mark; that the courses and distances of the survey do pass beyond that line and into the ocean is a fact admitted in the case and one upon which our former judgment proceeded. But the finding of this fact is not inconsistent with the proposition that the asphaltum for the taking of which the plaintiff recovered was taken upon or to the northward of the line of high water forming the true southern boundary of the rancho. and we must, under the rule adverted to, presume that such was the case.

2. But besides the judgment rendered for the damages a final decree was entered enjoining the defendants from trespassing upon the premises described in the complaint, and referring to the complaint alone for a description of the premises included in the decree. The description as found in the complaint follows the line of low-water mark. The injunction thus following that line is in that particular clearly erroneous. The judgment in that respect is therefore reversed and the cause remanded with directions to modify it so as to exclude from the injunction these lands below high-water mark; in all other respects the judgment is affirmed, the appellants to recover the costs of the appeal.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

JAMES PIERATT v. JAMES KENNEDY.

ARBITRATION — ENTRY OF SUBMISSION BY CLERK NECESSARY.— Under section three hundred and eighty-two of the Practice Act the Clerk of the Court must be authorized by the stipulation of the parties to an arbitration to enter in his register of actions a note of the submission, and he must make the entry therein; otherwise there is no jurisdiction in the Court over the subject matter or the parties.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Sonoma County.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

G. L. Wratten and A. Thomas, for Appellant.

W. B. McConnell, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This appeal is taken from an order denying a motion to set aside an award, and also from the judgment entered thereon.

The proceedings are founded upon a written submission signed by the respective parties, in which it is recited that differences have arisen between them in reference to their respective accounts and claims against each other; the parties then stipulate and agree to submit these to arbitration, and they thereupon nominate and appoint three named persons to act as arbitrators in the premises. The submission then proceeds in the following words: "It is further stipulated and agreed between us that this submission and stipulation shall be filed by the Clerk of the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District in and for Sonoma County, State of California, and shall have the force and effect of an order of said Court; and it is agreed that the award shall be filed in said Court in the manner pointed out by law, and shall have the force and effect of a judgment of said Court." The submission was signed on the 21st of September, 1869, and filed on the twenty-fifth of the same month, but no entry of a note of submission was made by the Clerk in the register of actions. An award subsequently made and filed by the Clerk was set aside by the District Court, and it was ordered that a new award be made, which new award was afterward filed, and it is from an order entered refusing to set aside this second award and from a judgment rendered thereon that this appeal is taken.

The statute (Pr. Act, Sec. 380) provides that persons capable of contracting may submit to arbitration any controversy which might be the subject of a civil action between them except a question of title to real property in fee or for life.

It is further provided (Sec. 382) that it may be stipulated in the submission "that it be entered as an order of the County Court or of the District Court, for which purpose it shall be filed with the Clerk of the county where the parties or one of them, reside."

It is not necessary to inquire if the agreement to the effect that the mere stipulation itself "shall have the force and effect of an order of said Court," is to be considered the legal equivalent of the required stipulation that the submission be entered as an order of Court. It may well be doubted, however, if anything short of a stipulation unequivocally authorizing the entry of the submission by the Clerk will confer upon that officer the authority to make such entry in his register.

But however this may be, and if it be conceded that there is no substantial insufficiency in the stipulation as made, what is to be said upon the fact that the Clerk did not make in his register any note of the submission to arbitration? The provisions of the statute upon the point are not to be mistaken: "The Clerk shall thereupon enter in his register of actions a note of the submission, with the names of the parties, the names of the arbitrators, the date of the submission when filed," etc. (Sec. 382.) He must in the first place be authorized by the stipulation to make note in his register, and in the second place he must, in fact, make it there — the mere authority without the act done is no more than the act done without the authority would be. Both these must concur (Ryan v. Dougherty, 30 Cal. 218), and in the absence of either there is no jurisdiction over the subject matter or the parties.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

HUGH DAVANAY v. DAVID EGGENHOFF ET AL.

COMPLAINT ON A PROMISSORY NOTE.—A complaint on a promissory note should allege that the note remains due and unpaid. Without such allegation it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

ANSWER TO COMPLAINT ON A NOTE.—If the complaint on a promissory note, without being verified, contains a copy of the note, and avers that it has not been paid, a general denial in the answer puts in issue the fact of payment, and the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment on the pleadings.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Thirteenth Judicial District, Mariposa County.

The complaint, among other things, averred "that there is now due from the defendants to the plaintiff on the aforesaid note the principal sum of two thousand dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of one and a quarter per cent per month from the 10th day of March, 1870," etc. The defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

L. F. Jones, and McKune & Welty, for Appellants.

What are the material allegations of the complaint?

First — The debt or consideration of the note.

Opinion of the Court—Rhodes, J.

Second — That the note was made.

Third — That it was executed.

Fourth — That it was delivered.

Fifth — That the principal sum of two thousand dollars has not been paid.

Sixth — That the interest has not been paid.

The general denial in this case is equivalent to the general issue at common law, and puts in issue all the material allegations in the complaint. (White v. Moses, 11 Cal. 69; Dseux v. Domec, 18 Cal. 83; Glazer v. Clift, 10 Cal. 303.)

It is necessary to aver in a complaint on a bill of exchange or promissory note that it has not been paid. (Frisch v. Caler, 21 Cal. 71; Jones v. Frost, 28 Cal. 245.)

J. M. Corcoran and J. B. Campbell, for Respondent.

The general denial raises no issue with plaintiff.

The complaint containing a copy of the note, and the answer not being verified, the genuineness and due execution of the note is admitted (Sec. 53 Civil Prac. Act), and plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the pleadings. (Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 69; Kinney v. Osburn, 14 Cal. 113; Sacramento County v. Bird, 31 Cal. 66; Corcoran v. Doll, 32 Cal. 83.)

Evidence of payment could only be given under a plea of payment. (Edson v. Dillage et al., 8 Howard Pr. Rep. 274, 275; Piercy v. Sabin et al., 10 Cal. 22; Glazer v. Clift, 10 Cal. 303; Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 417; Coles v. Soulsby, 21 Cal. 47; Hook v. White, 36 Cal. 302.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The complaint contains a copy of the promissory note in suit. The answer, among other matters, contains a general denial. The pleadings are not verified. The plaintiff moved for and obtained judgment on the pleadings.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

The question is; whether the general denial presents any issue of fact. In Frisch v. Caler, 21 Cal. 14, this question was fully considered. The statute then in force required a replication to new matter in the answer. The answer averred that the note in suit had been paid by the defendant, except a small sum, which was admitted to be then due; and it was contended that that averment was admitted, because of the failure on the part of the plaintiffs to file a replication denying it; but the Court held that it was not new matter; that the failure to pay the note constituted the breach, and must be alleged; and that the allegation in the answer — that it had been paid — was only a traverse of the allegation in the complaint that it had not been paid. (See, also, Brown v. Orr, 29 Cal. 120.) The opinion of Mr. Justice CORRE, in the case of Frisch v. Caler, is distinguished for its force and clearness; and the doctrine then laid down has not since been departed from, so far as we are aware, except in the case of Hook v. White, 36 Cal. 300. In that case the pleadings were verified, and the answer denied on information and belief that the note had not been paid, or that any sum of money was due on it. A denial of that averment, on information and belief, is clearly insufficient. (Humphreys v. Call, 9 Cal. 62; Brown v. Scott, 25 Cal. 195; Vassault v. Austin, 32 Cal. 606.) That was all that the exigencies of that case required to be decided, on the point in question, and the case, so far as it holds that the allegation in the complaint, that the note remains unpaid, is immaterial, and that a denial of the allegation does not put any fact in issue, ought, in our opinion, to be overruled.

The general denial in this case put in issue the averment of the complaint, that the promissory note remained due and unpaid.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Mr. Justice BELOHER did not express an opinion.

Points decided.

PANY OF CALIFORNIA, AND THAT CERTAIN

TWO AND ONE FOURTH MILES OF RAILROAD AND TELEGRAPH LINE, SITUATE IN THE COUNTY OF PLACER, AND STATE OF CALI-FORNIA, AND KNOWN AS THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD AND TELEGRAPH LINE.

STATEMENT ON MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL.—The specification of reasons why a new trial should be granted, to be made in the statement, is not a general one of errors, in admitting or excluding the evidence, as set forth in the foregoing statement, but a particular specification, and a pointing out and reference to each alleged error.

TAX ON CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD AND TELEGRAPH LINE BY STATE.—The State of California has authority to impose taxation for State purposes upon that portion of the Central Pacific Railroad, and the telegraph line in connection therewith, lying within its limits.

TAXATION BY STATE ON PROPERTY OF CORPORATION.—A railroad corporation, organized under the laws of a State, cannot claim an exemption of its property, lying within the limits of a State, from State taxation, because the corporation thus created has been subsequently adopted by the Federal Government, and is employed in the service of the General Government, in the carriage of mails, munitions of war, etc.

EXEMPTION FROM STATE TAXATION.—The principle upon which the business of a corporation created by the Federal Government as an agent in the execution of its powers, is exempt from State taxation, does not apply to the real property of the corporation lying within the limits of a State.

UNIFORM OPERATION OF LAWS.—The Constitution of this State does not require laws to have a uniform operation, unless they are of a general nature; and whether a law is of a general or special nature depends, in a measure, upon the legislative purpose discernible in its enactment.

ISSUE.—The Constitution does not prohibit a special Act, because the subject with which it deals might have been the subject of a general law.

UNIFORM OPERATION OF TAX LAWS.—A State revenue law is not unconstitutional because there is a want of uniformity between the particular laws prevailing in the several counties, with regard to the enforcement of the payment of delinquent taxes.

Argument for Appellants.

REVENUE DISTRICTS AND ASSESSORS OF PROPERTY.—The Legislature is not prohibited by the Constitution from creating more than one revenue district in a county, and providing for the election of Assessors and Collectors of revenue in each district.

SUITS BY DISTRICT ATTORNEY TO RECOVER DELINQUENT TAXES.—The Constitution of the State allows the Legislature to pass a law directing the District Attorney of a county to bring actions in the name of the people to recover delinquent taxes, and such law does not interfere with the constitutional duties of the Tax Collector.

Robert Robinson and Lewis Ramage, for Appellants, confined their argument to questions arising on the motion for a new trial, which are not passed on in the opinion, as the statement was held defective.

S. W. Sanderson, also for Appellants.

The railroad and telegraph line attempted to be taxed in this case have been "established" for postal and military purposes by the General Government, in the exercise of its constitutional powers, and are therefore national works over which the Federal Government has jurisdiction and control, as to all matters affecting their efficiency and use as such. Such being the case, the laws of this State, so far as they authorize the taxation of said railroad and telegraph line for State purposes, are repugnant to the laws of Congress by which said railroad and telegraph line have been "established," and are therefore null and void, as being an unconstitutional interference with the means adopted by Congress for the purpose of carrying into execution certain powers of the General Government.

A brief glance at the provisions of the Act of Congress of the 1st of July, 1862, will suffice to show that the "Union Pacific Railroad Company" is a national corporation, and that the Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Line, so far as they have been constructed by that company, were intended by Congress to be a national railroad and telegraph line, subject entirely to the legislative management and control of that body, in relation to all matters affecting their use and maintenance for the purposes intended.

The first section names a number of persons, and declares that they, "together with five Commissioners to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and all persons who shall or may be associated with them, and their successors, are hereby created and erected into a body corporate and politic, in deed and in law, by the name, style, and title of the 'Union Pacific Railroad Company.'" The company thus created is vested with the usual and customary powers of a corporation. The corporation is then expressly authorized to construct and maintain a railroad and telegraph line, upon a given line, and between certain points named. The amount of the capital stock is next prescribed, and also certain rules and regulations for the government of the corporation, the management of its affairs, and the transaction of its business. Provision is also made for the election of a Board of Directors, and for the appointment of two additional Directors by the President of the United States, to act as Directors on the part of the Government. The second section grants a right of way through the public lands, with the further right to take from the public lands, adjacent to the line of the road, materials of every description for the construction of the road, concluding with a promise, on the part of the United States, that the Indian titles to all lands falling under the operation of the Act shall be extinguished as rapidly as may be. The third section grants to the company alternate sections of land, on each side of said road, with certain reservations as to mineral lands and lands reserved, or otherwise disposed of, or to which preëmption or homestead claims have attached. The fourth section provides, among other things, for the appointment of three Commissioners by the President, who are to examine the road, from time to time, and report to him as to the manner of its construction and the progress made therein, with a view to the issuing of patents for said lands, and that all vacancies occurring in said Board of Commissioners shall be filled by the President. The fifth section provides for loaning the credit of the Government, in the shape of bonds, and securing the payment thereof by a first lien upon the road and telegraph, together with all the rolling stock and other property, and concludes with a provision which has a most important bearing upon the question in hand, viz: "And on the refusal or failure of said company to redeem said bonds, or any part of them, when required to do so by the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, the said road, with all the rights, functions, immunities, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, and also all lands granted to the said company by the United States, which, at the time of said default, shall remain in the ownership of the said company, may be taken possession of by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the use and benefit of the United States." This provision, so suggestive of the intent of Congress to impart to the road and telegraph line a national character, and place them under the jurisdiction and control of the General Government, is followed by another provision, no less significant of such intent, contained in the sixth section, which provides: "That the grants aforesaid are made upon condition that said company shall pay said bonds at maturity, and shall keep said railroad and telegraph line in repair and use, and shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies, and public stores, upon said railroad, for the Government, whenever required to do so by any department thereof, and that the Government shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid." Power to consolidate with other companies named in the Act is given in the sixteenth section — a power which the sovereign only can confer. The right to connect with the road is given to other companies by the fifteenth section — a condition which the sovereign only can impose. The President is authorized to establish a uniform width of track, so that the same cars can be run from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, by the twelfth section — a condition which the sovereign only can impose. The seventeenth section provides that if said company shall fail to comply with the terms and conditions of the Act, or to keep the road in repair and use for an unreasonable time, "Congress may pass any Act to insure the speedy completion of said road and branches, or put the same in repair and use, and may direct the income of said railroad and telegraph line to be thereafter devoted to the use of the United States," etc.; and further, that if said roads are not completed "so as to form a continuous line from the Missouri River to the navigable waters of the Sacramento River, by the 1st day of July, 1876, said roads, with all their rolling stock, fixtures, etc., shall be forfeited to and be taken possession of by the United States" — all being powers which the sovereign only can exercise. A still further and perhaps more conclusive demonstration of the alleged intent of Congress to exercise complete legislative power over the road, for all the purposes for which its construction was undertaken, is found in the eighteenth section, which deals with the question of fares and the power of Congress to add to, alter, amend, or repeal the Act. It provides that when the net earnings of the road and telegraph shall have reached a certain per centum upon their cost, "Congress may reduce the rates of fare thereon, if unreasonable in amount, and may fix and establish the same by law. And the better to accomplish the object of this Act — namely, to promote the public interest and welfare, by the construction of said road and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government, at all times (but particularly in time of war), the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes—Congress may at any time, having due regard for the rights of said companies named herein, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this Art.” Finally, by the last section, the company is required to make annual reports, as to certain matters therein mentioned, to the Secretary of the Treasury, for the obvious purpose of enabling the General Government to supervise and control the road and telegraph by legislation and otherwise (12 U. S. St. at Large, 489).

This provision in relation to fares has a controlling effect upon the question in hand. The right to regulate tolls is incident to sovereignty. Where the latter does not exist the former does not. Nor can the doctrine of concurrent jurisdiction upon the subject of fares and freights be maintained if advanced. The clause that Congress may regulate them after the profits of the road shall have reached a certain percentage upon the cost, upon familiar principles, is a denial of a right to interfere before that time on the part of either the General or State Governments; and the clause in relation to uniformity is a denial of any right on the part of State Governments to interfere at any time; for if a right to interfere be admitted, the right to adopt any rate they might severally elect is implied. They might, therefore, adopt rates not uniform, and such result, being in conflict with the declared purpose of Congress, shows that Congress has so far legislated upon the subject as to render repugnant all State legislation. Besides, whenever from any cause, uniformity of rule is demanded, the right to deal with the subject at all is vested exclusively in the General Government. So, by the nature of the subject, as well as the express will of Congress, all State interference is prohibited. (Cooley v.

Board of Wardens, 12 How. 299; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wallace, 713; Crandall v. The State of Nevada, 6 Wallace, 35.)

The Amendatory Acts of July 2d, 1864 (13 U. S. Stats. 356), March 8d, 1865, and June 25th, 1868, are of the same general character. They make some changes, but such changes only serve to confirm the opinion that the intent of Congress was to establish the Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Line as national improvements, for the use of the National Government for postal, military, and other purposes, and generally to promote and subserve the public interest and welfare. As their provisions furnish only cumulative evidence upon the question of Congressional intent, no further reference to them is deemed necessary.

In view of the title of the Act, and the several provisions thereof, to which reference has been made, and the several Acts since passed by Congress upon the same subject, it is submitted that there is no rational ground for doubting the national character of this railroad and telegraph. The purposes of the Act, as declared in this title, and repeated in its body, are national in every sense of the term. The road and telegraph for which provision was made are local in no sense of the term. They were to span more than half the continent, and to constitute a part of a continuous line of communication, stretching through States and Territories, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. The declared intent was to "promote the public interest and welfare, particularly in time of war," by making them the means of communication and transportation for Government dispatches, mails, troops, supplies, public stores, and munitions of war. No object or purpose could be more national.

In respect to this question, the Pacific Railroad Acts are upon all fours with the Act by which the Bank of the United States was established. (8 U. S. Stats. at Large, 266.) The plan adopted by Congress for the purpose of establishing the bank and securing its use to the Government, as a financial agent, is so similar to that adopted in the present case, as to suggest that the former served as a model for the latter. As in this instance, a corporation, with full banking powers, was created. The amount of its capital stock was fixed at thirty-five millions of dollars, of which sum the Government was to subscribe only one fifth, or seven millions, leaving twenty-eight millions to be taken by private individuals. The affairs of the bank were to be managed by twenty-five Directors, of whom twenty were to be elected by the stockholders and five to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The powers of the Directors and the business operations of the institution were defined and restricted. Power was given, with certain restrictions, to establish branch institutions in the several States. The Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to call upon the bank for a statement of its affairs, as often as once a week. For the privileges and benefits conferred by the charter, the President and Directors of the bank were required to pay to the United States a bonus of one million and five hundred thousand dollars, in three equal payments. And it was lastly provided that the books of the corporation should always be open to the inspection of a committee of either House of Congress, appointed for that purpose.

If we look to the objects and purposes of the two Acts, those of the Railroad and Telegraph Act are no less national in their character than those of the bank. If the latter was necessary — that is to say, appropriate to the proper administration and management of the finances of the Government, the former was no less appropriate or necessary to the proper conduct and management of its postal and military affairs. Each were but means to an end, which was assumed to be within the jurisdiction of the Government to accomplish. If the United States Bank was designed to be a national institution, subject to the jurisdiction of the General Government, or the legislative will of Congress, it would seem to be incontrovertible that the Union Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Line, if not more so, is certainly not less a national measure, and not less under the control of the National Government. That it was intended so to be, is further apparent from the fact that Congress has no power to create a corporation for any other than national purposes — for any other object than as an instrumentality, or machine, for carrying into effect the powers vested in the General Government. This was decided in the case of Osborn v. The United States Bank, 9 Wheaton, 738.

The Central Pacific Company, then, is a national corporation.

The Central Pacific was not in the first instance created a corporation by the General Government. It had become a corporation under the laws of this State prior to the passage of the Pacific Railroad Act. I claim, however, that by reason of the Acts of Congress in relation to it, that Congress has recognized its corporate existence, and has adopted it as its agent, and that it has thus become a national corporation, and that this State has released the company from all allegiance to her.

In 1852 the Legislature of this State passed the following Act:

"An Act to grant the right of way to the United States for railroad purposes.

"WHEREAS, The interests of this State, as well as the whole Union, require the immediate action of the Government of the United States for the construction of a national thoroughfare connecting the navigable waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, for the purposes of national safety, in the event of war, and to promote the highest commercial interests of the Republic:

Argument for Appellants.

"The People of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

"SECTION 1. The right of way through this State is hereby granted to the United States for the purpose of constructing a railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean." (Stats. 1852, p. 150.)

Again, by the Act of 1862, Congress conferred the same powers upon the Central Pacific which it conferred upon the Union Pacific, annexing thereto the same conditions. In the ninth section of the Act it is provided that:

"The Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of California, are hereby authorized to construct a railroad and telegraph line from the Pacific coast, at or near San Francisco, or the navigable waters of the Sacramento, to the eastern boundary of California, upon the terms and conditions, in all respects, as are contained in this Act for the construction of said railroad and telegraph line first mentioned, and to meet and connect with the first mentioned railroad and telegraph line on the eastern boundary of California."

Again, in the tenth section, it is further provided:

"And the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, after completing its road across the State, is authorized to continue the construction of said railroad and telegraph through the Territories of the United States to the Missouri River, including the branch roads specified in this Act, upon the routes hereinbefore and hereinafter indicated, on the terms and conditions provided in this Act in relation to the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, until said roads shall meet and connect, and the whole of said railroad and branches and telegraph is completed."

Argument for Appellants.

So, throughout the Act, and the subsequent Acts, grants and powers are conferred upon the Central Pacific in the same manner, to the same extent, and upon the same conditions upon which they are conferred upon the Union Pacific, thus evincing an intent on the part of Congress to convert the former into a national agent or corporation, and to establish between it and the National Government precisely the relation which was being established between the National Government and the Union Pacific. These Acts, it is submitted, had the effect to convert the Central Pacific into a national corporation, which would continue to exist, even though this State should repeal the laws under which it was first incorporated; and, further, they also had the effect to withdraw the company from the jurisdiction of the State quoad all matters affecting the construction, maintenance, and use by the General Government of the railroad and telegraph line.

On the 4th of April, 1864, the Legislature of this State passed the following Act:

" An Act to aid in carrying out the provisions of the Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Act of Congress, and other matters relating thereto.

" The People of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

" SECTION 1. Whereas, by the provisions of an Act of Congress, entitled 'An Act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1st, 1862, the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California is authorized to construct a railroad and telegraph in the State of California, and in the Territories lying east of said State towards the Missouri River; therefore, to sistent or in conflict with the provisions of this Act, or the rights and privileges herein granted.

"SEC. 2. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage." (Stats. 1863-4, p. 471.)

That Congress has the power to create corporations as agents, or instrumentalities, or means of carrying into effect other powers, which are sovereign, whenever such corporations may be regarded by Congress as appropriate means to such an end, has never been seriously doubted since the great cases of McCullough v. The State of Maryland, 4 Wheaton, 316, and Osborn v. U. S. Bank, 9 Wheaton, 738. (2 Story on Const., Secs. 1137, 1138, 1139, 1149, 1150.)

If Congress can construct a wagon road for a post road, may it not also construct a railroad for a like purpose? Although all-sufficient for that purpose, the power "to establish Post Offices and post roads" is not the only power to which the authority of Congress to construct and maintain the Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Line may be referred. It may be referred to the power to "provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." (McCullough v. The State of Maryland, 4 Wheaton, 406.)

The question as to what are appropriate means to be used in executing express powers, is a political question to be determined by Congress. (Id.)

A railroad and telegraph line, which extends two thousand miles through several States and Territories, is neither local in site nor in benefit. It requires no argument to show that it is a wise, if not an indispensable provision, for the common defense, or that it is calculated to promote the general welfare of the United States. The power of taxation exists as a concurrent power in the National and in the State Governments. It is an indispensable attribute of sovereignty which each must have the right to exercise, but by reason of the relation which subsists between them, the right of each must be so exercised as not to interfere with the sovereignty of the other (Weston v. The City Council of Charleston, 2 Peters, 486.)

The above case involved the question whether the City of Charleston could tax six and seven per cent stock of the United States, and it was held that it could not. Such has continued to be the law of that Court down to the present time. In the case of The Bank of Commerce v. New York City, 2 Black. 620, it was held, further, that it made no difference whether the State law taxed the stocks eo nomine, or included them in the aggregate of the taxpayer's property, to be valued, like the rest, at its worth on the market, thus showing that no change in mode or form can affect the result. If the result be to cast a burden upon the measures of Congress adopted for the purpose of carrying into effect the powers of the Government, the State law is void. Again in the Bank Tax Case, 2 Wallace, 200, it was declared that "a tax laid by a State on banks 'on a valuation equal to the amount of their capital stock paid in, or secured to be paid in,' is a tax on the property of the institution, and when that property consists of stocks of the Federal Government, the law levying the tax is void."

Another application of these principles is found in the case of Dobbins v. The Commissioners of Erie County, 16 Peters, 435. The plaintiff was a Captain in the United States revenue service, residing in Pennsylvania. The laws of that State imposed an ad valorem tax on offices, and the question was whether the law, as to offices held under the United States, was not void. It was declared to be void, the ground of the decision being that it was within the power of the United States Government to fix the compensation to be paid to its officers, and that any law of a State, the effect of which was to diminish the amount of such compensation, conflicted with the law of Congress, and was therefore void.

Suppose the corporations had already failed to perform the conditions imposed by Congress, and the Secretary had already taken possession of this road and telegraph, who would be sovereign then, the General Government or this State? The right to take possession implies sovereignty no less than possession with such conditions. If the General Government was now in possession, operating the road by officers and engineers employed and paid by it, was now devoting its income to the use and benefit of the United States, is there any one so hardy as to assert that the General Government would have to pay taxes to this State—that the paramount would have to pay tribute to the subordinate? (Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheaton, 1; Crandall v. The State of Nevada, 6 Wallace, 35; Tin Sing v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 534.)

T. B. McFarland and E. L. Craig, for Respondents.

The position of counsel is that the railroad in question is a national institution, and therefore is exempt from State taxation within the rule of McCullough v. The State of Maryland, 4 Wheaton, 316.

The Railroad Acts of California and of Congress, cited by counsel and upon which he relies in this part of his case, are private statutes, and should have been both pleaded and proved in the Court below. They are private because they relate to certain individuals, and not to the people at large. (Sedgwick on Stat. and Const. Law, 30, and note.)

If they are private statutes they should have been specially set up as a defense. This is elementary. (Ellis v. Eastman, 32 Cal. 449.)

Even though not held to be technically private statutes, still, as appellant claims a special privilege under them not accruing to citizens generally, in order to avail itself of that privilege the statutes should have been specially pleaded; and the facts bringing appellant within the statutes relied on should have been proved on the trial. All these things appear in the record in every case cited by counsel.

But if the Court, overruling our views, should deem it proper to consider these statutes, then we say: first, that appellant is a state corporation, organized by the State of California, subject to its sovereignty, and therefore entirely without the rule of the cases cited by its counsel. It is admitted by counsel that if appellant be a State corporation then the above conclusion follows. And in McCullough v. The State of Maryland, 429, the Court say:

“The sovereignty of a State extends to everything which exists by its own authority, or is introduced by its permission.”

Counsel don't deny, of course, that the appellant was created by the State of California, and exists under her laws. How, then, does he propose to remedy this great defect in his case? Why, he says that Congress has “recognized its corporate existence,” and, for certain purposes, “adopted it as its agent,” and “thereby” has “converted it into a national corporation.” This is virtually saying that to “recognize” or to “employ” is the same as to “create”—a confusion of ideas perfectly bewildering.

We suppose, therefore, according to this doctrine, that if the General Government should employ an incorporated express, or stage, or steamboat company to carry its mails or munitions of war, or to do any business for it whatever, it would thereby immediately “convert it into a national corporation.” Is there anything in such a notion that demands a serious answer?

Again: counsel says that the State of California “has released the Central Pacific Railroad Company from all allegiance to her,” and in support of this position he quotes in full the Act of this State of April 4th, 1864, which assumes legislative control of the company all the way through it, and contains, among other things, the following express provision:

"Said company to be subject to all the laws of this State concerning railroad and telegraph lines, except that messages and property of the United States, of this State, and of said company, shall have priority of transportation and transmission over said line of railroad and telegraph." (Stats. 1863-4, p. 471.)

Does this look like a release from "all allegiance" to the State? Is there anything more to be said on the subject?

But if the corporation of the Central Pacific Railroad Company had been expressly created by the General Government, still there is nothing in this case that brings it, in any sense, within the rule of McCullough v. The State of Maryland.

In the first place, it must be remembered that the tax in the case at bar is not upon the "corporation," or its "franchise," or its "acts," or its "operations," but simply upon its ordinary property, which is taxed in common with all the other property in the State.

Now what was the case of McCullough v. The State of Maryland, and what did it decide? In that case the Court was dealing with a statute of the State of Maryland aimed directly and specially at the operations of the United States Bank. The Act organizing the bank was passed under great political excitement, and against the most bitter opposition, the controversy turning upon the relative power of the General and State Governments. A branch of the bank was established in Baltimore in 1817. In 1818, at the next meeting of the Legislature of Maryland, an Act was passed to "impose a tax upon all banks" not chartered by the State Legislature, prescribing the manner in which the notes of the bank should be issued and their denominations, and providing that its notes should be issued upon paper furnished by the State, and that the bank should pay a stamp duty to the State upon every note issued, ranging in amount from ten cents to twenty dollars, unless the bank should pay a large yearly sum in gross for the privilege of doing business. (4 Wheat. 317, 318, 319.) Congress passed the United States Bank Law as a proper measure for the prosecution of its fiscal operations, for the convenient transmission of public moneys, and for the general conduct of the financial department of the Government; the Government itself being the principal stockholder.

Now what did the Court decide? Simply this: First, that the bank was a constitutional measure, lawfully instituted and employed by the General Government for the exercise of its powers; and second, that the Act of Maryland imposed a tax upon the "operations" of this constitutional "measure," and was therefore void.

Throughout the whole opinion Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL speaks of the tax as directed against a "measure"—an "instrument"—the "means" established by the Government for its own purposes. The whole theory of the case is that the tax was a burden imposed upon the bank itself; upon the corporation; upon its acts; its operations; its business; its very existence; its right to fulfill the purposes for which it was created. It was not a tax upon the ordinary property of the bank, and therefore has no bearing on the case at bar. If the State of California had imposed a stamp duty upon the tickets issued by appellant to its passengers, or a general tax upon the corporation itself, or upon its right to do business, or upon any of its acts or "operations," there would be some slight analogy between the two cases.

At the conclusion of the opinion Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL gives the whole gist of the case as follows:

"The result is a conviction that the States have no power, by taxation or otherwise, to retard, impede, hinder, or in any manner control the operations of the constitutional laws enacted by Congress to carry into execution the powers vested in the General Government."

Argument for Respondents

And, as if seeing half a century ahead, and providing for this present attempt of this appellant to escape the just payment of its taxes under the shadow of the great opinion he was then delivering, he adds the following:

"This opinion does not deprive the States of any resources which they originally possessed. It does not extend to a tax paid by the real property of the bank in common with the other real property within the State, nor to a tax imposed on the interest which the citizens of Maryland may hold in this institution in common with other property of the same description throughout the State. But this is a tax upon the operations of the bank, and is, consequently, a tax on the operation of an instrument employed by the Government of the Union to carry its powers into execution. Such a tax must be unconstitutional."

None of the other cases cited by counsel on this point go any further than McCullough v. State of Maryland. In Osborn v. U. S. Bank, 9 Wheat. 738, the law of Ohio, as the Court say (p. 868), was more objectionable than the law of Maryland. In this case the State statute imposes a tax upon "all banks" not chartered by the State, and specially provides that the United States Bank, if it should "continue to transact business," shall pay "an annual tax of fifty thousand dollars." The tax was not upon the ordinary property of the bank, but upon the right to "transact business." In Weston v. City Council of Charleston, 2 Peters, 449, the tax was upon stock issued by the United States Government as evidences of its indebtedness; and the Court held it void because a burden upon the power of the Government to contract and to borrow money. The other cases cited by counsel in no way alter the principle of McCullough v. Maryland.

The position of counsel that because the Pacific railroad companies are to transmit and transport dispatches, mails, munitions of war, and other property of the Government over their lines, therefore their railroads, and other property used by them, can't be taxed, for the reason that they are means used by the General Government within the reason of McCullough v. Maryland, would apply with equal force to all stage coaches, wagons, steamboats, etc., belonging to other contractors with the Government. But that such property is not subject to the rule as contended for is expressly decided in Searight v. Stokes, 3 Howard, 151. In this case the United States had granted to the State of Pennsylvania all that portion of the Cumberland road lying within her limits, upon a compact providing, among other things, that "no toll shall be received or collected for the passage of any wagon or carriage laden with the property of the United States, or any cannon or military stores belonging to the United States" (p. 165); and afterwards the State of Pennsylvania passed a law providing "that in all cases of wagons, carriages, stages, or other modes of conveyance, carrying the United States mail, with passengers or goods, such wagon, stage, or other mode of conveyance, shall pay half toll." (Page 166.) The question was as to the validity of the latter law; and counsel for the United States took the position: first, that the law was in violation of the compact above referred to; and, second, that a stage carrying the United States mail is a "means" of the Federal Government to execute its powers within the rule in McCullough v. Maryland, and therefore, not subject to State taxation. Upon the first point the Court was divided, the majority holding that the word "property," as used in the compact, included "mail," and that, therefore, the law was in conflict with the compact. The constitutional question is not much discussed in the opinion of the majority, but Mr. Chief Justice TANNEY, who delivers it, says:

"If the State had made this road herself, and had not entered into any compact upon the subject with the United States, she might undoubtedly have erected toll gates thereon; and if the United States afterwards adopted it as a post road, the carriages engaged in their service in transporting the mail, or otherwise, would have been liable to pay the same charges that were imposed by the State on other vehicles of the same kind."

But Mr. Justice McLEAN, who held that "property" did not include the mails, and that the law was not in conflict with the compact, delivers a dissenting opinion, in which he reviews at length the constitutional question, and clearly shows the true meaning of McCullough v. The State of Maryland, and kindred cases cited by counsel in the case at bar. To the latter part of this opinion, commencing at page one hundred and seventy-nine, we earnestly invite the attention of the Court. It is well known that Mr. Justice McLEAN was a distinguished member of that school of constructionists at the head of which stood the illustrious MARSHALL, who claimed that the Constitution of the United States should be interpreted, not strictly, but rationally. And it will be seen from this opinion that those eminent jurists who went the furthest in enlarging the powers of the Federal Government, never dreamed of carrying the doctrine to the extreme point claimed by the appellant in the case at bar.

But the very questions which we have been discussing have been settled adversely to the views of appellant in the case of Thompson v. The Union Pacific Railroad Company, Eastern Division, et al., recently decided by the Supreme Argument for Respondents.

Court of the United States. (Not yet reported, but published in the Sacramento Union of May 12th, 1870, and other public newspapers of that date.) In that case, the Union Pacific Railroad Company, Eastern Division, bore exactly the same relation to the system of companies which were subsidized by Congress — and which, together, completed the overland railroad — that is borne by the appellant in the case at bar. The company was incorporated by the State of Kansas, and afterward, like the appellant here, had certain rights conferred on it by Congress. But the Court say:

“The corporation, however, remained a State corporation, though entitled to certain benefits and subject to certain duties under the legislation of Congress.”

This is a complete answer to counsel's theory about appellant being “converted into a national corporation.”

The action in the case we are considering was a bill to restrain the collection of taxes imposed by the State of Kansas upon the railroad and telegraph of the company. The complaint alleges, among other things, “that the property of the the company is mortgaged to the United States; that the company is bound to perform certain duties, and ultimately to pay five per cent of its net earnings to the United States; that the company will be greatly hindered and embarrassed in the performance of its obligations and duties to the United States if the taxes imposed are collected;” and that the collection of the taxes will be to the “prejudice of the just rights of the complainants and of the securities of the United States.”

This is precisely the position taken by appellant here, except that in the former case the position was taken in the pleadings in the Court below, while in the case at bar it is first taken in the brief in the Court above. The reasoning employed, however, and the authorities cited, are the same in the two cases. The Court say:

Argument for Respondents

"The main argument for the complainants, however, is that the road, being constructed under the direction and authority of Congress, for the uses and purposes of the United States, and being a part of a system of roads thus constructed, is therefore exempt from taxation under State authority. * * The case of McCullough v. Maryland is much relied on."

Thus it will be seen that the questions to be decided were exactly those raised in the case at bar. The decision of the Court, which is somewhat lengthy, and covers the whole ground, expressly and pointedly declares that the case is not within the rule of McCullough v. Maryland; that the latter case only goes to a tax levied by a State upon the "operations" of an instrument "created by the General Government" as a "means" for executing its powers, and does not extend to the case of a corporation enacted by a State, or to the property of any corporation or agent. The Court say:

"We do not think ourselves warranted, therefore, in extending the exemption established by the case of McCullough v. Maryland beyond its terms. We cannot apply it to the case of a corporation deriving its existence from State law, exercising its franchise under State law, and holding its property within State jurisdiction, and under State protection. * * * We fully recognize the soundness of the doctrine that no State has a 'right to tax the means employed by the Government of the Union for the execution of its powers.' But we think there is a clear distinction between the means employed by the Government. Taxation of the agency is taxation of the means; taxation of the property of the agent is not taxation of the means."

The last sentence above quoted is a concise and exceedingly forcible expression of the principle for which we are contending.

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, C. J.

The final result at which the Court arrived is stated as follows:

“ We are unable to find in the Constitution any warrant for the exemption from State legislation claimed in behalf of the complainants.”

We expressly invite the attention of the Court to this case, as it will be found to be a full determination of all the questions raised in the third brief of counsel for appellant.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.

This action is brought to recover of the railroad company the taxes upon some ninety-two miles of railroad and telegraph line, the property of the company, lying within two of the several revenue districts into which the County of Placer is divided.

The complaint, which is in the form usual in such cases, avers, among other matters, that the railroad company is a corporation duly organized and acting under the laws of the State of California, and is engaged in the business of constructing, operating, and running therein its railroad and telegraph line; that ninety-two and one fourth miles of the road and telegraph line are situated in the County of Placer, and are subject to taxation therein for both State and county purposes; that a tax was duly levied upon all the property in the county subject to taxation — a State tax of one dollar, and a county tax of one dollar and ten cents upon each one hundred dollars worth of property; that there was thereby duly assessed to the railroad company, upon so much of their road and telegraph line as lay within the First Revenue District of the county, upon a valuation of twelve thousand dollars per mile, a State tax of one thousand nine hundred and fifty dollars and a county tax of two thousand one hundred and forty-five dollars; and upon so much of their road and telegraph line as lay within the Second Revenue District in said county, upon a like valuation per mile, a State tax of nine thousand one hundred and twenty dollars, and a county tax of ten thousand and thirty-two dollars—all which several sums are alleged to be due and unpaid, and judgment is demanded therefor, with the percentage, damages, and costs in such cases provided by statute.

The answer of the company does not deny that it is a corporation deriving its existence from the State laws, but, among other defenses set up, denies the validity of the alleged tax; denies that the valuation really fixed upon the road and telegraph line by the Assessor and Board of Equalization exceeded six thousand dollars per mile thereof, but alleges that there was added to this valuation of six thousand dollars per mile another sum of six thousand dollars per mile, by which the gross valuation of the road and telegraph line purported on its face to have been fixed at twelve thousand dollars per mile, but that this additional six thousand dollars per mile was, in truth, the imposition of a tax upon the value of the business of the company transacted upon the road in the transportation of passengers, freight, etc., and that the Board of Equalization of Placer County, in dealing with the taxation of the road and telegraph line, received and considered certain evidence brought before them as to the mere business done and profit realized by the company in the use of the road and the telegraph line.

A trial was had in the District Court for Placer County, where judgment having been rendered in favor of the people, as prayed for in their complaint, and a motion of the defendant for a new trial having been denied, this appeal is brought from the judgment and the order denying the new trial.

No point can be considered here which is rested upon the refusal of the motion for a new trial. There is found in the record no sufficient specification of the grounds of the motion, in accordance with the prescribed practice. The statement, as filed and settled, purports, it is true, to set out in the body of it the several proceedings had at the trial—the proffers of evidence, the rulings of the Court, and the exceptions reserved; the only attempted specifications of the grounds of the motion, however, are as follows:

“First—Errors in admitting the evidence offered by plaintiff, as set forth in the foregoing statement, objected to and excepted to at the time.

“Second—Errors in excluding the evidence offered by defendant, as stated in the foregoing statement, and to which refusal and exclusion defendant then and there excepted.”

It has been repeatedly determined here that, in support of a motion for a new trial, the specifications of the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient, or of the particular errors of law upon which the moving party will rely, is indispensable under section one hundred and ninety-five.

The specification required, though found in, and, therefore, in one sense a part of the statement, is nevertheless distinct practically from the statement—it must, of course, be supported by the statement—but it may be and usually is narrower than the statement in its scope. It cannot, indeed, be broader; it cannot point to anything which is not to be found in the statement by which it is supported, but it may, and in practice usually does, omit many matters of alleged error and insufficiency which are to be found in the statement, and which, by thus omitting, it definitively repudiates and abandons. Its office is to select out of the mass of these, and by this selection to preserve such and only such of the matters appearing in the statement itself, upon which it is the purpose of the party to finally rely and insist in support of the motion. It would be unprofitable in this connection to go over the numerous cases in this Court in which this rule has been applied and the statement disregarded; it is sufficient to say that in more than one of them the rule referred to was much more nearly complied with than has been done in this case. (Beans v. Emanuelli, 36 Cal. 117; Butterfield v. C. P. R. R. Co., 37 id. 381.) This view disposes of several questions argued by counsel, but there are others made and not depending upon the motion for a new trial, which we proceed to consider.

First—It is claimed that the railroad and telegraph line in question are not subject to taxation under State laws. An elaborate argument has been submitted on the part of the railroad company, in which it is urged that the road and telegraph were established by the Federal Government in the exercise of its constitutional powers “to establish Post Offices and post roads;” “to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States;” “to suppress insurrections and repel invasion,” and “to raise and support armies.” That the taxing power of the State Government, otherwise extending generally to all subjects found within the borders of the State, is to some degree qualified and restrained by the provisions of the Federal Constitution and by Acts of Congress passed in pursuance thereof, is undeniable. The question in this respect has always been, as to the mere degree or extent of the restraint imposed. When the Federal Constitution was before the States for ratification, the question of the respective powers of taxation to be thereafter exercised by the individual States upon the one hand, and the Federal Government upon the other, in the event of the proposed ratification, was a subject of the most anxious consideration. The opponents of the proposed system which was to be established under the Federal Constitution held this language: “Revenue is as requisite to the purposes of the local administration as to those of the Union, and the former are at least of equal importance with the latter, to the happiness of the people. It is, therefore, as necessary that the State Governments should be able to command the means of supplying their wants as that the National Government should possess the like faculty in respect to the wants of the Union. But an indefinite power of taxation in the latter might, and probably would in time, deprive the former of the means of providing for their own necessities, and would subject them entirely to the mercy of the National Legislature."

To this objection, Mr. HAMILTON, the recognized champion of the proposed new system, and who lent the force of his unrivaled abilities and the weight of his high personal character to its adoption, replied in this language: "Yet I am willing here to allow in its full extent the justness of the reasoning which requires that the individual States should possess an independent and uncontrollable authority to raise their own revenues for the supply of their own wants. And making this concession I affirm that (with the sole exception of duties on imports and exports) they would under the plan of the Convention retain that authority in the most absolute and unqualified sense; and that any attempt on the part of the National Government to abridge them in the exercise of it, would be a violent assumption of power unwarranted by any article or clause of its Constitution." (Fed. No. 32.)

"Though a law, therefore, laying a tax for the use of the United States, would be supreme in its nature and could not legally be opposed or controlled, yet a law abrogating or preventing the collection of a tax laid by the authority of a State (unless upon imports and exports) would not be the supreme law of the land, but an usurpation of a power not granted by the Constitution." * * * "The inference from the whole is that the individual States would, under the proposed Constitution, retain an independent and uncontrollable authority to raise revenue to any extent of which they may stand in need by every kind of taxation, except duties on imports and exports." (Fed. No. 33.)

This was the theory upon which the Constitution was ratified, but when it subsequently came to be applied in practice, it was determined in the Supreme Court of the United States that "imports and exports" were not the only subjects which had been withdrawn from the operation of the taxing power of the States. In the case of McCullough v. The State of Maryland, 4 Wheaton, 316, there was brought in question the validity of an Act of the Legislature of the State imposing a tax upon all banks established and doing business as banks of discount and deposit in that State, without first obtaining a charter from the Legislature. Among the other provisions found in the State law was one which imposed a duty upon all such banks to procure from the State office, by payment of a designated stamp tax, stamped paper of graduated value whereon to issue their notes. The Bank of the United States, chartered in the year 1816, having established one of its branches in the City of Baltimore, an attempt was made to subject its business to taxation under the State law.

The opinion of the Court, delivered by Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL, utterly and pointedly repudiated the views we have already referred to as having been enunciated in the Federalist; that opinion declared in effect that the State power to tax had been taken away, not only as to "imports and exports," but as to all other subjects constituting the means provided by the Federal Government for the exercise of its constitutional powers. It was admitted that this view found no direct support in any particular clause or express provision of the Federal Constitution. It was, however, declared to result from an asserted principle upon which the Federal Government had itself been founded—the principle of supremacy—and it was said that it was "of the very essence of supremacy to remove all obstacles to its action within its own sphere," and that this principle (to quote further the language of the Chief Justice) "so entirely pervades the Constitution, is so intermixed with the materials which compose it, so interwoven with its web, so blended with its texture, as to be incapable of being separated from it without rending it into shreds."

The bank being in the opinion of the Court, a means "necessary and proper" to conduct the fiscal operations of the Government, it was accordingly held that its business, though carried on within the State, was not the subject of taxation by State laws.

Several years subsequently the same question arose before the same Court in the case of Osborn v. The Bank of the United States, 9 Wheaton, 738. In that case a statute had been passed by the State of Ohio similar in its general scope to that of Maryland, and under its provisions an attempt had been made to enforce the payment by the branch of the United States Bank, located at Chillicothe, of a State tax upon its banking business. The Court reviewed to some extent the position taken in the case of McCullough v. The State of Maryland. "The whole opinion of the Court" (in that case, said the Chief Justice), "is founded on and sustained by the idea that the bank is an instrument which is 'necessary and proper for carrying into effect the powers vested in the Government of the United States.' It is not an instrument which the Government found ready made and has supposed to be adapted to its purposes; but one which was created in the form in which it now appears for national purposes only." The same general views were subsequently reasserted and applied by the Court in Weston v. The City Council of Charleston, 2 Peters, 449, in which a municipal tax had been imposed by ordinance of the City of Charleston upon certain loan stock issued by the Federal Government, and also in other cases.

But we are of opinion that the case under consideration does not fall within the principle announced in any of these cases, for several reasons.

The corporation here was not in the first instance created by the Government of the United States, but by the State; and even if it be conceded that the corporation thus created under State law has been subsequently adopted by the Federal Government, and availed of by that Government as a means of carrying into effect its constitutional powers, such adoption would not, upon the principles adverted to, exempt it from the operation of the State revenue laws. But there is another reason which we think conclusive upon this point, and that is, that the tax in question is not a tax imposed upon the business of the corporation defendant, but only upon its real property situate within the State. The principle upon which mere means created by the Federal Government, as agencies in the execution of its powers, are to be exempted from State taxation, has never been applied to the exemption of real property within the State, even when occupied or used exclusively in connection with the business which is itself exempted. Hence, in McCullough v. The State of Maryland, supra, the Chief Justice observed: "This opinion does not deprive the States of any resources which they originally possessed. It does not extend to a tax paid by the real property of the bank, in common with the other real property within the State," etc. It is said, however, by the counsel for the railroad corporation, that this was a mere dictum of the Chief Justice — that the only question before the Court in that case was as to the authority of the State to tax the business of the bank, and that its authority to tax the real estate belonging to the bank was not a point in judgment. But the Court having announced a principle, by the application of which the extent of the State authority to impose taxes was to be measured and defined, it of course became necessary to indicate the limits of the operation of that principle — to point out the general subjects to which it did not — as well as those to which it did apply. The counsel for the State of Maryland had urged that the principle itself was purely arbitrary, and one which, if sanctioned by the Court, was utterly incapable of limitation. "We have not been told," he said, "whether the banking houses of this corporation, and any other real estate it may acquire for the accommodation of its affairs, are also of this privileged order of property. In principle it must be the same; for the privilege, if it exists, belongs to the corporation, and must cover equally all its property." These views had been urged upon the attention of the Court in the discussion at the bar — a discussion characterized, as the Chief Justice declared, by "a splendor of eloquence and strength of argument seldom, if ever, surpassed." It was in response to this position, and in answer to the reasoning by which it had been supported, that the opinion of the Court undertook to expound and apply the principle which it had asserted; and we think that, when in order to distinctly define the scope of its operation, the Court declared that the principle of exemption did not extend to real property within the State, it was the authoritative determination of a question of surpassing importance in itself — one which had been distinctly presented, elaborately argued by counsel, and deliberately considered by the Court.

But whether the case of McCullough v. The State of Maryland is to be considered as an authoritative adjudication upon this precise point or not, becomes comparatively unimportant, in view of the much later case of Thomson v. Pacific Railroad, 9 Wallace, 579, determined by the Supreme Court of the United States in the year 1869. In that case, certain stockholders in a railroad corporation filed a bill in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas, to enjoin the collection of taxes assessed upon the railroad and telegraph property of the company under the revenue laws of the State of Kansas. It was there distinctly claimed that the principle of exemption from State taxation was applicable to that property — and this was the principal issue, indeed the sole question presented. The argument by which the claim was supported was much the same in its general scope as that submitted for our consideration. The Court was, however, unanimously of the opinion that such a claim was without support. After a review of the authorities, it expressed its views as follows: "But we are not aware of any case in which the real estate or other property of a corporation not organized under an Act of Congress has been held to be exempt, in the absence of express legislation to that effect, to just contribution, in common with other property, to the general expenditure for the common benefit, because of the employment of the corporation in the service of the Government." Further, speaking of the principle upon which such exemption is rested, it said: "We cannot apply it to the case of a corporation deriving its existence from State law, and holding its property within State jurisdiction and under State protection."

We have not overlooked the argument of the counsel for the defendant here, in which it is asserted that there is a distinction to be taken between the case of Thomson v. Pacific Railroad and the one now under consideration. It is said that in the former case it was admitted in the pleadings that the corporation was "a local or State corporation," but we have already had occasion to observe that it is also admitted by the pleadings in this case "that the said defendant, the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, is a corporation duly organized and acting under the laws of the State of California." In this respect, therefore, the two cases are substantially identical. It is also urged that in the former case "there had been no legislation on the part of Kansas by which that State could be said to have relinquished any of its sovereign rights over the railroad company; while it is insisted that upon the part of the State of

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

California such laws have been enacted as amount to a renunciation of State power in the premises. Without pausing at this point to consider whether under our constitutional system of government it is or would be competent to either the State or Federal Government to abdicate in favor of the other its rightful authority, constitutionally vested in it, over such a subject as this, so as to destroy the uniformity of the relations existing between the several States upon the one hand and the Federal Government upon the other, we are of opinion that there is nothing to be found in the legislative enactments of this State which imports a renunciation upon its part of the sovereign power of taxation over the railroad and telegraph line in question. On the contrary, we find that in the statute of April 4th, 1864 (Stats. 1863-4, p. 471), enacted for the purpose of enabling the railroad company to comply with and perform the provisions and conditions of the Act of Congress of July 1st 1862, it is distinctly provided as follows: "Said company to be subject to all the laws of this State concerning railroad and telegraph lines, except that messages and property of the United States, of this State, and of the said company, shall have priority of transportation and transmission over said line of railroad and telegraph." The exception points out, and was obviously intended to point out, the only particulars in which the assent of the State there accorded to the provisions of the Act of Congress should change in any respect the conditions theretofore existing between the railroad corporation upon the one hand and the State of California upon the other, and the liability to State taxation was not one of these. For these and many other reasons which we need not here stop to enumerate, we are of opinion that the authority of the State to impose taxation upon the railroad and telegraph line, in common with all other subjects of taxation within its limits, is clear and unquestionable, and the objection of the defendant in that respect must be overruled.

Second—It is next objected that the revenue laws of the State are unconstitutional—null and void—as not being uniform in their operation, and in this connection Article I, Section 11, of the State Constitution is cited in the following words: “All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation.”

It is not denied that the mere taxation imposed by the revenue laws is equal and uniform, nor is it pretended that property is taxed otherwise than in proportion to its value; but it is said that although these cardinal constitutional rules are observed in the structure of the revenue laws of the State, yet there is a want of uniformity between the particular laws prevailing in several localities of the State in respect to the enforcement of the payment of delinquent taxes; that in some counties this payment is enforced by means of a levy upon the property of the delinquent, and a sale thereof made by the Tax Collector to the bidder who will pay the tax for the least amount of property, while in other counties an action at law, judgment, execution, and Sheriff's sale are resorted to; that where the sale is made by the Sheriff, under judgments rendered, the deed delivered to the purchaser is conclusive, while in case the sale be made by the Tax Collector, it is only prima facie evidence of title, etc.

That the legislative power is restrained only by the limitations of the Constitution, clearly imposed upon its exercise, and that a statute enacted is not to be put aside by the Courts, unless its conflict with the fundamental law be manifest, are the rules of familiar application. The deference we owe to the legislative will is only second to that which we owe to the commands of the Constitution, which both the Legislature and the Court are sworn to obey.

The particular section of the Constitution supposed to have been infringed by the Revenue Law in force in the County of Placer concerns "laws of a general nature," and declares that such laws shall have a uniform operation. The Constitution, it will be observed, has not undertaken to declare that all laws shall have a uniform operation—uniformity in that respect is made requisite only in case the law itself be one of a general nature, and if it do not purport to be such an one, no objection as to uniformity or want of uniformity in its operation can be interposed. The nature of a given statute as being general or special must depend in a measure upon the legislative purpose discernible in its enactment. We are not to say that a statute, plainly special in its scope, must either have a uniform operation or not operate at all—for this were to add another to the limitations which the Constitution has imposed upon the legislative power, and to hold in effect that no special Act could be passed at all—at least if "uniform" operation means universal operation, as the argument of the defendant's counsel would apparently maintain. Nor are we to say that a special statute—special in its aim and in the object it has in view, is by mere construction to be converted into a general statute, because the subject with which it deals might have been made the subject of a general law. It is obvious that every law upon a general subject is not per se, nor by constitutional intendment, necessarily a law of a general nature. The subject may be general, but the law and the rule it prescribes may be special. Fees of office, for instance, constitute a general subject—one which pervades the length and breadth of the State, and extends into every political subdivision of which it is composed—yet a statute may prescribe what these fees of office shall be in a particular county, and may declare that they shall differ from fees established for the same official duties performed in another county. Such a law would not be a law of a general nature, involving the constitutional necessity of uniform operation, but it would be a special law upon a general subject, and at an early period in our judicial history the constitutionality of such a statute was unhesitatingly sustained by this Court. (Ryan v. Johnson, 5 Cal. 85.) The legislation of the State has since then proceeded upon the assumed correctness of the construction given to the Constitution in that case. The views there announced have never since then been seriously questioned by any case in this Court to which our attention has been called, and as an exposition of the clause of the Constitution under consideration, in point of time almost contemporaneous with the adoption of the Constitution itself, and, ever since its enunciation, observed and followed in the legislative proceedings of the State, it must be considered as conclusive upon the point of constitutional law involved in this objection.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

Third—It is claimed that the tax in question was illegally assessed, because not assessed by a County Assessor for Placer County—the point being that the record shows that the assessment of a portion of this road and telegraph line was made in Revenue District Number One, by the Assessor of that district, and the assessment of the remainder of the road and telegraph line in Placer County was made in Revenue District Number Two, by the Assessor of that district. It is argued that such an officer as a District Assessor—at least of a district less in its territorial extent than an entire county—is unknown to the Constitution. That instrument (Art. II, Sec. 13) provides as follows: “Section 13. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law; but Assessors and Collectors of town, county, and State taxes shall be elected by the qualified electors of the district, county, or town in which the property taxed for State, county, or town purposes is situated.” It is obvious that the "district" for which an Assessor is to be chosen is not necessarily coterminous with the boundaries of a single county, for a county being also named in the clause, the expression would become thereby merely tautological, and, so far, without the precision which is to be looked for in every word of the organic law. A county is one territorial division, expressly recognized by the Constitution for revenue purposes, in the clause already cited; a district is another, and these were obviously not intended to designate the same or an identical extent of territory. Obviously, then, a revenue district may be less in extent than a county, of which it is a part. There is nothing in the Constitution which expressly forbids it to be so, or presents a substantial difficulty in that construction of its several provisions.

Fourth — The fourth and last objection to be noticed is also rested upon section thirteen, Article II, of the Constitution, already cited. It is argued that the statute authorizing an action to be brought by the District Attorney, for the collection of taxes, is not warranted by this section of the Constitution — that if such an action is to be brought at all it must be brought by the Tax Collector. The action is brought not by the Tax Collector, nor by the District Attorney, but by the people of the State of California, and is conducted by their District Attorney for the County of Placer. The money sued for is claimed by the people as due to them for taxes delinquent and owing by the defendant to them. The office of District Attorney is one created by the Constitution (Art. VI, Sec. 11); and the Legislature is therein required to fix by law his duties and his compensation. By the Act of April 29th, 1851 (Hitt. General Laws, Sec. 2402), it is made the general duty of that officer to prosecute actions accruing to the State or his county; and by the Act of May 17th, 1861 (Hitt. General Laws, Sec. 6188), it is especially made his duty to commence actions in the name of the people of the State of California for the recovery of delinquent taxes. This legislation is directly authorized by section eleven, Article VI, of the Constitution, already referred to. It is the duty of the Tax Collector to receive taxes from those offering to pay them; and the law might have made it his duty to take steps to enforce their collection when delinquent, but it has not done so in this instance, but has assigned that duty to the District Attorney; and we do not find in the Constitution that where the taxpayer has neglected and refused to pay the taxes, though due, the Legislature may not authorize judicial proceedings to be instituted, and may not, in case of such proceedings, direct the proper District Attorney to conduct them as other judicial proceedings in which the people are the party in interest. The right to bring the suit at all imports the duty to provide for its conduct by some officer or person competent for the discharge of that duty; and even if it be conceded that it is the general duty of the Collector to receive the taxes when offered by the taxpayer, and that it is not competent to the Legislature to authorize any other officer to perform that general duty, unless it first make such officer ex officio Tax Collector, we apprehend that when the Tax Collector has been defeated in the performance of that duty by the persistent refusal of the taxpayer, and has made his official return to that effect, his legal duties as Tax Collector may be said to have so far come to an end, and been discharged by him, as that judicial proceedings may be instituted to recover of the delinquent a sum of money equal to the delinquent tax, together with damages, percentage, costs, etc.

We see nothing in this course, if pursued, which would amount to an interference with what is claimed to be the constitutional duties of the Tax Collector, or a disturbance of any discernible scheme of county government to be found in the Constitution.

Statement of Facts.

The judgment and order denying a new trial must, therefore, be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

[The defendant made application to the Chief Justice, under the provisions of the Federal Judiciary Act, for the allowance of a writ of error in this case, but the Chief Justice denied the application. The writ was, however, afterwards allowed by one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States; and the record having been returned into that Court, and the cause argued and submitted there, the writ of error was dismissed upon the application of the plaintiff in error.—REPORTER.]

JOHN S. OLELAND v. HENRY THORNTON AND J. WILLIAMS.

DAMAGES FOR BUILDINGS BURNED THROUGH NEGLIGENCE OF ANOTHER.—

In an action to recover the value of buildings destroyed by fire through the negligence of another, evidence as to the cost of new buildings to replace those destroyed, is admissible, as furnishing some data for an approximate estimate of the value of the old buildings.

IDEM—CHARACTER OF TIMBER.—In an action to recover the value of standing timber which has been destroyed by fire, evidence as to the character of the timber is admissible.

DAMAGES BY FIRE THROUGH NEGLIGENCE OF ANOTHER.—Where a party makes a fire for a necessary purpose, upon or near the grounds of another, but negligently leaves it, with combustible material about it, and the fire spreads and destroys adjacent property, the party building the fire is liable for the damages done by the fire.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Ninth Judicial District, Siskiyou County.

This was an action for damages. The complaint alleges that the defendants, while driving a herd of sheep through the country, encamped near the plaintiff's premises, and carelessly, negligently, and willfully permitted fires kindled by them to get out and spread over the adjoining country, thereby destroying a hay shed and corral, a blacksmith shop and tools, a dwelling house, household furniture, lumber, and other property belonging to the plaintiff; and also destroyed a forest of timber upon plaintiff's land, suitable for lumber, and adjoining a sawmill owned by him, thereby depriving the mill of logs, and making it comparatively valueless. The case was tried by the Court, without a jury. At the trial, evidence was admitted against the defendants' objections, to the effect that the probable cost of new buildings, to replace the ones that were burned, would be about two thousand six hundred dollars; and testimony that the timber destroyed was suitable for lumber was admitted also, against objections by the defendants. It was shown by the testimony, that the defendants had lighted a fire between the barn and the house, which was less than two hundred yards distant; that there was enough dry brush and material between the fire and the house, and in other directions, to convey the fire to the property burned; and that the defendants had gone away and left the fire burning. The Court rendered judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of one thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars. The defendants moved for a new trial, and the motion being denied, they appealed.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

There was no error in the ruling of the Court admitting the evidence as to the cost of new buildings to replace those which were burned. The evidence was admissible as furnishing some data by which the Court would be enabled to estimate approximately the value of the old buildings; and it is evident from the opinion and order of the Court, that it was received and considered for this purpose only, and not as affording a criterion of damages. The evidence as to the character of the timber for milling purposes in that immediate neighborhood was also admissible under the pleadings, when it was offered. But, whether strictly admissible or not, it is apparent from the findings, and from the opinion and order of the Court denying a new trial, that it did the defendants no harm. Nor can we disturb the judgment on the ground that the findings were not justified by the evidence, which was quite sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the damage to the plaintiff's property was caused by the negligence of the defendants, as charged in the complaint.

Judgment affirmed.

THE PARDONING POWER.—The pardoning power, whether exercised under the Federal or State Constitution, is the same in its nature and effect as that exercised by the representatives of the English crown in this country in colonial times.

PARDON REMOVES DISABILITY TO TESTIFY.—One of the consequences of an executive pardon is to remove from the offender the disability which follows conviction of a felony.

PARDON AFTER PUNISHMENT.—An offender may be pardoned after he has suffered the punishment adjudged for his crime.

RESTORATION TO CITIZENSHIP NOT A PARDON.—An executive act restoring a convicted criminal to the rights of citizenship, is not a pardon—does not remove the legal infamy. So long as the judgment of guilt remains the disability to testify necessarily continues.

J. G. Eastman and G. W. Tyler, for Appellant.

Attorney General Love, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

On the trial of the prisoner upon an indictment for the alleged crime of grand larceny, one Davis was permitted to testify as a witness. Davis had been convicted of divers felonies in the Courts of the State, for which he had been adjudged to suffer and had suffered imprisonment in the Penitentiary. The record of these convictions was produced by the prisoner, who thereupon objected that Davis was thereby rendered incompetent to testify in the case. It appeared by the records produced and put in evidence by the prisoner in support of his objection, that in July, 1861, by the judgment of the Court of Sessions of the County of Santa Clara, Davis had been duly convicted of the crime of robbery and sentenced to suffer imprisonment in the Penitentiary; that in 1864 he had been duly convicted by the judgment of the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco of the crime of burglary, and again sentenced to imprisonment in the Penitentiary; and that in 1868, in the County Court of Santa Clara, he had been duly convicted of the crime of grand larceny, and by the judgment of that Court again sentenced to undergo punishment therefor by imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

It was conceded below and is conceded here that these convictions of themselves well supported the objection of the prisoner in that behalf. In order to remove the objection and to restore the competency of Davis, the people relied upon and exhibited to the Court an executive act which they claimed removed the disability arising from these several convictions, and which is as follows:

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

"Whereas, Charles Davis alias Charles Moore has been convicted of criminal offenses against the laws of the State of California, and whereas it is desirable for the attainment of the ends of justice that he should be restored to citizenship; now, therefore, I, H. H. Haight, Governor of said State, do hereby restore said Davis to all the rights of citizenship possessed by him before his conviction for the offenses above referred to. Witness my hand and the great seal of the State at Sacramento this 17th day of March, 1871.

"H. H. HAIGHT, Governor.

[Seal.] "Attest: H. L. NICHOLS, Secretary of State."

The Court below being of opinion that the competency of Davis as a witness was thereby restored, thereupon overruled the objection of the prisoner in that behalf, and its ruling in this respect is now brought up for review.

The power of the Executive of the State to pardon offenses, other than the offense of treason or impeachable offenses, is conferred upon him by the Constitution. (Art. 5, Sec. 13.) His power in that respect is of the same general nature as that conferred upon the President of the United States by the Federal Constitution. (Art. 2, Sec. 2.) It is true that the pardoning power of the President extends to the pardon of offenses before as well as after conviction, while that of the Governor, under the provisions of the State Constitution, embraces only those cases in which a conviction has already been had; and it is also true that, except in cases arising in the military or naval service, the pardoning power of the President is unrestrained by legislative control, while that of the Governor is subject, in its exercise, to such regulations as the Legislature may provide in relation to the manner of applying for pardons; but the inherent nature and operation of the power itself, whether exercised by the one or the other of these officers, and the consequences of its exercise by either in a given case, must be considered to be substantially identical, and as extending its effect not merely to the punishment otherwise inflicted or to be inflicted, but also to the guilt of the offender. "The effect of a pardon (under the rules of the common law) is to make the offender a new man; to acquit him of all corporal penalties and forfeitures annexed to that offense for which he obtains a pardon; it gives him a new credit and capacity; and the pardon of treason or felony, even after conviction or attainder, will enable a man to have an action of slander for calling him a traitor or felon." (2 Blackstone, p. 402.) Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL, speaking of the pardoning power of the President under the provisions of the Federal Constitution, said: "As this power had been exercised from time immemorial by the Executive of that nation whose language is our language, and to whose judicial institutions ours bear a close resemblance, we adopt their principles respecting the operation and effect of a pardon," etc. (United States v. Wilson, 7 Peters, 159.)

In Ex Parte Wells, 18 How. 810, the Supreme Court of the United States reaffirmed this view of the nature of the executive power to pardon offenses as existing under the Federal Constitution, and there can be no doubt that the pardoning power, whether exercised under the Federal or State Constitution, is the same in its nature and effect as that exercised by the representatives of the English Crown in this country in colonial times, and that one of the consequences of a pardon extended was and is to remove from the offender that disability to testify as a witness in a Court of justice which, by the rule of the common law, was consequent upon his conviction of a felony. The Governor might have pardoned Davis had he seen fit — he was not the less the subject of the executive power in that respect because he had already suffered the punishment adjudged for his crime. (2 Wheeler C. C. 451.) Had he done so, there is no doubt that his competency as a witness would have been thereby restored.

But the executive act under review is not a pardon, nor was it intended to be such. It did not purport to remove the guilt of Davis, nor wipe away the infamy by the law of the land attaching upon him by reason of his conviction. It sought to restore him to all the rights of citizenship possessed by him before his conviction of the offenses "above referred to," and to so restore him, while he yet remained a convicted felon, and with the consequent legal infamy attaching by law to that status. The stain of his iniquity, flowing from his conviction, is still left upon him by the Executive. The judgment of the law upon that fact is that the credit of his oath is so absolutely and effectually destroyed that he cannot be trusted to testify at all; that it is not to be hoped that he will speak the truth, but must be conclusively assumed that he will not. If the judgment be reversed, the disability is, of course, necessarily removed; if the offense be pardoned the same consequence, too, would follow. But so long as the judgment remains, the guilt it fixes upon the convict is not taken away, and the disability necessarily remains. They are legally inseparable; hence it is held that if the Executive pardon the offense, he necessarily removes the disability annexed to it by law, and a proviso inserted in the deed of pardon that the disability shall remain, notwithstanding the pardon of the offense itself, is void. (People v. Pease, 3 Johns. Cas. 333.)

These views dispose of the question presented, but if they did not, it might be not a little difficult to maintain that the attempted restoration of Davis "to all the rights of citizenship" he had theretofore possessed would, by expression, include a right to testify as a witness, or that there is any known relation between the competency of a witness and his "rights of citizenship."

v. THOMAS M. LONG.

SUMMONS OF GRAND JURY.—Under section twelve of the Act of 1863, concerning jurors in certain counties, it is competent for the Judge of a Court, after the commencement of the session, to order a Grand Jury to be summoned.

ALLEGATION IN INDICTMENT FOR BURGLARY.—In an indictment for burglary, an allegation that the prisoner, in the night-time, entered, feloniously, burglariously, and with force and arms, is substantially to say felonice et burglariter fregit.

MOTION TO STRIKE OUT EVIDENCE GIVEN WITHOUT OBJECTION.—The practice, whether in civil or criminal cases, of deliberately permitting evidence to be given without objection in the first instance, and then moving to strike it out, on grounds which might readily have been availed of, to exclude it when offered, is not to be tolerated.

ADMISSIONS AS EVIDENCE.—A confession made to an officer who has the prisoner in custody, whether it appear to have been made voluntarily or not, is admissible, if it was not induced by improper means.

APPEAL from the County Court of Plumas County. *

The defendant was arrested on a charge of burglary, September 28th, 1871, and committed to jail to await examination. The Court convened November 6th, 1871, when the Judge made an order directing that a Grand Jury be summoned to be in attendance on the sixteenth of that month. When the Court convened on the latter date, the defendant, being present with his counsel, objected to the panel, on the grounds that the case was not one that would authorize the calling of a special Grand Jury, as having arisen since the commencement or immediately before the session of the Court; that the Grand Jury had not been summoned in conformity with section five of the Act of April 4th, 1864; that the requisite number of ballots was not drawn, and that notice of the drawing had not been given in accordance with law. The challenge was overruled by the Court, and the defendant excepted. The defendant then demurred to the indictment as stated in the opinion, and the demurrer was overruled. On the trial, the Under Sheriff, Boring, was permitted to testify, without objection on the part of the defendant, that while the defendant was in his custody he had commenced a conversation with him, in which the defendant confessed the crime, but that witness had held out no inducements to him to make the confession. Afterward, the counsel for defendant moved to strike out the testimony, and the motion was denied. The defendant was convicted, and he appealed.

E. T. Hogan, for Appellant.

John L. Love, Attorney General, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

1. The challenge of the prisoner interposed to the panel of the Grand Jury was properly denied. By section twelve of the Act of 1863-4 (p. 526) it is provided, that if, after the commencement of the session of the Court, it shall appear proper to the Judge that a Grand Jury be summoned, he shall cause an order to that effect to be entered on the minutes of the Court. This was done; and in impaneling the Grand Jury so directed to be summoned, sections nine, ten, and eleven appear to have been observed.

2. The next error assigned is the overruling of the demurrer to the indictment. The offense of which the prisoner was convicted was that of burglary—defined by section fifty-eight of the statute concerning crimes and punishments. The indictment alleges that the prisoner, in the night-time, feloniously and burglariously, and with force and arms, entered the dwelling house of Taylor with intent to commit petit larceny, etc. The objection taken is that it is not alleged that the prisoner forcibly broke and entered, etc. We think that under section two hundred and forty-seven of the Criminal Practice Act the indictment was sufficient; the allegation that the prisoner in the night-time entered feloniously, burglariously, and with force and arms, is substantially to say felonice et burglariter fregit.

3. There was no error in permitting Boring, the Under Sheriff, to testify as to the confession of the prisoner made to him. The evidence was not objected to when it was offered and given upon the part of the prosecution, and for that reason its admission could not be erroneous. Had objection been then made to its admission, the prosecution would doubtless have shown that the confession was voluntary, as was subsequently shown in answer to the motion of the prisoner to strike out the evidence of the confession. The practice, whether in civil or criminal cases, of deliberately permitting evidence to be given without objection in the first instance, and then moving to strike it out on grounds which might readily have been availed of to exclude it when offered, is not to be tolerated. There is nothing in the points made upon the instructions given to the jury; these are necessarily disposed of by the views already expressed.

IMPLIED BIAS.—A challenge for implied bias must specify the particular cause from which the bias is to be inferred.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE — JUSTIFIABLE KILLING.—Under the provisions of section twenty-nine of the Act concerning crimes and punishments, the killing of another is justifiable only when the entry into a habitation, is being made in a violent, riotous, or tumultuous manner, for the purpose of offering violence to some person therein, or for the purpose of committing a felony by violence.

REASONABLE OPPORTUNITY OF REMOVING INTRUDER.—W., who was a clerk of a hotel, saw A. in the act of entering at a window in the night-time, and fired at him, without first calling to him to desist or inquiring as to his purpose. Held: that there being no circumstances calculated to arouse the fears of a reasonable man or indicating a danger so urgent or pressing as to excuse the instant use of a deadly weapon, it was not error to refuse to instruct the jury to the effect that if W. did not have a reasonable opportunity of removing A. then he was justified in shooting him.

ERRORS AS TO ABSTRACT PRINCIPLES OF LAW.—The Supreme Court will not consider alleged errors upon merely abstract propositions of law, in giving instructions in a criminal case, but will merely review misdirection or refusal to give proper instructions upon points actually arising in the case.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Thirteenth Judicial District, County of Merced.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

G. W. Tyler, for Appellant.

Attorney General Love and Alexander Campbell, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The prisoner was convicted of the crime of manslaughter, in killing one Atwill, and from the judgment and an order denying him a new trial he has prosecuted this appeal:

1. The challenge interposed to the juror Fowler "for im plied bias," specifying nothing, was properly denied. (People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 130; People v. Renfrow, 41 Cal. 37.)

2. It is insisted that the Court erred in its charge to the jury, and in the refusal to give to the jury certain instructions asked for by the prisoner, and refused by the Court.

The shooting was not denied, but was claimed by the prisoner to have been excusable under the circumstances. The prisoner was the clerk in charge at Coulter's Hotel, in Snelling, at which hotel the deceased was a boarder, but not a lodger, and about two o'clock in the morning saw a man, who proved to be the deceased, seemingly in the act of getting into or out of a window of one of the rooms on the ground floor of the hotel. The man appeared to be balanced upon the sill of the window, with his feet hanging out; and the prisoner seems to have fired at him from another window of the same hotel. The ball entered the upper portion of the left thigh of the deceased, lodging in the right leg, between the knee and ankle. Tetanus subsequently set in, causing death in a few days. The evidence for the prisoner, he having been sworn upon his own behalf, was to the effect that, hearing a noise about two o'clock in the morning, seemingly a striking against the sash of a window, he jumped up—had a revolver in his hand—and seeing by a faint moonlight the legs of a man hanging out of the window of the room occupied by the children of Mr. Strong, the proprietor of the hotel, he fired, without knowing who the person in the window was, and without warning him, or inquiring of his business there. Upon the other hand, the evidence upon the part of the prosecution tended to show that the prisoner was not ignorant of who the deceased was when he fired at him; that he knew well that it was Atwill in the window; that in the room into which the window opened was a woman, in charge of the children of Strong, the landlord, and that for the favors of this woman the deceased and the prisoner were rivals; that the deceased, as he expressed it in his dying declaration, put in evidence, had "got the inside track of Walsh," and had persuaded the woman to discard the latter altogether, and to swear fidelity to himself. The deceased was on a visit, or rather retiring from a visit to the woman when he was shot. He had gone into the room at about twelve o'clock at night, and after remaining with her some two hours, was crawling out through the window, feet foremost — detained for a moment in regaining his hat, which had been knocked off by the window curtain — when Walsh shot him in the legs. The theory of the prosecution, in short, was that the shooting was malicious, and was prompted by feelings of jealousy and revenge upon the part of the prisoner towards the deceased.

The Court refused to instruct the jury that if they believed "that the defendant, having charge of the house, had reason to believe that the person trying to enter the house by the window, at the midnight hour, did so for the purpose of committing a felony or other unlawful act, then the jury will acquit." It is clear that the instruction, as thus asked, is not the law. The phrase unlawful act, as contained in the instructions asked, goes beyond the provisions of section twenty-nine of the Act concerning crimes and punishments, with reference to which the instruction was apparently drawn. Under the provisions of that section the killing would be justified only when the entry into a habitation is being made in a violent, riotous, or tumultuous manner, for the purpose of assaulting or offering violence to some person dwelling or being therein, or for the purpose of committing a felony by violence or injury. The statute also provides that a bare fear of any of these offenses is not sufficient to justify the killing, but that it must appear that the circumstances were sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man, and that the party killing really acted under the influence of those fears, etc. (Section 30.) The instruction as asked omits to present to the jury the question as to whether or not Walsh did believe that the entry was being made for the purpose of committing a felony, and really acted under any fear that such an offense was about to be committed when he fired the shot. At the request of the prisoner, the Court gave to the jury the eighth instruction, which is an exact copy of sections twenty-nine and thirty of the statute, and correctly set before them the rule by which their determination upon the point should be controlled; and in view of this instruction it can hardly be said, as claimed by the prisoner's counsel, that "the charges, taken as a whole, exclude the idea that the defendant could act upon appearances in shooting deceased, but that there must have been actual, real danger," as distinguished from mere apparent danger, sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable person.

At the instance of the prisoner the Court instructed the jury as follows: "A man is not authorized to fire a pistol on every intrusion or invasion of his house. He ought, if he has a reasonable opportunity, to endeavor to remove the intruder without having recourse to the last extremity; but the making an attack upon a dwelling, and especially at night, the law regards as equivalent to an assault upon a man's person, for a man's house is his castle." There was no error in refusing an instruction subsequently asked, to the effect that if the prisoner did not have a reasonable opportunity of removing the deceased, then he was justified in shooting him, and should be acquitted. "A reasonable opportunity" is too vague an expression in this connection; besides, the facts appearing at the trial did not warrant the instruction as asked. The shot was fired without calling to the deceased to desist, or inquiring of him as to his purpose in being in the window of the hotel. There were no circumstances calculated to arouse the fears of a reasonable man, or indicating a danger so urgent or pressing as to excuse the instant use of a deadly weapon. Walsh himself, when upon the witness stand, does not pretend that there were. He does not claim that he thought at the time that the firing was necessary to avert any danger, real or apparent — according to his own account it would seem to have been done in a spirit of recklessness. He says: "I fired without taking any aim."

We discover no error in the action of the Court in giving or refusing to give instructions to the jury upon points involved in the shooting of the deceased. We will not consider the errors, or supposed errors, of the Court below upon merely abstract proposition of law, but will only look to see that no misdirection or refusal to give proper instructions upon the points actually arising, or which, from the nature of the accusation, must have necessarily arisen in the case, has occurred.

The question as to whether or not the death of the deceased resulted from the wound inflicted upon him by the prisoner or from other causes, was fairly submitted to the jury under the instructions; and the objection to the giving in evidence of the dying declarations of the deceased was properly overruled. In fact, the record discloses no error of which the prisoner can be heard to complain, or by which his substantial rights were prejudiced at the trial.

FRANCES C. COOMBS, ADMINISTRATRIX OF THE ESTATE OF JOHN S. CHIPMAN, DECEASED, v. JAMES F. HIBBERD.

VACATING ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL.—When an application for a new trial has been made in due form, upon a settled statement, and the Court has passed on the motion, the order made is conclusive so far as the Court making it is concerned. The Court cannot afterwards vacate the order and decide again on the motion.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

A. M. Crane, for appellant.

The Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the order refusing a new trial, or to make an order granting a new trial after having once refused it. (Pr. Act, Secs. 333-6; Haight v. Gay, 8 Cal. 297; 1 Green, Iowa Reports, 235; 16 Ind. 358.)

W. W. Chipman, for Respondent.

The Court had a right, either on its own motion, or at the request of the party aggrieved, to vacate the order refusing a new trial, as improvidently made. The motion was in the nature of a petition for a rehearing, which it is in the inherent power of a Court to grant, as long as it has control of the cause. It is by virtue only of this inherent power that this Court grants rehearings. This power was always exercised at common law before enrollment. The entry of the judgment in this State does not complete the judgment roll (Spanagel v. Dellinger, 34 Cal. 476.) But our Statute of Amendment (Sec. 68 of the Practice Act) gives the largest powers to the Court in this respect, and warrants such a proceeding even after the lapse of the term.

Opinion of the Court — NILES, J.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The defendant having recovered judgment in the Court below, the plaintiff moved for a new trial, and the motion was denied on the 13th of July, 1870.

On the 21st of July the plaintiff gave a notice of a motion to "vacate the order denying a new trial, and to grant an order allowing the motion for a new trial to be reheard."

The application was to be made "upon the pleadings, statement on motion for new trial, stipulation of facts, the findings of the Court, and judgment roll."

This motion was heard on the twenty-third of July following, and taken under advisement by the Court. On the twenty-ninth of July the Court made an order vacating the order denying the motion for a new trial and allowing it to be reheard; and on August thirteenth made an order granting a new trial.

The defendant appeals from both of these orders.

It will hardly be contended that under our form of practice a Court could entertain two successive motions for a new trial in the same case, upon identical grounds. The right to move for a new trial is a creature of the statute, and this statute provides for but one statement and one motion.

The motion to vacate the order was equivalent in its effect upon the parties to a renewed motion for a new trial. It demanded another hearing of a question once determined, and resulted in the granting of a new trial which had been once refused. If this practice should be allowed, several consequences, not contemplated by the statute, would ensue. The limited time within which a motion for a new trial may be made would be practically enlarged, for there can be no good reason why the motion to set aside the order should be made within a limited number of days. The proceedings after judgment would be interminable, for the last order could be vacated upon motion of the losing party, and so ad infinitum. There must be some point where litigation in the lower Court terminates, and the losing party is turned over to the appellate Court for redress.

In the case of Morris v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 331, it appeared that the motion of plaintiff for a new trial was granted by the District Court upon its own motion, and before any statement had been settled or motion submitted by counsel. This Court held that the order should have been set aside upon the defendant's application.

There is an evident distinction between that case and the one now presented. There was no foundation, in the former case, for any order in the premises. There was no statement upon which the Court could act, and no motion for a new trial had been made. As the order stood in the way of defendant's appeal, by depriving him of the benefit of a statement, through which alone the grounds of appeal could be presented, it should have been set aside by the Court that made it. The error was not that the motion for a new trial was improperly granted, but that an order was made at all.

In the present case the proceedings upon plaintiff's motion for a new trial were in all respects regular. The statement had been settled and the motion heard and denied in the required order and in due form. Every error of the Court, including its supposed mistake in regard to the respective dates of the deed and lease, appeared in the statement, and could have been reviewed upon appeal from the order refusing a new trial. This was the plaintiff's proper and only redress.

The order vacating the order refusing a new trial, and the order granting a new trial, are reversed.

RECITAL IN JUDGMENT.—The judgment in a criminal case need contain no recital of the particular offense, but only of the general offense, within which the particular one is included.

ENTRY IN MINUTES IN CRIMINAL CASES.—The entry made in the minutes in criminal cases is part of the record, and errors or admissions in the record in that respect can be examined only on appeal, and will not be reviewed on habeas corpus.

THE POLICE COURT OF SAN FRANCISCO.—The Police Court of the City and County of San Francisco is not of inferior jurisdiction, in the sense that upon mere collateral inquiry, nothing is to be intended in support of its judgment, when rendered in a particular case, included by general definition in that class of criminal cases over which jurisdiction has been conferred upon it by law.

"DAVIS LOUDERBACK,

"Police Judge of the City and County of San Francisco."

The statute (Secs. 462, 463, Crim. Pr. Act) provides that when judgment in a criminal case has been rendered, the Clerk shall enter the same in the minutes, "stating briefly the offense for which the conviction has been had," etc., and that (except in capital cases) a certified copy of the entry, delivered to the proper officer, shall be his sufficient warrant to execute the judgment. The objection urged for the prisoner is that the judgment as entered does not specify the particular offense of which he was convicted, but states merely that he was "duly convicted in the Police Judge's Court of the City and County of San Francisco of the crime of misdemeanor."

The judgment is one thing—the brief statement of the offense of which the prisoner has been convicted is a different thing. The former—the ideo consideratum est—need contain no recital; it is here simply "that the said Patrick Murray pay a fine of forty dollars," etc. The entry made in the minutes in criminal cases is made by statute part of the record (Sec. 462, Sub. 5); and if there be errors or omissions in the record in that respect, they are examinable only on appeal or upon writ of error. But upon writ of habeas corpus, if the Court whose judgment is assailed be one of competent jurisdiction to render a final judgment of the character appearing, we are then only to inquire if the judgment, as rendered, be upon its face certain and definite in terms, so that it may be known what punishment the prisoner is to suffer. (Act concerning habeas corpus, Sec. 19, Sub. 2), and no objection in that respect has been, or can be taken to the judgment in question here.

Points decided.

The Police Court of the City and County of San Francisco, though of limited, is not of inferior jurisdiction in the sense that upon mere collateral inquiry nothing is to be intended in support of its judgments when rendered in a particular case included by general definition in that class of criminal cases over which jurisdiction has been conferred upon it by law.

The prisoner is therefore remanded.

Neither Mr. Justice RHODES nor Mr. Justice CROCKETT participated in this decision.

FERDINAND VASSAULT v. JAMES EDWARDS.

Correction of Transcript.—It is the duty of counsel to have clerical and typographical errors in the transcript corrected, and they must see to it that the corrections are made in all the copies filed with the Clerk.

EXECUTORY CONTRACT FOR SALE OF LAND.—A proposal to sell real estate, reduced to writing, and signed by the vendor alone, in which he recites that he has sold to the vendee the land for a price named, and has received a certain sum as a deposit, as part payment, which the vendor was to refund if the title was rejected or bad, the sale to be subject to a search of and approval of title, and the vendee to have twenty days for the examination of the title, is a valid contract of sale entered into between the parties.

IDEM.—In such contract, had no time been fixed, the vendee would have been entitled to a reasonable time in which to exercise his election, but time having been fixed, it is of the essence of the contract, and the Court has no power to extend it.

IDEM.—If such contract is extended, in order that the vendor may perfect his title, and the vendee, as soon as the title is perfected, accepts the same, and tenders the money, he accepts the vendor's proposal within a reasonable time, and it then ripens into a complete contract of sale.

IDEM.—An executory contract for the sale of real estate is valid and binding, and can be enforced by the vendee, if signed by the vendor alone.

PLEADING AGREEMENT TO SELL LAND.—An averment in a complaint, that an agreement was made to sell land, is sufficient, without alleging that it was in writing and signed. If denied, the proof must show that it was in writing and signed.

Argument for Appellant.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Daniel Rogers, for Appellant.

It is claimed that the contract is not mutual, because not signed by both parties.

This objection certainly arises from a misconception of our statute. The eighth section of the Act concerning fraudulent conveyances and contracts, provides that "every contract for the leasing for a longer period than one year, or for the sale of any lands, or any interest in lands, shall be void, unless the contract, or some note or memorandum thereof expressing the consideration, be in writing, and be subscribed by the party by whom the sale or lease is to be made." We now see that our statute does not require the contract to be signed by both parties, but simply by the party by whom the contract is made.

It is conceded that, generally, a contract to be specifically enforced by the Court must be mutual; but we contend that the present case is one of the exceptions to this rule, and that the statute only requires the agreement to be signed by the party by whom the contract is made, or by his agent, and is silent as to the signature of the other party. (Child v. Comber, 3 Sw. 423n; Backhouse v. Mohun, id. 434n; Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 265; Ballard v. Walker, 3 Johns. Cases, 60; Fry on Specific Performance, Secs. 290-298.)

It has been held by both Courts of law and equity that the statute—requiring the agreement shall be signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by whom the sale is to be made, and not by both parties—is satisfied by the signature of the party against whom the contract is sought to be enforced. (Laythorp v. Bryant, 2 Bing. N. C. 735; see note

Argument for Respondent.

"C" to Sweet v. Lee, 3 Man. & Gr. 462; Ballard v. Walker, 3 Johns. Cases, 60; Olason v. Baily, 14 Johns. 484; McCrea v. Purmont, 16 Wend. 460; 21 Wend. 446.)

There is no presumption that the agreement to extend the time was verbal, but, on the contrary, there is a presumption that it was in writing. Assuming that the fact alleged is necessary and material—that it was necessary to allege and prove this agreement to extend the time—the allegation that such an agreement was made is sufficient, as the presumption is that it was in writing, if the law so required it to be. (Champlin v. Parish, 11 Paige, 405.)

Campbell, Fox & Campbell, for Respondent.

There was no absolute contract to sell, no obligation to purchase, and no mutuality between the parties. It was a mere proposal to sell, subject to conditions not complied with.

The written contract appears by the complaint never to have been in force at all. The title was rejected. On that state of facts there could have been no mutuality. Neither was at that moment bound to the other; and appellant must, on his own complaint, rely on the supplemental agreement or fail.

The complaint does not state this to be in writing. (Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 415.) The "writing" is a fact essential to the cause of action, and we, therefore, taking the pleading most strongly against the pleader, have treated the statement as that of a verbal extension. A verbal extension of a contract, required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, is void. An unexecuted verbal agreement, made by a mortgagee to discharge a mortgage by a release, is within the Statute of Frauds. (Phillips v. Leavitt, 54 Me. 405.) Hasbruch v. Tappen, 15 Johnson's R. 200, is directly in point, showing the verbal extension to be void, and leaving the parties to stand on the written contract alone, which, we believe, the complaint itself shows is too weak to support appellant.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The alleged contract, which the plaintiff seeks to have specifically performed, is set out in the complaint. It is therein recited that the defendant had sold to the plaintiff the premises in controversy for the price of four thousand five hundred dollars, and had received fifty dollars in part payment; and the contract then proceeds as follows: "This sale is subject to a search of, and approval of, the title; and if the title is rejected or bad I agree to refund to said Vassault the fifty dollars paid on account; but if the title be approved I agree to convey the above premises to said Vassault, or his assigns, by a good and sufficient grant, bargain, and sale deed, on receiving the balance of the purchase money as above. And I hereby allow to said Vassault twenty (20) days for the examination of the title." It is signed by the defendant alone. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff paid the fifty dollars mentioned in the contract; that within the twenty days mentioned in the contract he examined the defendant's title to the lot, and found it defective in this, that the property had been sold to the defendant at a sale made under the order of the Probate Court; that the sale had been confirmed, and the administrator ordered to execute a deed, but that, in fact, no deed had been executed. It is further alleged that upon those facts being communicated to the defendant, he agreed to take the proper proceedings to obtain said deed, and "did extend the time mentioned in the agreement herein first above recited, for the purpose of completing said sale;" that the Probate Court subsequently ordered the administrator to execute a deed of the lot to the defendant; that thereupon the plaintiff did accept the title of the defendant, and so notified him, requested him to execute a deed, and tendered him the balance of the purchase money; but that the defendant refused, and still refuses to execute the deed. The demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, was sustained, and the plaintiff failing to amend, final judgment was rendered for the defendant.

There is a discrepancy between the copy of the alleged contract, as contained in the transcript, and that which is set out in the plaintiff's brief. In the transcript the words are, "and if the title is rejected or bad; while in the plaintiff's brief they are, "and if the title is rejected as bad." The defendant's brief leaves the matter in uncertainty, and we shall accept as correct the copy in the transcript. It is not material, however, to the questions which will be discussed, whether the reading in the transcript or in the plaintiff's brief is the correct one. The matter is alluded to for the purpose of saying that it is the duty of counsel to have clerical and typographical errors in the transcript, which are material, corrected, and that they must see to it that the corrections are made in all the copies filed with the Clerk.

The instrument above mentioned is not a contract. It is a mere proposal. "If the title is rejected or bad," then the defendant was to refund to the plaintiff the fifty dollars paid. If the title should be found to be bad the money was to be refunded; or if the plaintiff rejected the title the money was to be refunded. His right to reject was not subject to the condition that the title should be found to be bad; but he had the right, for any cause, to reject the title. The defendant insists that if the correct reading is "rejected as bad," still the plaintiff had the right to reject the title even if it were good; but it is not necessary to pass on that question.

The instrument, being a mere proposal for a sale, was a valid contract entered into between the parties; and if so, at what time did it become complete and binding? So far as the original proposal was concerned, the plaintiff was limited to twenty days in which to accept or reject the title. Time is unquestionably of the essence of the proposal for the sale. Had no time been mentioned, the plaintiff would have been entitled to reasonable time in which to exercise his election, but the time having been fixed, the Court has no power to extend it. And such is the rule among those dealing in real estate in this State, where such property is as salable as personal property. But it is alleged that when the plaintiff found that the defendant's title was bad, the defendant "did extend the time mentioned in the agreement herein first above recited, for the purpose of completing said sale." To this allegation the defendant objects, on the ground that the agreement to extend the time is not alleged to have been in writing. In this, however, the defendant is not sustained by the authorities. (See Wakefield v. Greenwood, 29 Cal. 599; and see cases collected in note to Sec. 505, Browne Stat. Fraud.) The Statute of Frauds has not changed the rules of pleading. The averment that the agreement was made is sufficient, without alleging that it was reduced to writing and signed; but if the statute requires the agreement to be in writing, the party alleging the agreement must, if the allegation be denied, prove it by the production of the writing, or by other competent evidence.

The time was extended, as well for the benefit of the defendant as the plaintiff, in order that the defendant might perfect his title to the lot, and although the length of the further period is not specified, yet as the plaintiff, upon the order of the Probate Court being made requiring the administrator to execute to the defendant a deed, accepted the title of the defendant, and notified him that he, the plaintiff, was ready to pay the purchase money, and requested him to execute the deed, it cannot be said that the plaintiff did not approve the title and accept the defendant's offer within a reasonable time. As soon as the plaintiff accepted the defendant's proposition or offer, it ceased to be merely a proposition, on the part of the defendant, to sell, but it ripened into a contract of sale. When the offer was accepted—and the approval of the title and the tender of the balance of the purchase money was an acceptance of the offer—the contract of sale was complete. The instrument in writing filled all the requirements of the Statute of Frauds, and the acceptance by the plaintiff was a sufficient legal consideration for the agreement on the part of the defendant. (Boston & M. R. R. v. Bartlett, 3 Cush. 224; 1 Para. Cont. 376 and 399.) It is only required by section eight of the Statute of Frauds that the contract of sale be signed by the party by whom the sale is to be made.

The further objection is taken under the demurrer that the contract is not mutual; and hence that a specific performance will not be decreed. The general rule undoubtedly is, that a contract will not be specifically enforced unless it be mutual—that is to say, such that it may be enforced by either party against the other. In cases falling within the fourth clause of the fourth section of the English Statute of Frauds—that no action shall be brought “upon any contract or [for] sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them * * * unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized”—and the analogous provisions of the statutes of the several States, the decisions have been almost uniform, that the agreement is required to be signed only by the party to be charged, and that it is valid and binding upon the vendor when so signed (if in other respects sufficient), without the signature of the other party to the agreement. Upon this point there is a greater degree of uniformity among the cases than in those involving the construction of most of the other provisions of the statute. The question is fully considered by Chancellor KENT, in Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 484, and the authorities are reviewed at some length; and although he agreed with Lord Ch. REEDSDALE, in Lawrenson v. Butler, 1 Sch. & Lef. 13, that on principle the contract ought to be mutual, and ought not to be enforced in equity, unless each party would have the same right, yet he felt himself bound by the authorities, which were then too well settled to be disturbed. The Courts, however, in view of the uniform construction of the Statute of Frauds, that the agreement was valid and binding upon the party by whom it was signed, and in order to work out the requisite mutuality, held that in such cases it was sufficient if the remedy was mutual. It was accordingly held from an early day that when the action for a specific performance was instituted by the party who had not signed the agreement, the act of filing the bill made the remedy mutual. (See Flight v. Bolland, 4 Russ. 298; Seaton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 265; Bowen v. Morris, 2 Taunton, 373; Ld. Ormond v. Anderson, 2 Ball & Beatty, 363; Palmer v. Scott, 1 Russ. & Mylne, 391; Martin v. Mitchell, 2 Jac. & Walk. 413; Shirley v. Shirley, 7 Blackf. 452; Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 484; 1 Sug. Vend. and Pur. 112.) There are no cases in this Court which bear directly on this question, except Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 403; but there are several in which the merits of the cause were considered, though the contract of sale was not signed by the purchaser. Such cases, though not express authority on that question, tend to show that the Court did not deem it essential that there should be a mutuality in the contract. In Cooper v. Pena, the consideration for the land to be conveyed was to be paid by the personal services of the plaintiff; and the Court rightly, and in entire accord with the authorities some of which we have above cited, held that as the Court could not specifically enforce the performance of the personal services, the remedy was not mutual. There is no exception to the rule—at least none now occurs to us—that the contract, though signed by both parties, will not be specifically executed at the instance of one party, unless performance on his part can also be compelled. The proposition that specific performance of the contract would not be decreed when the party asking its enforcement could not be compelled to perform it, was decisive of the case, and upon it the case was, in fact, decided; and in our opinion the decision is sustained by the overwhelming weight of the authorities. The exceptions which are stated in some of the cases prove the rule. A suit cannot be maintained by an infant, because he cannot be compelled to perform the contract; but if the infant commence the action after he arrives at the age of majority, specific performance will be decreed, because there is then a mutuality of remedy, and the plaintiff can be compelled to perform on his part. A sale to a married woman furnishes another illustration. She cannot maintain a suit for specific performance, because she cannot be compelled to perform the agreement on her part.

In Cooper v. Pena the objection on the part of the defendant was that there was a want of mutuality in the agreement—it having been executed only by the defendant—and the form of the objection caused the Court, in some degree, to confound the question of the mutuality of the agreement with that of the mutuality of the remedy, although the Court finally said, that in view of the want of mutuality in the remedy, it was “unnecessary to hold that the position of the parties, as to equitable relief, was determined by the want of mutuality in the beginning.” The language of the Court, so far as it intimates that it is essential to the maintenance of the action that the contract be mutual, cannot be sustained without overturning the well recognized construction of the Statute of Frauds—that the statute is fully complied with, if the agreement or the note or memorandum thereof be signed by the party to be charged, or the party by whom the sale is to be made, as provided by our statute; and without also denying the authority of the long and almost unbroken series of cases, in which the specific performance of contracts, signed by only one party, has been decreed.

THOMAS G. MOLERAN v. J. E. BENTON, J. PURRINGTON, FRANCES PURRINGTON, HIS WIFE, EGBERT JUDSON, JAMES L. KING, J. JUDSON, MRS. J. JUDSON, HIS WIFE, ROBERT B. WOODWARD, AND TERRENCE RILEY.

CERTIFICATE OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF A DEED.—If the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed of a married woman for her separate property, does not state that she was examined by the Notary without the hearing of her husband, and that she was made acquainted with the contents of the instrument, it is radically defective and does not convey any title.

POSSESSORY RIGHT IN PUEBLO LANDS.—The right or interest which a person held in the pueblo lands of San Francisco, by virtue of possession alone, prior to the passage of the Van Ness Ordinance, if not devised by him, descended to his heirs and could be distributed by the Probate Court.

ASSIGNMENT OF LEASE BY LESSOR.—An assignment made on a lease of land, of all the tenant's right, title, and interest in the premises held under the lease, is not a surrender of the lease to the person to whom the assignment is made, nor does it amount to an attornment to him, unless he has purchased the title from the lessor, but such assignment makes the assignee the tenant of the lessor.

VAN NESS ORDINANCE.—The actual possession of land in San Francisco within the boundaries of the Van Ness Ordinance, by a tenant, was the possession of the landlord, so as to entitle him to the benefits of that ordinance, and the same result followed if the tenant assigned the lease, and his assignee took possession.

Argument for Appellant.

ABANDONMENT OF LAND.—An attempted sale of land which fails, because of a defect in the deed, is not an abandonment of the land. There cannot be an abandonment to a particular person or for a consideration.

GOOD FAITH IN PURCHASE OF LAND.—When a mother and her children own land in common, a purchaser from the mother in good faith, who buys supposing he has acquired the whole title, does not acquire the title of the children. The title of the children cannot be affected by the good faith of a purchaser from the mother.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

B. S. Brooks, for Appellant.

Jacob Harmon being in the actual possession of the land in controversy, and claiming to own the same, at the time of his death, the right to the possession of the same descended to his legal representatives, the same as the legal title would have done, and passed by his will as effectually as an absolute title, as against the defendants and all the world, except the lawful owner; and even as to the lawful owner the possession passed by the will.

“The right of enjoyment of possession of public lands may descend among the effects of a deceased person to the executor or administrator, and the right of the deceased may be conveyed by regular sale to another.” (Grover v. Hawley, 5 Cal. 485; 2 Black. Com. 159; 2 Hil. on Real Prop. 155, 156; Smith ex dem. Teller v. Lorillard, 10 Johns. 355.)

By the decree of divorce Jacob Harmon and Eleonora Harmon became tenants in common of the land. (Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 493; McLeran v. Benton, 31 Cal. 29.) By the death of Harmon, Eleonora Harmon had one half of the said land, Jacob Harmon, Jr., one third, and Mary Ann Harmon one sixth.

The deed from Mrs. Foley, not being acknowledged by her as required by law, was a nullity, and, therefore, it conveyed nothing; therefore, the title to the land remained as before. (Ewald v. Corbett, ante.) The possession of Mrs. Foley was the possession of all her tenants in common. (Warring v. Cross, 11 Cal. 366.) The attornment made by Commerford to Brannan and others, being without the consent of his landlord, was void at law. (1 Hittell's Dig. 691.) The assignment made by Commerford to Brannan and others, and the entry by Brannan and his associates, placed them in the shoes of Commerford, and they became tenants of the heirs of Harmon. (1 Hittell's Dig. 690.) Harmon was not, nor were his successors in interest, trespassers upon the lands of the pueblo. The pueblo did not hold these lands in absolute fee, but in trust for those who should come to settle upon them. (Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530; Fulton v. Hanlon, 20 Cal. 450; Payne et al. v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220; Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 567; Doran v. C. P. R. R. Co., 24 Cal. 245; Houseman v. Chase, 12 Cal. 290.) Michael Commerford, the lessee of Mrs. Foley, being in possession on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1855, and up to the passage of the Van Ness Ordinance, the title of the pueblo, if it had not already passed, then passed to Harmon's legal representatives. (Hubbard v. Barry, 21 Cal. 321; Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 Cal. 11; Hubbard v. Sullivan, 18 Cal. 108.)

W. H. Patterson, for Respondents.

The legal question which counsel for appellant seeks to raise upon what he claims to be the legitimate facts, viz: "That the ancestor, Jacob Harmon, being in possession of the land in 1849-50, and up to the time of his death, was presumptively the owner of the land, and that his possessory title descends to the heir at law," is entirely foreclosed by the fact that the land was the property of the pueblo, and that subsequent to his death, on the passage of the Van Ness Ordinance, the title in fee became, and was vested in the defendants, as actual possessors and occupants. Therefore, it is unnecessary to discuss the proposition; for so soon as the evidence disclosed the fact that the legal title to the land was in the pueblo of San Francisco, the Court was called upon to declare that the possession of Harmon was a mere naked possession, and, in the absence of proof to establish that he held under some authority or consent of the city, he was to be regarded as a mere trespasser. But it is unnecessary to characterize his possession at all. It is sufficient that the land was subject to the disposition which the Van Ness Ordinance made of it. (Wolf v. Baldwin, 19 Cal. 306; Davis v. Perley, 30 Cal. 630; Borel v. Rollins, 30 Cal. 408; Wakelee v. Goodrum, 34 Cal.)

Opinion of the Court.—Rhodes, J.

W. H. Patterson and J. W. Winans, also for Appellant.

The deed of Eleonora Harmon and husband was valid, because their right to convey to Brannan and others was not affected by the Act of April 17th, 1850, respecting husband and wife, nor by the Act of April 16th, 1850, respecting conveyances, inasmuch as her separate estate in the property was acquired before the adoption of the State Constitution and laws. Her deed, therefore, to make it valid, did not require to be acknowledged in conformity with the requirements of said Acts. (Bodley v. Ferguson, 30 Cal. 511.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

This is an action of ejectment to recover the possession of lands in San Francisco, lying within the lines of the Van Ness Ordinance. It is found, among other facts, that prior to September 13th, 1849, Jacob Harmon and Eleonora, his wife, were in the actual possession, use, and occupation of a tract of land known as the Harmon tract; and that they so took and held possession thereof after coverture, and resided thereon with their family. Harmon and wife were divorced by a decree of the Court of First Instance which was rendered October, 1849, and affirmed in 1850 by the Supreme Court. By the decree it was adjudged that Eleonora was entitled to the one half of the community property; but it does not appear that a partition thereof was ever made. In November, 1850, Harmon died, leaving a last will and testament, by which he devised the undivided two thirds of the land to his son Jacob, and the remaining third to his executors in trust for his daughter Mary Ann. Soon after the divorce, Eleonora married Michael Foley, and in 1850 they entered into possession of the land; and on the 16th of August, 1852, they executed a lease of the land to Commerford, for a term to expire January 16th, 1856, describing the land as a part of the Harmon estate. Immediately after the execution of the lease, Foley and wife removed from the land, and Commerford entered and occupied, under the lease. In June, 1853, Foley and wife entered into a contract in writing with Brannan and others — under whom defendants claim title — by which Foley and wife agreed to sell and convey to Brannan and others one hundred and sixty acres of the Harmon tract; and in the same month the purchase money, six thousand dollars, was paid, and Foley and wife executed to them a deed for the land. The contract and deed will hereafter be alluded to. In December, 1853, Commerford sold and assigned his lease to Brannan and others, but he remained as the tenant of Brannan and others until October, 1854, and for the period of ten months thereafter he remained on the premises as their agent or servant. In 1854 Mrs. Foley, with her two children, Mary Ann and Jacob Harmon, removed to the County of Santa Clara, and thereafter neither she nor the children had possession of the premises. In October, 1859, Jacob died a minor and unmarried, and in November, 1859, Mrs. Foley, his mother, died. In May, 1861, Mary Ann, who before that time had married Roussel, conveyed the premises to the plaintiff. From the time when Commerford relinquished the possession of the premises, the defendants and those under whom they claim, through the deed to Brannan and others, have been in the actual occupation of the premises in controversy. The defendants had judgment. The appeal is taken from the judgment and the order denying the plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

The question of the sufficiency of the deed of Mr. and Mrs. Foley to Brannan and others was before the Court in Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 493; and it was there held that Mrs. Foley was at that time the owner of one half of the premises as her separate property, and that the deed was inoperative and void as to her, because of the defective acknowledgment. It is not certified therein that she was examined by the Notary without the hearing of her husband, nor that she was, by the Notary, made acquainted with the contents of the instrument. In each of those respects the acknowledgment is radically defective. The decision in Ewald v. Corbett is fully sustained by numerous decisions of this Court, and we are satisfied beyond a doubt of its correctness. We expressly affirm that case on this point, because the Judge of the District Court, after having excluded the deed when offered in evidence, stated when he came to the decision of the cause, that he excluded from consideration both the agreement and the deed, though he was of the opinion that the decision of that point in Ewald v. Corbett was incorrect.

The real controversy in the case, is in respect to the title accruing by virtue of the Van Ness Ordinance. The plaintiff claims that it accrued to Mrs. Foley and her two children, Mary Ann and Jacob; and the defendants claim that it accrued to Brannan and the other persons who united with him in the purchase from Mrs. Foley and her husband. Jacob Harmon was in the actual occupation of the premises in 1849. The undivided half of the premises — that is to say, the undivided half of the interest therein, which Harmon and wife held immediately preceding his death — vested in Eleonora, either by virtue of the decree of divorce, or the statute of this State providing for the distribution of the common property upon the dissolution of the community by the death of the husband; and the remaining half vested in their two children, but whether by virtue of the will of their father or the statute regulating the distribution of common property, it is unnecessary to determine. That the right and interest in the premises acquired or held by Harmon by virtue of his possession, conceding that they were the lands of the pueblo or the city, would descend to his heirs, if not devised by him, and that the same might be distributed under the statute relating to common property, is beyond all controversy. The decision on the former appeal, and in Ewald v. Corbett, would be destitute of all basis if the estate of Jacob Harmon would not descend, or could not be distributed under the statute regulating common property. The rule, in case the title was in the city or the former pueblo, is the same as when the title is in the United States; and this is so thoroughly settled in this State that it is quite useless for counsel to reopen the discussion of the question.

Mrs. Foley and her husband had the actual possession and occupation of the premises from the time of her entry, in 1850, up to their execution of the lease to Commerford in August, 1852. Whether her possession was also the actual possession of her children, is not material to the points necessarily involved in the case.

Both parties treat the lease to Commerford as valid. It is hence unnecessary to determine whether, between his entry and his assignment of the lease, he was either a trespasser or an intruder within the meaning of the Van Ness Ordinance. Up to the time of his assignment of the lease,

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

December, 1853, he was Mrs. Foley's tenant, and up to that time all her rights in the premises were fully preserved.

By the instrument executed by Commerford to Brannan and his associates, he purported to "assign, transfer, and surrender" to Brannan and his associates "all my right, title, and interest in the said premises, under and by virtue of the within lease," and he recited therein that Brannan and his associates had become the owners of the premises by purchase. The inquiry here arises — and it is the most important question in the case — as to the legal effect of that instrument. It was not a surrender, unless Brannan and others had become the landlords of Commerford. It is not pretended that they became such, except by purchase from Mrs. Foley. Her deed being invalid, and having been excluded when offered in evidence, there is nothing to show that they acquired the legal title from her. The contract of sale, which, as already stated, was excluded from consideration by the Court below, whether valid or not, under the law then in force, did not convey, or purport to convey, the title; and if it be valid, and the equitable title was acquired thereby, and by means of the payment of the sum of six thousand dollars by Brannan and others to Foley and wife, such equitable title has not been set up in the action. It requires no argument to show that a parol contract of sale, accompanied by the payment of the purchase money, does not transfer the title. For the reasons already suggested, the instrument executed by Commerford did not amount to an attornment to Brannan and others. His alleged holding under them, from the date of the instrument to October, 1854, may have made him, as between themselves, the tenant of Brannan and others; but that fact did not in any manner vary the effect of that instrument, or change the relation subsisting between Mrs. Foley on the one side and Brannan and others and Commerford on the other. That instrument, in our judgment, amounts in legal effect to an assignment of the lease. Brannan and others, therefore, became the tenants of Mrs. Foley, and so remained during the residue of the term, which expired January 16th, 1856. From the assignment of the lease to October, 1854, Commerford was the sub-tenant of Brannan and others; and for the succeeding ten months he had charge of the premises as their agent or servant.

There seems to be no question that on the 1st of January, 1855, and from thence to the 20th of June, 1855, there was the requisite actual occupation of the premises to entitle Mrs. Foley, or Brannan and others, to the benefits of the Van Ness Ordinance. Had Commerford remained in possession under the lease, without an assignment of the lease, it is beyond all question that the title, which passed under the operation of the Van Ness Ordinance, and its confirmation by the Legislature in 1858, would have vested in Mrs. Foley; and as Brannan and others, by the assignment of the lease, became the tenants in the place of Commerford, the same result ensued, as there would, had there been no assignment of the lease — that is to say, the title vested in Mrs. Foley. We do not mean to be understood as holding that the title vested in her to the exclusion of her children, but we hold that, to the extent of her interest in the premises, growing out of the possession of Harmon and herself, the decree of divorce, her subsequent possession, and the possession of her tenants, the title vested in her. We deem it unnecessary for the purposes of this case to determine whether Mary Ann and Jacob occupied such a position in respect to the premises as to entitle them to the benefits of the ordinance; because, according to the views already expressed, either Mrs. Foley took the entire title, or she took it in common with her two children; and if the latter took any portion of the title the defendants have not connected themselves with it.

Great reliance is placed by the defendants upon an intimation which was thrown out in Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 374, that the word tenant is used in the ordinance and the statute (Stats. 1858, p. 52), as meaning a conventional tenant. But without discussing that intimation or inquiring whether it was intended by the ordinance to exclude cases where the vendor remained in possession, neither by contract nor adversely to the vendee, or where a purchaser had been let into possession pending the treaty of purchase, or held possession under a contract to purchase, after having made default in payment; or where an executor, administrator, or receiver, etc., held the possession, or where the mortgagee was in possession, or other cases of that complexion, it needs only to be said here, that the assignee of the term becomes, by force of the assignment, the tenant of the landlord, and as such falls within the meaning of the word tenant, as used in the ordinance.

It is contended that the attempted sale and conveyance by Mrs. Foley to Brannan and others may be regarded as an abandonment by her of the possession of the premises. The elements of an abandonment are quite different from those of a sale; and where for any reason a transaction fails, as a sale, it cannot be converted into an abandonment. There is no such thing as an abandonment to particular persons, or for a consideration. (Stevens v. Mansfield, 11 Cal. 365; Richardson v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 343.)

It is insisted by the defendants that Brannan and others effected their purchase from Mrs. Foley, and paid the purchase money in entire good faith; and it may be admitted that they had no actual knowledge that they were not obtaining the title. But the papers which the parties executed, showed that the premises were a portion of the Harmon estate; and had there been nothing to put them on inquiry as to the title, it is apparent that Mrs. Foley had not competent power to convey the interests of her children. They, of course, cannot be affected by the utmost good faith on the part of the purchasers from their mother. Neither has the question of good faith, anything to do with their purchase, so far as the interest of Mrs. Foley is concerned, for the most perfect good faith on their part will not help out or cure the radically defective acknowledgment of her deed.

STIPULATION AS TO REFERENCE OF CAUSE.—When a case has, by the stipulation of the parties, been referred to a referee, and he reports a judgment which is entered, and the Court grants a new trial, it cannot, without a new consent of the parties, again refer the case to the same or any other referee. Upon the report of the referee, and the entry of the judgment, the stipulation ceased to have further effect.

Howe & Rosenbaum, for Respondent.

Opinion of the Court—NILES, J.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

This was an action for goods sold and delivered. By stipulation of parties the cause was referred to a referee, "to take the evidence and report a judgment." The referee subsequently reported a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount of his claim. The defendant then filed his statement, and moved for a new trial, and a new trial was granted. Upon motion of the plaintiff, and against the objection of the defendant, the cause was again referred to the same referee, to take the testimony and report a judgment. The defendant appeals from the final judgment rendered upon the second report of the referee, and assigns the last order of reference as error.

The point is well taken. Prior to the last order the referee had taken the testimony and reported a judgment. The powers conferred by the stipulation were then exhausted. When the new trial was granted the parties were restored to the position which they occupied when the issues were originally made. Either party could then demand a trial by jury, or object to a reference, which, in an action at law, can only be made by mutual consent.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

EX PARTE DELANEY.

ORDINANCE AGAINST PROFANE SWEARING.—When the charter of a municipal corporation authorizes the municipal legislative body to enact ordinances, to prohibit practices which are against good morals, or contrary to public decency, and such body determine as a fact that a particular practice, such as the uttering of profane language, is against good morals, and prohibit it by ordinance, the decision of such body on this question is final, and the Court will not review it. HOLD.—A municipal legislative body, if empowered by law to prohibit or suppress practices against good morals or public decency, may, by ordinance, punish the uttering of profane language, whether uttered frequently or only once by the same person.

OPINION AT COMMON LAW.—At common law profane swearing was not indictable, except when repeated so often and so publicly as to become an annoyance to the public, and thus a public nuisance.

APPLICATION for a writ of habeas corpus.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Samuel H. Henry, for Petitioner.

Attorney General Love, for the People.

Bishop says "public profane swearing is indictable," (1 Bishop on Criminal Law, 2d ed., Sec. 378; id. 4th ed., Sec. 946.) Yet, on consultation of the authorities cited by him, we find that the use of profane language in public is not alone sufficient.

Single acts of profane swearing are not indictable. (The State v. Jones, 9 Iredell, 38; The State v. Kirby, 1 Murphy, 254; The State v. Ellar, 1 Devereux, 267; The State v. Baldwin, 1 Dev. & Battles, 195.)

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

The petitioner was convicted in the Police Judge's Court of the City and County of San Francisco of the violation of an ordinance of the city which prohibits the utterance of profane language, words, or epithets in the hearing of two or more persons, and sentenced to pay a fine of forty dollars, and in default of payment thereof to be imprisoned in the County Jail for the period of twenty days. Having been imprisoned in pursuance of the judgment, he has sued out this writ, and alleges that his imprisonment is unlawful for the reason: First, that the Board of Supervisors was not authorized by the Legislature to pass any ordinance upon the subject; second, that profane swearing was a misdemeanor at common law, and it was not competent for the Board of Supervisors, under any authority claimed to have been given it, to reduce or in any manner change the penalty which the statute has declared upon a conviction of a common law misdemeanor.

1. The third subdivision of section one of the Act under which the ordinance was passed (Stats. 1863, p. 540), is as follows: "Third. To prohibit and suppress, or exclude from certain limits, all houses of ill-fame, prostitution, and gaming; to prohibit, and suppress, or exclude from certain limits, or regulate all occupations, houses, places, pastimes, amusements, exhibitions, and practices which are against good morals, contrary to public order and decency, or dangerous to the public safety."

The Board having acted under the statute and determined that the uttering of profane language, words, or epithets in the hearing of two or more persons is a "practice" which is against good morals, or contrary to public order and decency, we must accept its decision upon the question as final. (Ex Parte Smith and Keating, 38 Cal. 709.)

But it is claimed that the ordinance is unauthorized because it punishes a single utterance of profane words, while the word "practices," as used in the statute, necessarily implies an act often repeated by the same person. If this were so an ordinance which should punish the discharge of firearms in a crowded street of the city, or the indecent exposure of one's person, would be nugatory, unless each individual complained of was found to have frequently repeated the same offense.

It is quite evident, we think, that the Legislature intended to authorize the Board to prohibit all such acts and words as might be deemed hurtful to the good order and well-being of society, whether such acts should be performed or words uttered frequently or only once by the same person.

2. It is declared by statute that "every act or offense not defined by statute which is a misdemeanor at common law is a misdemeanor in this State." (Stats. 1866, p. 468.) And it is claimed that the offense of which the petitioner was convicted was a misdemeanor at common law.

It is not always easy to tell precisely what was and what was not a misdemeanor at common law. There is no doubt, however, that blasphemy was an offense punishable at common law (4 Black. Com. p. 59), and so it has been said was public profane swearing. (1 Bishop Crim. Law, Sec. 946.) "Blasphemy is any oral or written reproach maliciously cast upon God, His name, attributes, or religion." "It embraces the idea of detraction when used towards the Supreme Being; as 'calumny' usually carries the same idea when applied to an individual." (2 Bishop Cr. Law, Sec. 88.) Profane swearing seems only to have been indictable when the words uttered were repeated so often and so publicly as to become an annoyance to the public and thus a public nuisance.

The words charged to have been uttered by the petitioner, and for uttering which he was convicted, were not blasphemous within the definition given, nor within any definition which we have seen, nor do they appear to have been uttered under such circumstances as to constitute a case of public profane swearing. This disposes of the whole case before us.

The application is denied and the petitioner remanded.

ARRANGEMENT OF TRANSCRIPT.—The proceedings at the trial should be chronologically arranged in the transcript on appeal.

NEW TRIAL — WAIVER.—A failure to file a statement, on motion for a new trial within the time fixed by stipulation, is a waiver of the right to make the motion. The right to give notice of intention is lost when the right to move for a new trial is lost, and the right cannot be restored by an order of the Court.

APPEALABLE ORDER.—The findings and conclusions of law do not constitute an order which is the subject of an appeal.

NEW TRIAL — ORDER NOT APPEALABLE.—An order striking a notice of motion for new trial from the files ceases to be the subject of review after sixty days, and a party cannot move to vacate it and then appeal from the order denying his motion.

MOTION.—A motion to amend the decree and findings of the Court is not proper practice.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

E. A. Lawrence, for Appellants.

Elisha Cook, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The transcript of the record filed does not comply with the requirements of the sixth rule of practice of this Court. The proceedings are not chronologically arranged. The record is made up, in the main, of motions and counter motions, motions to vacate, orders already entered upon motion, and notice, etc.; and these are thrown into the transcript in a confused mass, and without the slightest attention to their respective dates. Reasonable attention upon the part of counsel, in the first instance, to perspicuity of arrangement of the record would greatly lessen the subsequent labors, both of themselves and of the Court.

1. The action having been tried before the Court without a jury, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff on the 18th day of April, 1867. On the twenty-third day of the same month the defendant gave notice of his intention to move for a new trial, and at the same time obtained from the plaintiff a stipulation allowing thirty days from that day in which to file a statement in support of the motion. No statement was filed within the stipulated thirty days, nor was any further extension obtained or sought by defendant. The result was that the right of the defendant to move for a new trial was at that point definitively waived. But on the 25th of September, 1869 — more than one year afterwards — another notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed by the defendant; and on the thirtieth day of the same month the Court, by ex parte order, allowed the defendant twenty days from that date in which to file a statement in support of the motion — which statement was subsequently, on the nineteenth day of October, and within the time limited in the order, actually filed. But the second notice of intention, and the order of the Court extending the time to file the statement, and the subsequent filing thereof by the defendant, were alike nugatory. The right to give a notice of intention was lost when the right to move for a new trial was lost, and the order of the Court could not restore it.

2. The motion to amend the decree and findings was not proper practice, and was correctly denied.

3. The appeal is taken in part from "the order filed September 15th, 1869." We have searched through the record in vain to find such an order. There is none, unless the appellant meant the findings and conclusions of law, which seem to bear date of that day. These, however, do defendants must be conducted by their respective attorneys, and the attorney for one defendant cannot give notice of motion, or accept service of notice, or stipulate for another.

WAIVER OF NOTICE OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—If a party who does not give notice of motion for a new trial files a statement, and the opposite party settles the statement, or files amendments, and the statement is settled, without reserving his right to object for want of notice, he waives the notice.

ENJOINING A JUDGMENT.—A party who recovered a judgment, and assigned it before the commencement of an action to enjoin the collection of the same, brought against him and his assignee, cannot be heard in the Supreme Court, upon alleged errors in the trial, which resulted in granting the injunction. Having no interest in the judgment, he is not injured by the injunction.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

As stated in the opinion, the main facts in this case, the character of the action, etc., are found in the report of this case in 28 Cal. 596. It is unnecessary to repeat those facts here. The preliminary injunction was there affirmed, and on the trial it was made perpetual, and this appeal is from the judgment.

On the trial in the Court below, the plaintiffs called Tully R. Wise as a witness. In a former action tried in the Twelfth District Court, in which A. K. Fisher was seeking to enforce a mortgage against the steam-tug "Mary Ann," W. R. Duff was called as a witness before said Wise, the referee in the case. Duff was first sworn on his voir dire, and the plaintiffs proposed to prove by Wise what Duff said on his voir dire.

In 1857 Fisher brought suit against the Humboldt Lumber Company and others to enforce a mortgage. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, not only enforcing the mortgage, but for execution for a deficiency, if any existed. This is the judgment referred to in the opinion when it speaks of "the offer to show," etc.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Argument for Respondents.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, and Patterson & Stow, for Appellants.

James McM. Shafter, for Respondents.

In Grant v. White, 5 Cal. 55, it was held that the attorney of record is the only person upon whom a notice can be served. The reasons are doubly strong why a stranger should not be permitted to give the notice. (Bogert v. Bancroft, 3 Caines, 127.) Notices must be signed by attorney. (Jerome v. Boeram, 1 Wend. 293.)

Notice of motion had been given by attorneys on behalf of a defendant. Plaintiffs' attorney objected to hearing the motion, on the ground that defendant had appeared by another attorney. "The notice should have been given in the name of the attorney originally retained, or a regular substitution shown. For that cause the motion is denied, with costs." (Board of Commissioners v. Younger, 29 Cal. 147.) The right of the attorney of record to control the action is declared even as against his client—the party. The only redress the party has is to move a substitution. "So long as he remains attorney of record the Court cannot recognize any other as having the management of the case." In Willson v. Cleveland, 30 Cal. 192, the same doctrine was affirmed.

The question is squarely presented. When there are several defendants carefully appearing by different attorneys, can any one of these attorneys be permitted to manage the case of all the defendants, or is such client at liberty to claim to be represented solely by his own attorney? Is the other party at liberty and allowed to treat each attorney as having full power over the whole case; to give all notices for everybody; to receive all service for everybody, and to stipulate away the rights of everybody; and this, too, when perhaps the interest of his client is identical with the plaintiff with whom he comes to a friendly agreement; or must he recognize each attorney as the only representative of the party for whom he appears?

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

A concise and accurate history of the litigation out of which this suit grows, is given in the report of Hobbs v. Duff, 28 Cal. 596, which was an appeal from the preliminary injunction, which, by the decree from which this appeal is taken, was made perpetual. On that appeal most of the questions going to the merits of this controversy were decided. It was then held that the plaintiffs were not estopped, either by the judgment in Duff v. Fisher, or by the judgment in Duff v. Hobbs, or by the judgment in Duff v. Goddard, from showing that William R. Duff was only a trustee for Ryan & Duff. It was also held that there was a sufficient consideration to support the assignment of the unsatisfied balance of the judgment of foreclosure in Fisher v. Ryan; that this action in equity could be maintained, although in the action at law on the appeal bond—Duff v. Hobbs—the defendants attempted, but failed, to set off the balance due on the judgment of foreclosure, against the demand on the appeal bond; that the proceedings in Duff v. Hobbs imparted notice to Josephi of the set-off claimed by the present plaintiffs, and that without regard to the question of notice, he took his assignment, subject to the plaintiff's right to such set-off; that if William R. Duff is a mere trustee for Ryan and J. R. Duff, he is not injured by the set-off, and that the latter are not injured, for the set-off satisfies a portion of their indebtedness. Other points were decided, about which no question is now made. The decision on the points above mentioned, became the law of the case.

Objection is taken to the depositions of Buhne et al., on the ground that no notice of their taking was shown. It was proven by oral testimony that the notice was given to the attorneys of Wm. R. Duff; and no reason is given why the proof of service may not be made in that manner as well as by affidavit. It is also shown by an affidavit that the notice was served on the attorneys for Wm. R. Duff and Josephi.

The defendants interposed objections to the larger portion of all the questions which were propounded by the plaintiffs to Buhne and others, and they now rely upon all those objections, and specify particularly a number of questions which were asked of each witness; but they do not undertake to show wherein the questions were objectionable. The statement shows that all the objections found in the depositions were presented to the Court, and were overruled. It will suffice to advert to the character of some of those questions, in classes, without taking them up in detail. Questions were asked of the witnesses to show that William R. Duff acquired the title to one of the mills and the steam-tug—portions of the property which was sold at the foreclosure sale. That was the theory of the defendant's case, and it could do them no injury to prove the fact by oral testimony. The record in Duff v. Fisher, was better evidence of such fact; but the record was introduced in evidence, and as the oral evidence did not add to, vary, or contradict the record in the respect mentioned, no injury resulted to the defendants from its admission. The testimony of those witnesses, going to show that Wm. R. Duff acquired the possession of such property and that he leased the mill to certain persons, instead of injuring the defendants rather strengthened their position, as it tended to show that he was in fact the owner of the mill. Evidence as to the pecuniary standing and ability of William R. Duff, was competent on the issue, as to whether he was in equity the owner of the property, the title to which was taken in his name. Testimony showing that Ryan and J. R. Duff, or either of them, participated in the treaty for the lease of the mill, or received portions of, or settled for the rent, or superintended matters in respect to the mill, was clearly competent, as tending to prove one of the material issues—which was that they, Ryan and Duff, were the equitable owners of the contract for the purchase of the mill, and of the judgment rendered in proceedings having their origin in that contract. The objections require no further notice.

The objection which is now made to the deposition of Ferguson, was not made when the deposition was offered in evidence; and besides this answer to the objection, it appears by the matters added to the transcript by stipulation, that a notice of the application for a commission to take the deposition was given.

The testimony of Wise was objected to on the ground that it was not the best evidence—that the record of the examination of the witness ought to be produced; but the objection was properly overruled, because the testimony of Wise referred to the testimony of the witness on his voir dire, and on the production of the record it did not show that the witness was sworn or gave any testimony on his voir dire.

The offer to show that the foreclosure suit was an amicable suit, and that it was agreed that no personal judgment should be rendered, was properly rejected. The invalidity of that feature of the judgment—the personal liability for the deficiency, after the sale of the mortgaged property—could not be proven, unless it had been alleged in the answer, and the answer contains no such allegation. If the judgment was not what it should have been, it can be reformed only in a direct proceeding brought for that purpose. Carpentier v. Oakland, 35 Cal. 439, is clear authority that it is not liable to a collateral attack on that ground.

We do not understand that the minutes of the Court in the foreclosure suit show any material fact which is not shown by the judgment roll. They were, therefore, immaterial. But if they differ in any material respect from the roll, they were not admissible to vary or contradict the roll.

There is no error in the remaining specifications.

There is a further point which is presented by the plaintiff, which is decisive of this appeal. Josephi, to whom the judgment on the appeal bond was assigned, before the commencement of this action, is the only person who is interested in that judgment. He appeared by Patterson & Stow; G. F. Sharp appeared for William R. Duff, by filing a demurrer, and he is the only defendant for whom the Messrs. Sharp appeared. The notice of motion for a new trial was given by "G. F. & W. H. Sharp, attorneys for defendants." The statement on new trial is signed by G. F. & W. H. Sharp, and Patterson & Stow. The plaintiffs' attorneys stipulated to the correctness of the statement, and in the stipulation reserved "all exceptions and objections to the right to make such statement." The notice of appeal is given on behalf of the defendants, and is signed by G. F. & W. H. Sharp and Patterson & Stow. The record does not show a substitution of attorneys for any of the defendants. The plaintiffs insist that the motion for a new trial must be limited to William R. Duff, the only defendant for whom either of the Messrs. Sharp appeared, and we are of the opinion that the point must be sustained. Where there are several defendants to an action, and each appears by his own attorney, the proceedings in the cause on behalf of the defendants must be conducted by their respective attorneys until their authority is revoked, or other attorneys substituted. The attorney for one defendant has no more authority to give a notice for another defendant than he has to accept service of notices or other papers, or enter into stipulations for him, or consent to an order or judgment against him. The settlement by the attorneys of a statement on new trial, filed on behalf of a party who had not given notice of his intention to move for a new trial, or the proposing of amendments to such statement, if the settlement was made, or the amendments were filed, without objection for the want of such notice, would amount to a waiver of the notice. In this case, however, the objection was made in the manner already mentioned, and the plaintiffs will not be deemed to have waived notice of the motion on the part of Josephi. The only defendant who can be heard on the grounds specified in the statement—they being the only grounds now relied upon—is William R. Duff (Spangel v. Dellinger, 42 Cal. 148.) He had assigned the judgment before the commencement of this action, and does not appear to be interested in the litigation, and therefore has no cause to complain of alleged errors, which might have been prejudicial to his assignee or to Josephi.

Points decided.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA
v. AUGUSTIN OLVERA, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ES-TATE OF SANTIAGO ARGUELLO, DECEASED, AND THE LANDS OF THE EX-MISSION OF SAN DIEGO.

TAXES ON ESTATES OF DECEASED PERSONS.—Taxes assessed against the property of an estate, pending administration, and while the property is in the possession and under the control of an administrator, are not claims against the estate, which must be presented to the administrator for allowance, under the provisions of sections one hundred and thirty and one hundred and thirty-one of the Probate Act. The administrator must pay such taxes, as expenses in the care and management of the estate.

SUITS TO COLLECT TAXES.—District Courts have jurisdiction of actions for collection of delinquent taxes, when the tax amounts to more than three hundred dollars, and also, regardless of amount, when it is sought to enforce the lien of the tax.

Opinion of the Court — Belcher, J.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventeenth Judicial District, County of San Diego.

The defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

J. Hartman, for Appellant.

[No brief on file.]

John L. Love, Attorney General, and W. T. McNealy, District Attorney of San Diego County, for Respondent.

Taxes assessed against the administrator of an estate are not such claims as are required to be presented. (Probate Act, Sec. 128; Deck v. Gherke, 6 Cal. 669; Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 82.)

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

This is an action for the collection of delinquent State and county taxes, assessed upon the "lands of the ex-Mission of San Diego" for the year 1869. These lands were the property of the estate of Santiago Arguello, who died intestate in 1862. In 1868 the defendant Olvera, was duly appointed administrator of the estate, and at once qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the trust. In 1869 Olvera had possession of the lands, no division of them having been made among the heirs, and they were assessed to him as the administrator of the estate.

The complaint does not allege the presentation of the claim for taxes to the administrator and its rejection by him.

The defendants demurred to the complaint, and their demurrer being overruled, failed to answer, and judgment was thereupon rendered by default.

It is objected, first, that no action for the collection of a delinquent tax can be brought against the property of an estate until it shall have been presented to the administrator as a claim against the administrator and rejected by him; and, second, that the District Court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action. Neither of these objections is well taken.

First — Whatever may be the rule when taxes are assessed during the lifetime of the decedent — and we are not called upon to express any opinion in reference to it — it is clear that taxes assessed against the property of an estate, pending administration, and while it is in the possession and under the management and control of an administrator, are not “claims” against the estate which must be presented, supported by an affidavit, and allowed or rejected, under the provisions of sections one hundred and thirty and one hundred and thirty-one of the Probate Act. The undivided property of deceased persons may be listed to administrators, and the taxes assessed are charges upon the property, which should be paid as all necessary expenses in the care, management and settlement of the estate are paid.

Second — That the District Courts have jurisdiction in actions for the collection of delinquent taxes, when the tax amounts to more than three hundred dollars, or when the object of the action is to foreclose the lien of the tax and obtain an order of sale, is declared both by the Constitution and statutes, and has been affirmed many times by this Court. (People v. Mier, 24 Cal. 61.)

In this case the tax amounts to more than one thousand dollars, and the prayer of the complaint is for a decree foreclosing the tax lien.

Section four hundred and thirty-five of the Probate Act does not purport to take away this jurisdiction. It simply requires Probate Courts to direct administrators to pay all taxes which have accrued against estates in their hands, and forbids the distribution of the property of estates among the heirs and devisees until all taxes are paid.

The judgment is affirmed.

A. GRAEBER v. M. S. DERWIN.

DAMAGES FOR INJURY TO THE PERSON.—A person injured by the fall of an awning, in process of erection in front of a store, and who sues the person who was erecting the same for damages, is not entitled to include in his damages the sum paid for his board during the time he was disabled.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Solano.

The plaintiff recovered judgment, and the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

J. G. Lawton and J. McKenna, for Appellant.

Goodwin & Gregory, for Respondent.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

This was an action for damages for personal injuries occasioned by the fall of an awning, in process of erection in front of the store of defendant.

Upon the question of the measure of damages the Court instructed the jury that if they should find for the plaintiff, "they should allow him as damages the value of his time during the period that he was disabled from following his avocations; also, should take into consideration the sums actually paid out, if any, for his board and expenses," etc.

The plaintiff was, no doubt, entitled to compensation for the value of his lost time and the expenses of his cure. These losses were the necessary consequences of the supposed negligence of the defendant. But the sum paid for his board during the time he was disabled was not an expense caused either immediately or remotely by the injury. If it had appeared that the expenses of living were increased by reason of the illness resulting from the injury, there would have been plausible ground for claiming the excess as an item of damage. But it seems that the cost of board during the period of his incapacity for labor was less than when he was in perfect health. He would receive double damages if allowed the expense for his living, in addition to the value of his time.

We see no other material errors in the rulings of the Court.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

J. W. WILBER v. C. F. SANDERSON.

DEED INTENDED AS MORTGAGE—SALE BY GRANTEE.—Where property is conveyed to another by deed absolute in form, but under agreement that it shall be only a security by way of mortgage, and the grantee subsequently sells the property as his own, the grantor may, if he so elects, affirm the sale, and sue for the overplus after the payment of the mortgage debt.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action for money had and received. The plaintiff recovered a judgment. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

E. A. Lawrence and S. W. Sanderson, for Appellant.

Burnell & Burnett, for Respondent.

[No briefs in this case were found on the files of the Court.—REPORTER.]

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

There can be no doubt that a general demurrer to the complaint, had it been interposed, must have been overruled.

Points decided.

It is alleged that the plaintiff was the owner of the lot on Jessie street, San Francisco; that he caused it to be conveyed to the defendant by deed in form absolute; but, by agreement of the parties, only as a security by way of mortgage; that defendant subsequently made sale of the property as his own, and conveyed the title to the purchaser; that the plaintiff might, if he had chosen to do so, have brought an action against Emmal, the purchaser, for the purpose of redeeming the property, and might have succeeded in compelling a reconveyance had he been able to prove that the latter knew that his grantor held the title, not absolutely, but only as security, does not show, or tend to show, that he might not, at his election, and as he has elected to do, affirm the sale, and sue for the overplus after the payment of the mortgage debt.

After an attentive consideration of the evidence, we are of opinion that the judgment ought not to be disturbed here, and that the appeal is without merit.

Judgment affirmed, with twenty per cent damages.

IDEM.—If such attorney in fact is liable, his obligation is created by the wrong he has done in procuring the money for which the note was given, by false representations, and thus committing a fraud, or perhaps the tort may be waived, and he be held as for money loaned.

LEGAL INTEREST.—One who represents himself as the attorney in fact of another, and borrows money, and gives the lender the note of such other, as his attorney in fact, if liable at all, can be held for legal interest only, on the sum borrowed.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The promissory note and mortgage in suit purport to have been executed by Juan Bautista Castro and José Francisco Castro, by Manuel Castro, their attorney in fact. Both instruments bear date August 27th, 1860, and the money therein mentioned was payable twelve months after date. The action was brought August 26th, 1865, and the first amended complaint was filed January 2d, 1869. Manuel Castro was not made a defendant at the commencement of the action, but was brought in as a defendant by the first amended complaint. In 1857, as the complaint shows, Manuel was the owner of the mortgaged premises, and during that year conveyed the same to Juan Bautista. He had no authority from Juan Bautista to make the note or execute the mortgage, but he held a power of attorney from José Francisco, authorizing him to execute the mortgage. It is alleged in the amended complaint that the money for which the note was given was loaned to Manuel for his sole use and benefit, and that at the time of the execution of the mortgage he owned the entire beneficial interest and estate in the premises, notwithstanding his conveyance of the legal title to Juan Bautista. After the execution and foreclosure of certain mortgages and the execution of certain conveyances, the legal title to the premises vested in defendant, Jeremiah Clarke; but it is alleged that he is chargeable with notice of the plaintiff's rights in the premises. The interest which accrued on the principal sum mentioned in the mortgage down to September 29th, 1860, was paid, and July 27th, 1864, the further sum of five thousand and sixty dollars was paid, and the balance remains unpaid. It is claimed by the plaintiff that the note was in truth the note of Manuel; that he borrowed the money for his own use, and that as he held the beneficial estate in the land, the mortgage is his mortgage, and that whatever interest or estate Clarke acquired in the premises, is subordinate and subject to the mortgage. Both Clarke and the Castros demurred to the complaint, on the ground that it did not state sufficient facts, and that the plaintiff's remedy was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff refusing to amend the complaint, judgment was rendered for the defendants.

As José Francisco held no interest in the mortgaged premises, and as it is not claimed that he is liable on the note, he may be dismissed from consideration; and as Juan Bautista is not liable for the money for which the note and mortgage were given, and was divested of the legal title to the mortgaged premises before the commencement of the action, the case need not be further considered as to him. Upon the question, as to whether a person who executes a promissory note for another, but has no authority so to do, is himself liable as a maker of the note, the authorities are not entirely agreed. We do not propose at this time to reopen the discussion of the question, for after the ample consideration it has received at the hands of very eminent Judges, no new light could well be shed upon it; but we are content to follow the decision in Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 568, which holds that where the note is, in terms, the note of the principal, and not that of the assumed agent, such agent is not liable on the note; but that if liable at all for the money mentioned in the note, his liability depends upon other grounds. Although the opinion, in that case, is very brief on that point, it was well considered and was rendered after a full and careful review of the authorities.

The liability of Manuel does not arise from any obligation created by the note itself, but from the wrong done in procuring the money from the plaintiff by means of his false representations as to his authority to borrow the money, give the note, and execute the mortgage for and on behalf of Juan Bautista; or perhaps the plaintiff may waive the tort, and hold Manuel responsible as for money loaned. But we need not discuss the question as to the ground of his liability, nor as to whether the plaintiff may, under the allegations of his complaint, rely upon either or both grounds for relief. It is alleged that Manuel procured the money from the plaintiff for his own use, and it is also alleged that "the interest on the principal sum mentioned in said mortgage has been paid down to the 27th day of September, 1860, and that the sum of five thousand and sixty dollars was also paid thereon July 27th, 1864, but that the balance remains wholly due and unpaid." It is not stated by whom those payments were made, but from the allegations of the complaint it is the fair, and we think, inevitable inference that they were made by Manuel.

If he is liable under the averments of the complaint, as for money loaned, the extent of his liability is the amount loaned with legal interest thereon. As he has not contracted in writing to pay a higher rate of interest, he is liable only for the legal rate; and the payments alleged in the complaint satisfy the demand.

If the complaint is to be considered as stating a case for relief on the ground of fraud—the fraud consisting of the false representations by means of which the money was obtained—and treating the defendant Clarke, and those through whom he claims, as having purchased and taken their mortgages with notice, the result would be the same, for the measure of damages would be the sum obtained, with legal interest thereon.

Judgment affirmed.

UEL MERRITT, AND WILLIAM H. MARTIN.

ESTATE CONVEYED BY GRANT.—The word grant is effectual to convey an estate in a corporeal hereditament. It has become a generic term, applicable to the transfer of all classes of real property.

VOID ORDINANCE.—If the charter of a city requires any sale or lease of the real estate of such city to be made at public auction to the highest bidder, an ordinance of the Council of the city making a lease of any portion of its realty to a corporation, upon the payment of a rent reserved, is void, and passes no title to the corporation.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Alameda County.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

Wilson & Crittenden, for Appellant.

Williams & Thornton, H. H. Havens & J. F. Havens, for Respondents.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The plaintiff, a corporation organized under the laws of this State, brought this action against the City of Oakland, alleging in its complaint that on the 26th day of October, 1867, the Council of the city passed, and on the first day of November following the Mayor approved, an ordinance, as follows:

"SECTION 1. That portion of the water front lying below high-water mark, between the easterly line of Franklin street and the westerly line of Webster street, extended, being three hundred feet in width, and running into the San Antonio Creek for a distance of three hundred and fifty feet, is hereby granted to the San Francisco and Oakland Railroad Company, during the corporate existence of said company, for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a marine railway and wharf, at the annual rent of one hundred dollars, in gold coin, for the first five years, and at the expiration thereof, and every ten years thereafter, the rent shall be fixed by three Commissioners, one to be chosen by the Council, one by said company, and the third shall be appointed by the County Judge of Alameda County; provided that the said company shall not collect tolls, or wharfage, or dockage, for the use of said wharf, without the consent of the Council of the City of Oakland; and provided further, that said marine railway and wharf shall be so constructed as not to interfere with the free navigation, nor to obstruct the channel of said creek.

"SEC. 2. Said company shall commence the construction of said improvements within three months from the date of the passage of this ordinance, and complete the same within six months thereafter; and it is made a condition of this grant that said company shall, in good faith, contest any claim made to said premises by any person under the pretended grant of the water front, made by the Board of Trustees of the late Town of Oakland to Horace W. Carpenter, and shall not, upon any terms, compromise such claim; provided, that the time herein provided for commencing and completing said improvements shall be extended for a period equal to the time said work shall be delayed by legal proceedings; and provided further, that said improvements shall be subject to the payment of city taxes as personal property of said company."

The plaintiff alleges that within three months after the passage of the ordinance it entered upon the premises therein named, and commenced the construction of the marine railway and wharf in the ordinance mentioned, and has in all respects complied with the terms and conditions of the ordinance; but that the municipal authorities of the city have employed persons to enter, and are about to enter, upon the premises, and to place structures and drive piles thereon, of such a character and in such a manner as to render the premises totally unfit for the uses of the plaintiff, secured to it under the provisions of the ordinance, etc., and prays for an injunction, etc., against the threatened acts of the city authorities. The city appeared and filed an answer, in which it, among other matters pleaded, denied the existence and validity of the ordinance set forth in the complaint. A trial being had, judgment for the defendant was rendered, from which judgment and an order denying the plaintiff a new trial this appeal is brought, and the principal question presented for determination is the validity of the ordinance relied upon by the plaintiff.

It is clear that the purport of the ordinance was to vest

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

an estate in the lands mentioned in the railroad company. "That portion of the water front, etc., is hereby granted to the San Francisco and Oakland Railroad Company," etc. That at the present day the word grant is effectual to convey an estate in a corporeal hereditament is clear, and had become so in practice long before 1845, when the statute of Victoria provided that corporeal tenements and hereditaments should be deemed to lie in grant as well as in livery. In fact, the distinction of the ancient common law in this respect had probably never obtained in this country. At all events, the word "grant has now become a generic term, applicable to the transfer of all classes of real property." (3 Washb. on Real Property, 163.) The grant here was made to the railroad company, and the estate granted was to continue "during the corporate existence of said company." The duration of the estate thus granted is not material to consider. The capacity of the corporation to take is not doubted, and whether the words used in the ordinance amount to a lease or import an estate in fee simple, or a chattel interest merely, is immaterial, for in any view the transaction would amount to a sale or lease by the Council of property belonging to the city, and would fall within the virtual prohibition contained in the fifty-first section of the Act of 1862 (p. 353), requiring any such sale or lease to be made, if at all, by public auction, and to the highest bidder.

Judgment and order affirmed.

R. E. RAIMOND v. EDWARD ELDRIDGE.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—To enable a defendant to avail himself of the Statute of Limitations, as a defense, it must appear that he was in the adverse possession of the demanded premises for the period required by the statute to bar the plaintiff's right of action.

ACT OF 1863-4 CONCERNING VAN NESS ORDINANCE.—The Act of March 4th, 1864 (Stats. 1863-4, p. 149), only prohibits a plaintiff in ejectment from relying on the Van Ness Ordinance if he commences his action more than one year after its passage, and has not been in possession within the next preceding five years. It does not prohibit him from recovering on prior possession or paper title.

MONSUIT ON OPENING STATEMENT.—A defendant moving for a nonsuit on the plaintiff's opening statement, upon a specified ground, on which ground alone the motion is granted, will not be allowed to raise the point for the first time in the Supreme Court that the statement was otherwise insufficient.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

George F. & W. H. Sharp, for Appellant.

The Court erred in nonsuiting the plaintiff, because it did not appear that the defendants were in a position to avail themselves of the benefit of the Act of 1864; before they could invoke the Act in question they must show that they were in possession at the time of its passage.

There was no evidence or proof of an adverse possession, or of any possession hostile to the plaintiff, other than the admission that defendant was in possession of the land in question at the time of the commencement of this action. Adverse possession is not presumed. (Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 505.)

The plaintiff was only called upon to state a prima facie case, and this he did when he offered to prove a right of possession in plaintiff, and a holding adverse to that right by defendant at the time of the commencement of this action. (Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220.)

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

B. S. Brooks, for Respondent.

There is nothing in the Act of March 5th, 1864, which limits its operation in favor of those who were in possession of land at the time of its passage. It applies to all actions commenced more than one year after its passage, for lands lying within the limits defined in the Van Ness Ordinance, as this was admitted to be.

We were not called upon to offer proof of adverse possession. When he admitted that he had not been in possession for more than five years before the commencement of this suit, he admitted adverse possession, to say the least. If the plaintiff had title or prior possession, which is the same thing in this view, he was in possession, unless some one was in adverse possession. Admitting himself out of possession for five years, was admitting title or adverse possession in another. It was admission of want of title or want of seizin.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

On motion of the defendant a nonsuit was granted in this case upon the plaintiff's opening statement of the facts which he expected to prove. These facts were: First—That the land in controversy was within the limits of the Van Ness Ordinance. Second—It was admitted that the plaintiff had not been in possession of the demanded premises within five years next before the commencement of the action, and that the action was not commenced within one year next after the passage of the Act of March 5th, 1864. Third—That five years had not elapsed between the time when the title of the city to this land was finally confirmed and the commencement of the action. Fourth — That the defendant was in possession when the suit was brought.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

The motion for nonsuit was made and granted solely on the ground that the plaintiff had not commenced his action within one year from and after the passage of the Act of March 4th, 1864, and had not been in the actual possession of the premises within five years before the commencement of the suit, and because his action was barred by the Act entitled "An Act to limit the time for the commencement of civil actions in certain cases," passed March 4th, 1864.

In his opening the plaintiff failed to state any title or right of possession in himself, and if the motion for nonsuit had been made on this ground, it ought to have been granted. But the defendant did not see fit to rely on this as a ground of nonsuit. If he had, the Court might have permitted the plaintiff to amend his statement and cure the defect. Having omitted to rely upon this ground of nonsuit in the Court below, he will not be allowed to raise the question for the first time here. We can only review the action of the Court on the defendant's motion as he made it; and I think the Court erred in granting the motion on the grounds stated. To enable the defendant to avail himself of the Statute of Limitations as a defense, it must have appeared that he was in the adverse possession for the period required by the statute, to bar the plaintiff's right of action. This fact was not shown or admitted to be true, but only that the defendant was in possession when the suit was brought. Nor was it any ground of nonsuit, that the action was commenced more than one year after the passage of the Act of March 4th, 1864. (Stats. 1863-4, p. 149.) The Act only provides that if the action shall be commenced more than one year after its passage, and the plaintiff shall not have been in possession within the next preceding five years, he shall not be entitled to rely upon the Van Ness Ordinance as a muniment of title. But it may be that the plaintiff had a perfect title or right of possession independent of the Van Ness Ordinance. Nothing appeared to the contrary in the plaintiff's opening statement.

CONTRACT WITHIN THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.—A verbal contract, by which the plaintiff agrees to cut and deliver to the defendant, at the defendant's mill, saw-logs sufficient to keep the defendant's mill running to its full capacity for two years from its date, is not to be performed within one year, and is therefore void under the Statute of Frauds.

RECOVERY ON VOID CONTRACT.—For labor and services performed under a contract, which is void under the Statute of Frauds, a recovery may be had by declaring a quantum meruit, but not by declaring on the contract itself.

'APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Santa Cruz County.

The complaint averred, that on the 10th day of May, 1869, the plaintiff and defendants made an agreement, by which the plaintiff was to cut saw-logs on the defendants' land and deliver at the defendants' sawmill sufficient to keep the defendants' mill running to its full capacity for the period of two years from the date of the contract, and that the defendants were to pay the plaintiff five dollars and fifty cents per thousand feet for all lumber timber so cut and delivered, to be ascertained and measured at the tail of defendants' mill, and to be so paid to plaintiff as fast as so ascertained for said two years; that under said contract the plaintiff had cut and delivered saw-logs and lumber timber to the amount of seven hundred and ninety thousand five hundred and twenty-three feet, which, at five dollars and fifty cents per thousand, amounted to four thousand three hundred and forty-seven dollars and eighty-seven cents. The answer denied the contract as alleged, and set up that it was only a contract for the milling season, from April forward seven or nine months, at five dollars per thousand feet, and set up a counterclaim.

It appeared by the testimony that the contract was a verbal one, and no note or memorandum of it was made in writing.

The plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below and the defendant appealed.

Moore, Laine & Leib, for Appellants.

The contract was void under the twelfth section of the Act concerning fraudulent conveyances and contracts.

The contract was denied, and the statute was, therefore, well pleaded. (Browne on Frauds, Sec. 511; Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 99.) Moreover, it was alleged in the answer that the only agreement ever made between the parties was verbal. And, although the question cannot arise in this case, yet we cannot refrain from adding that the rule under the common law, that the statute must be pleaded in order to be taken advantage of, cannot apply under our statute, for by our statute the contract is void, and a void contract cannot be made good by any waiver in pleading or otherwise; nor can it be even made good by an express ratification. By the common law the contract was not void, but it was insufficient to sustain an action—a difference recognized by many able opinions. (See Seale v. Emerson, 25 Cal. 294, and Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 111.)

Albert Hagan and W. M. De Witt, for Respondent.

The defense of the Statute of Frauds must be pleaded or it will not avail. (Smith v. Owen, 21 Cal. 11; McComb v. Reed, 28 Cal. 289; Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 634; Chitty on Pleading, Vol. 1, p. 559; 4 Bing. 470; Osborne v. Endicott, 6 Cal. 149; Maynard v. Johnson, 2 Nev. 16.)

Opinion of the Court — Belcher, J.

The contract is not within the Statute of Frauds. The plaintiff could, under the contract, perform his part of it in one month. (2 Kent, 713; Tolley v. Green, 2 Sand. C. 91; Moore v. Fox, 10 Johns. 244; McLees v. Hale, 10 Wend. 426; Fenton v. Emblers, 3 Burr. 1278; Russell v. Slade, 12 Conn. 455.)

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

The contract declared on was not to be performed within one year from the making thereof, and the parties having failed to reduce it to writing, or to make any note or memorandum thereof, it is within the Statute of Frauds and void.

For the labor and services performed under this void contract the plaintiff can only recover on a quantum meruit.

No such count being found in the complaint, the judgment must be reversed.

When the case is again in the Court below the plaintiff may amend his complaint if he is so advised.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT did not express an opinion.

THOMAS W. MOORE v. SAMUEL BESSE, SAMUEL
H. BESSE, AND JAMES WILSON.

FRAUDULENT SALE OF PROPERTY.—A sale of his land by a debtor, to defraud a creditor, operates as a fraud on the creditor only to the extent of the interest which the creditor would have acquired, by purchase at a sale under execution, of the land fraudulently conveyed.

SALE OF PRE-EMPTION RIGHT UNDER EXECUTION.—A judgment creditor, by a purchase at a sale under execution, of land to which the judgment debtor had only a pre-emption right, obtains no interest in the land which will enable him to procure the title under the pre-emption laws of the United States.

Argument for Respondent.

FRAUD IN THE SALE OF LAND HELD UNDER PRE-EMPTION.—If a judgment debtor sells public land, to which he has a preemption right, for the purpose of defrauding a creditor, and the purchaser then pre-empts the land, and obtains a patent therefor, the creditor cannot, by reason of the fraud, attack the patent, or the title held thereunder.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The defendants recovered judgment in the Court below, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

W. H. Patterson, for Appellant.

The interest of a party in possession and actual occupancy of land of the United States, open to settlement and pre-emption, is subject to seizure and sale under execution. (Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 136; Houseman v. Chase, 12 Cal. 290; Doran v. C. P. R. R. Co., 24 Cal. 245; Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 59.)

A fraudulent disposition of his property by a debtor, with intent to cheat his creditors, authorizes a creditor's suit after judgment, and nulla bona return of execution. (Story's Eq. Jur., Secs. 350, 351, 361.) The subsequent acquisition of the legal title by the fraudulent grantee does not protect him, though money paid for that purpose may be awarded to him out of the avails of the property on a sale. A purchaser from a fraudulent grantee, with notice of the original fraud, stands in the shoes of his grantor, and must abide all the consequences of the just claims of creditors. (Baker v. Bliss, 39 N. Y., and cases cited.)

Williams & Thornton, for Respondent.

Samuel H. Besse never owned the land. He had the mere possession, and when he parted with that nothing remained upon which an execution against him could be levied. (Montgomery v. Whiting, 40 Cal. 294.)

Opinion of the Court — NILES, J.

If, at the time of the conveyance by Samuel H. to Samuel Besse, there was a secret agreement, that the latter should perfect the title for the benefit of the former, or that the patent, when obtained, should enure to his benefit, then such agreement is an absolute nullity, so declared in all the preëmption laws of the United States; and the patentee of the Government would receive and hold the title free of such incumbrance. (Vide Act of Cong., Sept. 4th, 1841, Secs. 12, 13.)

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The defendant, Samuel H. Besse, being in possession of a portion of the public land of the United States, open to preëmption and settlement, made a conveyance of the land to his father, the defendant, Samuel Besse, without consideration, and in anticipation of a threatened suit against him by the plaintiff, and with the intent to prevent the enforcement of the plaintiff's claim. Soon thereafter the plaintiff commenced suit upon his claim in the District Court against Samuel H. Besse, and recovered judgment. Execution was issued upon this judgment, and returned nulla bona. After the conveyance to him, and prior to the date of the judgment, Samuel Besse filed his declaratory statement as a preëmptioner, and in due time received a patent for the land from the United States. Afterward, and more than two years after the docketing of plaintiff's judgment against Samuel H. Besse, Samuel Besse sold and conveyed the land for a valuable consideration, to the defendant Wilson, who had at the time of the conveyance, full notice of all the circumstances of the sale by Samuel H. Besse to his father. The plaintiff now seeks, by a bill in equity, to subject the land to the lien of his judgment.

Opinion of the Court.—NILES, J.

The conveyance from Samuel H. Besse to his father, Samuel Besse, could operate as a fraud upon the plaintiff only to the extent of the interest which the plaintiff would have acquired by purchase at a sale under his execution of the land fraudulently conveyed. This interest could be only that which Samuel H. Besse would have had at the time of the levy of execution, but for the fraudulent conveyance; for the interest of the judgment debtor at the date of the levy in all that passed by sale under execution.

Samuel H. Besse had no title whatever to the land. He had settled upon it, and was in a position to file a declaratory statement, and take other required steps to procure the title of the United States. This was a personal privilege, which he could exercise at his pleasure, but which he was not bound to exercise, either for his own or for the plaintiff's benefit. He could at any time abandon his possession, and deprive himself of his right of preëmption. He did this by his conveyance to Samuel Besse; for, although he could not transfer any right of preëmption arising from his possession so as to vest it in another, he could voluntarily extinguish that right. (Quinn v. Kenyon, 38 Cal. 502.)

It is evident that the purchaser at a sale under the plaintiff's judgment could have obtained, by means of his purchase merely, no interest in the land which would have enabled him to procure the title under the preëmption laws of the United States.

It follows that the admitted fraud in the conveyance from Samuel H. Besse to Samuel Besse could not affect the patent which Samuel Besse afterward acquired, and which the plaintiff could not have acquired by proceedings under his judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

E. HICKS AND PETER FULKERSON v. R. J. MURRAY, H. W. BRIGGS, J. M. BROWNE, A. LEWIS, AND MRS. AUZELIA LEWIS.

MECHANICS' LIEN LAW — CONSTITUTIONAL OBJECTIONS CONSIDERED.

The mechanics' lien law of 1868 is not open to the objection that it is unconstitutional on the ground that it attempts to appoint agents for private persons, nor that it confiscates property, nor as to the notice required of owners as to responsibility for improvements, nor that it attempts to take away vested rights or to clothe private persons with power to divest citizens of their property.

MECHANICS' LIEN.—If the person who claims a mechanics' lien under the Act of 1868, signs the verification attached to the claim, this is a sufficient signing of the claim within the intent of the Act.

SAME — NAME OF OWNER TO BE STATED.—Under the mechanics' lien law of 1868, it is material that the claim for the benefit of the lien shall state the name of the owner or reputed owner of the premises.

SAME — PLEADING — ALLEGATION AS TO OWNERSHIP.—An allegation in the complaint, that in his claim filed under the mechanics' lien law, the plaintiff described the premises as those purchased and occupied by M., is not a sufficient averment of the ownership of M., because it is not an averment in the complaint that M. owned the property, but an averment that the plaintiff has stated in his claim that M. owned the property, and does not aver who owned the premises at the commencement of the action.

ESSENTIAL FACTS TO BE ALLEGED.—Unless the facts essential to the support of the case be alleged in the pleadings, evidence upon such omitted facts cannot be heard or considered.

IDEM.—Evidence of facts, or stipulations as to the facts of a case, cannot make a case broader than it appears by the allegations of the pleadings, nor do they entitle a party to any relief beyond what the averments entitle him to.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

This was an action to enforce a mechanics' lien upon premises of which defendant Murray was in possession under a contract of purchase made with defendants A. Lewis and Auzelia Lewis, his wife. The defendants Lewis held a mortgage upon the premises, dated February 10th, 1870, and had given a quitclaim conveyance of the same date to Murray.

Argument for Appellants.

The defendant Browne, in his answer, set up, by way of cross-complaint, a claim against defendant Murray, and asked to have a lien in his own favor, filed April 30th, 1870, enforced. He averred that in his claim he had described the premises as follows: "The two-story frame or wooden dwelling house or building, divided into eleven rooms, with eighteen doors and eighteen windows, erected upon the lots or lands heretofore named, and here more particularly described as the land purchased by said R. J. Murray of Mrs. A. Lewis, and situated at the junction of Lewis and Railroad streets, in the said Town of Gilroy, and on the east side of said Railroad street, and running sixty-four feet along the same, one hundred and forty feet along the south side of said Lewis street; said building and premises being the same now occupied by the said Murray and his family;" and that the premises are the same as described in the plaintiff's complaint.

Judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs and for the defendants Browne, Briggs, A. Lewis, and Auzelia Lewis — the liens under the mechanics' lien law to have precedence to the mortgage lien of the defendants Lewis. The defendants Lewis appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Moore, Laine & Leib, for Appellants.

1. The statute upon which the liens in this case are based is unconstitutional. The first section of the Act in question provides that a party shall be charged for work done and materials furnished to himself or agent, and that the one having the work in charge shall be held to be the agent of the owner. We submit that it is not in the power of the Legislature to say that any one shall be held to be the agent of another without contract or agreement. The matter of appointing agents is not left to the Legislature. The law-making power may define who may be agents, or who may be authorized to select an agent, and the mode of selection or appointment, viz: it may prescribe rules or laws in that behalf, but it cannot do the appointing itself. In this case, neither Lewis nor Mrs. Lewis authorized or directed any one to construct this house upon the premises mortgaged to them, and these parties, in reason and justice, could not lessen the value of their security by placing such building there. Yet under this law, appointing and creating an agent for Lewis and wife, their security is lessened, viz: the decree not only operates upon the house, materials, etc., but authorizes and directs a sale of the land itself, and this upon the theory of the agency created by the statute. We submit that the Legislature usurped this power, and the statute is void.

The third section of the Act amounts to a confiscation of property, and that without crime or a hearing. It provides that if A. has a valid mortgage lien on "Black Acre," upon which stands a house worth five hundred dollars, that "B.," the owner of the land, may direct improvements to be made upon the house to the extent of one thousand dollars, and that the party expending this one thousand dollars in repairs shall be preferred in his lien to the mortgage lien of "A.;" in other words, that "A.," without his approbation, knowledge, or consent, can be improved out of his lien. The five hundred dollar house was all there was of any value in the premises to secure "A.'s" mortgage; yet, by this unauthorized repair of one thousand dollars, the whole thing can be sold for the payment of the one thousand dollar improvement, it becomes a preferred claim, and "A." has nothing left but the naked and valueless land; the house as improved is moved off to satisfy the new lien. This, we contend, is beyond legislative power.

The fourth section is, if possible, worse than the ones we have already noticed. By that section a party must, within three days after it comes to his knowledge that some one is improving him out of his property or security, give notice that he will not be responsible, by posting a written notice on the land or on the improvement, and if he does not so do, he is held to have authorized the improvement, etc., and be bound by the lien. This section is unbending, and makes no provision for a party having such a matter at a place and time so as to render it impossible that he could give such notice in three days. Suppose a man owns and has a mortgage lien on property at some point in the extreme northern portion of the State, and when he is absent at San Diego he hears that some one is improving him out of it, he cannot, by any possibility, give the notice in the three days, and must lose his property. Certainly this cannot be upheld; the time is unreasonably short. (See Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, p. 366, Note 3, where a kindred matter is considered.) If this falls, the whole statute must fall, under the authority of Lathrop v. Mills, 19 Cal. 530.

Again, a mortgage lien having vested prior to the improvement of a building or the like on the mortgaged premises, it is not in the power of the Legislature to compel the mortgagee to commence proceedings, either by notice or suit, before he is required by law to foreclose his lien. He has a vested interest, which the Legislature cannot thus divest. (Cooley, supra, p. 366.) This lien law undertakes to give material men, mechanics, and artisans, the power of public officers to divest citizens of their property and securities without their knowledge or consent. This, we submit, is beyond the power of the Legislature. (Cooley, supra, p. 563, and Note 1.)

2. Browne's pleading is fatally defective, in not stating that this lien contained the name of the owner, or reputed owner of the premises. He attempted, in his cross-complaint, wherein he seeks to foreclose such lien, to declare on this lien, without attaching it to the cross-complaint, or setting it out in hæc verba. He must, therefore, have stated the necessary facts which such lien must contain to be valid. But he omits to state that the claim or lien upon which he was attempting to declare, contained or stated the name of the owner, or reputed owner of the premises. (F. F. Ins. Co., 34 Cal. 60; Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 382; 20 Barb. 468; 7 Wheat. 522.)

Argument for Respondents.

Zuck & Hoover, for Respondents.

The objection to plaintiffs' lien made by appellants, that the claim is for a sum in gross, and does not specify the amount claimed for work and the amount claimed for materials, has unfortunately for them, been already passed upon and decided adversely to them by this Court. (Heston v. Martin, 11 Cal. 41; Brennan v. Swasey, 16 Cal. 141; Selden v. Meeks, 17 Cal. 128; Davis v. Livingston, 29 Cal. 283.) And it needs no argument on our part to sustain the justice and reason of those decisions. Plaintiffs' claim is not for one sum for work and another for materials, but for one amount for the whole job.

The next objection to plaintiffs' lien, that it is not signed, is equally unfortunate. By a parity of reasoning, appellants might claim that a simple statement of account would be invalid because the person rendering it failed to sign the balance sheet. The law nowhere requires the claimant to sign the statement of his demand. Section five of the Act prescribes minutely everything the statement shall contain, and it nowhere requires it to be signed, but in any event the verification is a part of the instrument and is signed by plaintiffs and that is all the signature the law requires. The only good a signature would do would be to attest the genuineness of the instrument; the law requires a higher test—the oath of the parties to its correctness.

It is also contended by appellants that Browne's pleading is fatally defective in not averring that the lien contained the name of the owner or reputed owner of the premises.

The statute requires the name of the "owner or reputed owner to be stated if known" (Sec. 5). Of course, if the name of the owner was not known it would be impossible to state it in the lien, and it would be absurd to aver that it was so stated. Hence, such an averment is not necessary to state a complete cause of action in declaring on a lien; but if it was an omission, it was merely one of form and not a substantial one, the allegations of the pleading being sufficient to sustain a judgment; and appellants have waived any advantage they might have taken of it by failing to demur.

We are at a loss to see, and appellants have not informed us in their brief, what clause of the Constitution has been violated in letter or in spirit by the provisions of the law they complain of. We certainly insist that it is entirely within the scope of the power of the Legislature to say what shall constitute an agency, and what acts may constitute one man an agent for another.

We deny that the third section of the Act amounts to confiscation of property. In the case cited by appellants, "A." has a complete means afforded by which to avoid the dire disaster with which they would have him overwhelmed. The law provides that by serving a notice on the building that he will not be responsible for the improvement, he can relieve himself and his interest therein from any liability on account of lien.

In reply to their objection to the fourth section, we would suggest that the Legislature is the proper judge of the length of time within which a notice should be given to enable a person interested in the premises to divest his interest therein from responsibility.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

First — Upon a careful consideration of the Act of March 30th, 1868, securing a lien to mechanics and others, in connection with the facts of this case, we are of the opinion that the objections made in argument, as to the constitutionality of the Act, cannot be maintained.

Second — The objection that the claim of Browne is not signed by him cannot be supported. His signature to the verification attached thereto is a sufficient signing of the claim within the intent of the Act.

Third — But we think that the amended answer and cross complaint of Browne is radically defective and insufficient to support the judgment he obtained. The statute (section five) requires that the claim for the benefit of the lien shall state, among other matters, the name of the owner or reputed owner of the premises, if known. The statement of the name of the owner or reputed owner is material — not less so than the statement of the amount of the demand after the deduction of just credits and offsets — the statute requires both and makes them equally indispensable. The pleading of Browne wholly omits to aver that his claim as filed contains the required statement upon the point of ownership. The averment, even had there been such, that the premises are those purchased by Murray of Mrs. Lewis, and are the same premises occupied by him, is not in substance an allegation upon the point of ownership or reputed ownership. But there is no such averment in the answer and cross complaint of Browne. The only allegation found there in this respect is an allegation that in his claim as filed he described the premises as those so purchased and occupied by Murray. Upon general demurrer this must have been held insufficient as a substantial allegation of ownership, or reputed ownership, of the premises at the time of the commencement of the action. It is true that we can see that the statement itself is not defective in the particular of ownership — but this will not aid the pleading upon the point. By the tenth section of the Act the pleadings in such cases as this are required to be the same as in other cases. It has so often been determined that unless the facts essential to the support of the case be alleged upon the record, evidence upon such omitted facts cannot be heard or considered, that a citation of authority upon the point is unnecessary. Evidence of facts, or stipulations as to the facts of a case, cannot make the case broader than it appears by allegation, nor can a party by mere force of facts admitted or proven become entitled to relief to which he would not have been entitled had his case been resisted only by general demurrer interposed to the pleadings upon which he relies.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

CROCKETT, J., dissenting, in part:

The claims or statements filed in the Recorder's office by the material men and laborers, for the purpose of securing their liens, were substantially in compliance with the statute. When materials are furnished and labor performed under one contract for a gross sum, it is not only unnecessary but would be impossible to specify in the statement or notice of lien how much of the sum due accrued for materials furnished, and how much for labor performed. The contract being that the whole were to be paid for by a gross sum it is unnecessary to apportion the amount between the two. (Heston v. Martin, 11 Cal. 41; Brennan v. Swasey, 16 Cal. 141; Selden v. Meeks, 17 Cal. 128; Davis v. Livingston, 29 Cal. 283.) Nor is it necessary that the statement should be signed by the claimant, provided it appears in the body of the statement who the claimant is and by whom the materials were furnished or the labor performed; and provided, also, the statement is verified by the claimant. These would sufficiently identify the claimant and authenticate the statement without the actual signature of the claimant to the body of the statement. No useful purpose could be subserved by his signature to the body of the statement which he verifies with his oath. Nor is it essential that it should appear on the face of the statement in express terms that the materials furnished were actually used in the construction of the building. The language of the first section of the statute is that any person "furnishing materials of any kind to be used in the construction, alteration," etc., "of any building," etc., shall have a lien thereon; and the fifth section prescribes the method by which the lien is to be secured. It requires the person claiming the lien "to file with the County Recorder of the county in which such building or other improvement, or some part thereof, shall be situated, a claim containing a true statement of his demand, after deducting all just credits and offsets, with the name of the owner or reputed owner, if known, and also the name of the person by whom he was employed or to whom he furnished the materials, and also a description of the property to be charged with said lien sufficient for identification, which claim shall be verified by the oath of himself or of some other person. (Stats. 1867-8, p. 589.) In Davis v. Livingston, 29 Cal. 283, a similar question arose under the Act of 1862, and it was held that the notice from the material man to the owner need not specify that the materials furnished were actually used in the building. The statute we are considering does not require that the statement shall aver in terms that the materials furnished were actually used in the building. But if it did, I think it sufficiently appears from the verified statement of the defendant Browne that the lumber furnished by him was in fact used in the building. It appears on the face of the statement that he commenced to furnish the lumber in November,

Opinion of Crockett, J., dissenting, in part.

Opinion of Crockett, J., dissenting, in part.

1869, and that the greater portion thereof was furnished before the 10th day of March, 1870, on which day the owner of the building entered into a written contract to pay Browne for all the lumber furnished by him for the building within six months from the 10th day of February, 1870. I think the inference is irresistible that the lumber furnished by Browne was actually used in the building. It is claimed, however, on behalf of the appellants, that the averments in Browne's cross-complaint are so defective, in substance, as not to support the judgment in his favor. The alleged defect consists in the omission to aver in the pleadings that his statement filed in the Recorder's office set forth the name of the owner of the building or land. The agreed statement of facts on which the action was tried, shows that the verified statement was not defective in this particular; and, if the pleading was not as full and explicit as it might, and perhaps should have been, in setting forth the contents of the verified statement in this respect, it is too late, after judgment, to raise this point for the first time in this Court.

The averments of the cross-complaint in respect to the contents of the verified statement filed by Browne are, that it contained "a true statement of his demand against said defendant Murray, after deducting all credits and offsets, with a correct description of the premises to be charged; which said description is as follows, to wit: the two-story frame or wooden dwelling house or building, divided into eleven rooms, with eighteen doors and eighteen windows, erected upon the lots or lands heretofore named, and here more particularly described as the land purchased by said R. J. Murray of Mrs. A. Lewis, and situated at the junction of Lewis and Railroad streets, in said town of Gilroy, and on the east side of said Railroad street, and running sixty-four feet along the same, one hundred and forty feet along the south side of said Lewis street; said building and premises being the same now occupied by the said Murray and his family." The cross-complaint, it is true, contains no direct averment that the verified statement set forth the name of Murray as the owner, or reputed owner, or that the owner was unknown; nevertheless, it sets forth the description of the premises as contained in the verified statement in which the lot is described "as the land purchased by said R. J. Murray of Mrs. A. Lewis," and it further shows that "the said building and premises" are "the same now occupied by the said Murray and his family."

Opinion of Crockett, J., dissenting, in part.

The statute prescribes no formula for the verified statement; but simply directs that it shall contain "a true statement of his demand, after deducting all just credits and offsets, with the name of the owner or reputed owner, if known, and also the name of the person by whom he was employed or to whom he furnished the materials, and also a description of the property to be charged with said lien sufficient for identification."

The verified statement, as described in the cross-complaint, sets forth that the lot is the same purchased by him of Mrs. Lewis, and the natural inference is that Murray continued to be the owner; and more particularly when this is coupled with the further fact that Murray caused the building to be erected, and on its completion occupied it with his family, all of which facts appeared from the verified statement as described in the cross-complaint.

If the pleading was defective in the particular referred to, it was defective in form only and not in substance. Such defects can be reached by special demurrer only, and the objection to such a pleading cannot be raised for the first time in this Court. I am, therefore, of opinion that the cross-complaint is sufficient to support the judgment.

We are also urged to hold the Act of March 30th, 1868, securing a lien to mechanics and others, to be unconstitutional in several of its provisions; but after a careful consideration of the argument of counsel, I see no reason to doubt the constitutionality of the statute in the particulars which are specified; and even though I entertained a grave doubt on the subject, this would not justify me in holding the Act to be void. Statutes are set aside by the Court as unconstitutional only in clear cases, where there is no room for reasonable doubt.

Statement of Facts.

I am of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed.

ABANDONMENT.—An estoppel in pais does not constitute an element in abandonment, nor is it one of the circumstances from which an abandonment may be found.

ESTOPPEL IN PAIS.—A party cannot be estopped by matters in pais, unless at the time the estoppel was worked he held the title.

EVIDENCE OF A PARTY TO AN ACTION.—Before a party in interest can be prevented from testifying to matters which occurred prior to the death of another, on the ground that the opposite party claims under or is the representative of such deceased person, it must be shown clearly that the opposite party occupies such position.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Eleventh Judicial District, El Dorado County.

This was an action of ejectment brought to recover a part of a water ditch. In 1857 John Curran and others constructed a ditch from the falls of the Gold Hill Canal to a mining claim called the "Curran Claim." In 1860-61 Curran, with the assent of the other owners, sold the ditch and claim to defendant Bradford, and one Wm. T. Davis, who died in September, 1868. In 1862 one Charles Aler discovered a mining claim on Starr Hill. He made a verbal agreement with Davis that Davis should give him one half the ditch for one half the claim. Afterwards, in 1863, Davis and Aler agreed to sell one Bingham a fourth interest of ditch and claim. The claim on Starr Hill was not on the line of the ditch, and in order to get water to the claim it was necessary to construct a flume from the ditch to Starr Hill. This flume was constructed by Davis, Aler, and Bingham, from a point on the ditch at Tinnie's Vineyard; and it is only that portion of the ditch, extending from the falls in the Gold Hill Canal to Tinnie's Vineyard that is in controversy in this action. All that portion of the ditch extending from Tinnie's Vineyard to the Curran Claim is not mentioned in the complaint. The ditch was used up to 1865 by Davis and Bingham, taking out water at Tinnie's Vineyard, and the defendants, taking it at Curran Claim; on the 23d of August, 1867, Davis and Bingham executed a deed to Tie Hoon and Ah Sing of the claim on Starr or Cement Hill; after describing the claim, the deed contains this clause: "embracing a cabin, and all ditches, races, and flumes, etc., now on and used for the working of said claim, including about one mile of flume for the purpose of bringing water to said claim." This one mile of flume was the means used for bringing water from the "Curran Ditch."

Statement of Facts.

On the first of July, 1868, Ah Young and Ah Gee deeded the same property to the plaintiffs, and upon this deed the plaintiffs base their right of action.

Defendant Cockbill, in his answer, alleged that in May, 1865, he purchased said Davis' undivided half of the ditch, in consideration of three hundred dollars, and paid the price, and was placed in possession, and made improvements on the ditch, and had since remained in possession; that Davis promised to make him a deed, but failed to do so, and that the plaintiffs bought, well knowing that he was in possession under a claim of right. He asked that the plaintiffs be compelled to convey to him.

On the trial the defendant Bradford was called as a witness by the attorney for the defendants, and was asked several questions in relation to who had possession of the ditch and used it prior to Davis' death. The plaintiffs objected to any evidence on these points being given by Bradford, because they claimed title under Davis. The Court sustained the objection. It did not appear on the trial that Bradford had ever sold his interest in the ditch, and as Davis and Bingham's deed to the Chinamen was a conveyance of the entire property, the plaintiff insisted that his failure at the time to object to Davis's sale, either estopped him or amounted to an abandonment.

The plaintiffs had judgment and the defendants appealed. The other facts are stated in the opinion.

George H. Williams, for Appellants.

Bradford has never sold his interest, and it is that interest which he claims in this action.

The Court must have concluded that the evidence was not strong enough to sustain an estoppel in pais, or an abandonment, and therefore in its instruction it mixes the two. This instruction contains a new definition of abandonment. (See Richardson v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 345.) The instruction does not correctly define an estoppel in pais. (Davis v. Davis, 24 Cal. 40.)

Geo. G. Blanchard, Chas. F. Irwin, and Geo. H. Ingham, for Respondents.

The instruction was correct, whether applied to abandonment or estoppel. Bradford relied on prior possession, and an abandonment may be inferred from acts of omission as well as commission. (Davis v. Perley, 30 Cal. 637.) The instruction as to estoppel gives the correct rule. (Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23.)

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The second instruction given to the jury at the plaintiff's request is as follows: "Should the jury find from the testimony that Bradford ever had any interest or title in the property, they may take into consideration whether he had divested himself of such title, either by abandonment or otherwise. The question of abandonment is one of intention, of which the jury are the exclusive judges; and in order to determine such intention, they must take into consideration all the facts and circumstances before them; and if they find that Bradford stood by and saw Davis make a sale of the ditch to plaintiffs or their grantors, and made no objection or asserted any title in himself, he is bound by the sale." The instruction is, in our opinion, objectionable. It mingles together, in such manner as to mislead the jury, two legal propositions which are quite distinct and proceed on different principles — abandonment and estoppel in pais. It appears to treat an estoppel in pais as constituting an element of abandonment, or as one of the circumstances from which it might be found by the jury. But a party cannot be held as estopped by matters in pais, to assert title, unless at the time when it is claimed the estoppel was worked, he held the title. If he then held such title, it cannot at the same time be claimed that he lost it by abandonment.

The testimony of defendant, Bradford, as to matters which transpired before the death of Davis, was objected to by the plaintiff on the ground that they are the representatives of Davis within the meaning of section three hundred and ninety-three of the Practice Act. They claim title, as we understand the case, through two deeds: The deed of Davis and Bingham to Tie Hoon and Ah Sing, and the deed of Ah Young and Ah Gee to plaintiff, Marquart. The testimony is not sufficient to show that the grantees in the first, and the grantors in the second deed are the same persons. It not appearing that the plaintiffs were the representatives of Davis within the construction of that section, as given in Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, the objection to the testimony should have been overruled.

Judgment and order reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

The prisoners, George and Lewis Brotherton, were convicted of the crime of forgery, and their motion for a new trial being denied they appeal from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial.

In impaneling the trial jury, one Butler was called and

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

examined as to his competency to sit as a juror. He stated, in answer to questions propounded by counsel for the prisoners, that he had read a newspaper account of a previous trial of the prisoners upon the same indictment; that he formed an opinion at the time that the prisoners were guilty; that he had expressed that opinion, and that he had not heard or read anything since then to change it. In his examination by the counsel for the prosecution, he stated that his opinion was formed not only from reading the newspapers, but also from conversations he had had with different parties, though these persons knew nothing more than what they had learned from general public rumor. Upon being examined by the counsel for the prisoners, he again stated that he had expressed his opinion. The counsel for the prisoners then challenged Butler for implied bias: First, because he had formed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt of the prisoners; second, because he had expressed that opinion. The challenge was overruled by the Court, and Butler was thereupon peremptorily challenged by the prisoners, whose peremptory challenges were exhausted before the jury was completed. It is too late, in this Court at least, to argue, as has been attempted by counsel for the prosecution, that the unqualified expression of an opinion, even though the opinion itself be of a qualified character, is not ground of challenge for implied bias. This position was distinctly taken and as distinctly overruled here fifteen years ago, in People v. Cottle, 6 Cal. 227, and the doctrine of that case has ever since then been approved; and in The People v. Edwards, 41 Cal. 640, referring to the case of People v. Cottle, supra, we used this language: "The statute declares that the unqualified expression of an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner is ground of challenge for implied bias. When such challenge is interposed, it is no answer to say that in the mind or thought of the party the opinion was qualified, if in the form of expression it was unqualified."

In People v. Cottle, 6 Cal. 228, one of the jurors, on his examination as to his competency, said that he had not formed or expressed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant; that he had formed a qualified opinion, founded upon report merely, which opinion he had expressed, but that in expressing it he had not expressed any qualification. In that case Mr. Chief Justice MURRAY said: "It is argued by the Attorney General that there is a difference between expressing an unqualified opinion and the unqualified expression of an opinion, and so there is, if we resort to a verbal criticism, or mere metaphysical disquisition. It was not the intention of the Legislature to leave the rights of parties to rest upon so narrow and dangerous a foundation. Their obvious intention was to exclude from the jury-box every one who had either formed an unqualified opinion, or having formed an opinion, had expressed it without qualification." We are referred to the Act of March 30th, 1868 (Acts of 1867-8, p. 704), as prescribing a new rule on this subject; but upon careful reading of that Act it will be found that it refers to the state of mind of the juror alone, and does not touch the question of the effect produced upon his competency by his unqualified expression of an opinion. Under the rule established by the uniform and repeated decisions of this Court upon the point, we are constrained to hold that the overruling of the challenge made against Butler was an error entitling the prisoners to a new trial. It is proper, in this connection, to say that in no cases coming before this Court is there found to be more practical difficulty than in those involving questions of the mere state of mind of a juror upon a challenge for implied bias by reason of an opinion entertained as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. If the opinion, as formed, be qualified, then he is competent as against such a challenge; but if unqualified, then he is incompetent. Experience, however, shows that in the majority of instances, even the most intelligent class of jurors are unable to distinguish the one from the other, for it is seen that when questioned by Court or counsel they often readily adopt the views suggested at the moment by either, rendering it difficult, if not impossible, for the trial Court to determine whether the challenge should be allowed or overruled. An inquiry made as to the state of the mind of a person upon a given point or a question as to whether the mind is merely impressed, and to what degree impressed, with the truth or falsity of a given proposition—whether an opinion upon the question has been formed at all, and if formed, whether that opinion is qualified in its character or is fixed and determinate. All these are, in themselves, inquiries of a highly metaphysical character, and when embarrassed, as they usually are, by a want of precision in the answers of the party inquired of, are frequently impossible of exact solution. Under such circumstances, and when after proper investigation had, doubts, more or less grave in their character, as to the actual state of mind of the juror still remain, it is better that the challenge, if insisted upon, be allowed, for by that course injustice can rarely be done the prisoner; and even should there be a technical error committed in allowing the challenge, a new trial will not for that reason alone be directed.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Neither Mr. Justice RHODES nor Mr. Justice CHOCKETT participated in this decision.

Argument for Appellant.

[No. 3,129.]

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
E. W. MORSE, AND CERTAIN REAL ESTATE AND IMPROVEMENTS.

INTEREST TAX FUND OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY.—The "Interest Tax Fund" mentioned in the Act of March 18th, 1868, "to provide for the government of the County of San Diego," was intended to take the place of the "Interest tax," required to be levied by the Act of May 4th, 1855, "to fund the debt of said county and provide for the payment of the same," and was also intended to pay the interest on the old bonds of the county in case the holders should not choose to accept the terms of payment offered by the said Act of 1868.

COUNTY INDEBTEDNESS.—The Legislature cannot require the creditors of a county to surrender their evidences of indebtedness, and accept new ones different in terms from the old, but it may refuse to provide funds to pay any portion of the old indebtedness, unless the creditors will accept new evidences in place of the old, and for a less sum.

IDEM.—There is no constitutional objection to a law which provides a county fund, out of which the holders of county indebtedness can obtain fifty per cent of the nominal value of their demands, whenever they may choose to accept of that sum.

DUTY OF ASSESSORS.—An Assessor may assess and place a valuation on a block in a city, as a whole, when one man owns it, without placing a separate valuation on the several lots into which it is divided.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventeenth Judicial District, San Diego County.

The plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

John L. Love, Attorney General, and W. McNealy, District Attorney of San Diego County, for Appellant.

Statutes must be construed, if possible, so as to give effect to each of their provisions, and even where an unconstitutional provision is in the nature of a condition to the main purpose of the law, its invalidity will not necessarily invalidate the whole law, if the remaining provisions are sufficient to effect that main purpose. (Robinson v. Bidwell, 22 Cal.

Argument for Respondents.

394; French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 539.) Stripping the act in question of that part which declares that none of the unfunded indebtedness shall be a legal and valid claim against the county, unless allowed by the Board of Commissioners created by the Act, and which attempts to force the holders of this indebtedness to submit it to the Board, which has been held to be unconstitutional in the case of Rose v. Estudillo, 39 Cal., and giving such a construction to the balance of the Act in order, if possible, to give effect to all its other provisions. The Act would then provide that this Board should examine into all such claims as should be voluntarily submitted to them by parties who desired to avail themselves of the Act, and to allow such as they found to be just, and to draw warrants therefor, which are to be payable out of the Floating Debt Redemption Fund in question.

After these claims had been so funded they became, according to the decision in Rose v. Estudillo, 39 Cal. 270, conclusive evidence of being just and legal within the meaning of the act, and could certainly be paid according to its terms.

This in itself is merely a matter of legislative policy, and is certainly not subject to review by the Courts. While that portion of the Act which attempts to force the creditors to accept these terms is unconstitutional, still, when it is left optional with them to accept or not, it is no longer a law impairing the obligation of contracts.

Levi Chase, for Respondents.

The object of the law having ceased to exist, the law must cease to operate. The Legislature cannot declare the legal debts of a county invalid or authorize a commission to do so. The object of the law was to compel the holders of scrip and other evidences of county indebtedness to deliver them up and take therefor what a Board of Commissioners might determine on. The sections containing such provisions are so blended with the others that they cannot be separated, and must all stand or fall together. (French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 546; Lathrop v. Mills, 19 Cal. 529.)

The assessment of an entire block was illegal. (Revenue Act of 1861, Sec. 20; Blackwell on Tax Titles, 146-148; Terrill v. Groves, 18 Cal. 151; People v. S. F. Savings Union, 31 Cal. 137; Levitsky v. Johnson, 35 Cal. 41; People v. Pearis, 37 Cal. 262.)

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

This is an action for the collection of delinquent taxes for the year 1871.

By the Act of the 18th of March, 1868, to provide for the government of the County of San Diego, the Board of Supervisors was required on the first Monday of April in each year to levy an annual tax of two dollars on every one hundred dollars valuation of real and personal property within the county, "which shall be collected in the manner prescribed by law, and when paid into the County Treasury shall be distributed as follows: * * * Seventeen and one half per cent into an Interest Tax Fund to be used in the payment of the interest on the funded debt of the county; * * * seventeen and one half per cent into a Floating Debt Redemption Fund, to be used in the payment of the unfunded indebtedness of the county outstanding on the 1st day of April, A. D. 1868; and twelve and one half per cent into a Funded Debt Redemption Fund, which shall be used for the redemption of the funded debt of the county in the manner in this Act provided."

By the same Act a Board of Commissioners was appointed whose duty it was to carefully examine into the legality or illegality of all the unfunded indebtedness of the county which might remain outstanding on the 1st day of April, 1868, and to allow or reject, in whole or in part any or all of such indebtedness, as might appear in the judgment of the Board a legal and just claim against the county or otherwise. Upon the allowance of any such indebtedness the Board was directed to issue to the rightful owner and holder thereof a warrant for the amount found to be a legal and just claim against the county, which was made payable without interest, in the manner, and out of the Floating Debt Redemption Fund, provided for in the Act.

It was also provided that whenever the Floating Debt Redemption Fund should contain the sum of two hundred dollars or more, and whenever the Funded Debt Redemption Fund should contain the sum of five hundred dollars or more, the County Treasurer should give notice that he would at a time named receive sealed bids for the surrender of warrants drawn by the Board of Commissioners, and to be paid out of the first named Fund, and of county bonds which were to be paid out of the last named Fund; that at the time named he should, in public and in the presence of the President of the Board of Supervisors, open the proposals and accept the lowest bid or bids for the surrender of such warrants or bonds, provided that no bid for the surrender of warrants should be accepted for more than thirty-five cents upon the dollar, and no bid for the surrender of bonds should be accepted for more than fifty cents upon the dollar of the face value thereof, exclusive of interest.

It was provided that the Treasurer should pay out no moneys placed in these Funds except in the manner and for the purposes named in the Act. At the trial in the Court below it was admitted that a county tax of two dollars upon every one hundred dollars valuation of real and personal property within the County of San Diego was levied by the Board of Supervisors of said county on the first Monday of

Opinion of the Court — Belcher, J.

April, 1870, pursuant to the requirements of the Act before referred to; that all the indebtedness of said county of every nature and kind which was outstanding on the first day of April, and which had been surrendered to the Board of Commissioners created by the above named Act, for the action of said Board, had been acted upon by it, warrants drawn and the same fully paid, prior to the levy of said county tax in controversy in this action; and that there was in each of the Funds designated in said Act as "Interest Tax Fund," "Floating Debt Redemption Fund," and "Funded Debt Redemption Fund," a large sum of money; that there was still outstanding and unpaid a large amount of the indebtedness of said county, both funded and unfunded, which was outstanding on the 1st day of April, 1868, but that the same was held by parties who refused to accept the terms and conditions of payment provided in the said Act.

In Rose v. Estudillo, 39 Cal. 270, the constitutionality of this Act was called in question, in so far as it required warrants drawn by the Auditor of the county, and which had been duly presented to the Treasurer for payment, and indorsed "not paid for want of funds," to be presented and passed upon by the Board of Commissioners appointed for that purpose by the Act. It was held that the claim of the petitioner in that case, who held certain warrants of the kind named, was a part of the recognized indebtedness of the county, authenticated and allowed as provided by law, and that it was not competent for the Legislature to pass an Act which would declare such claims invalid, nor could it authorize a commission to do so; that the creditor could not be compelled to accept another and essentially different mode of payment from that provided by his contract—that is to say, by the laws existing at the time he became a creditor of the county. But it was added that as no moneys were provided for the payment of that class of indebtedness to which the claim of the petitioner belonged, except what was called the "funding provisions" of the Act, the petitioner was without remedy except to apply to the Legislature to provide the means of paying his debt, unless there were funds in the treasury, which were raised under the provisions of the old law, and by that law were designated to pay his claim.

At the trial in the Court below, it was insisted by the defendant — and his views were adopted by the Court — that so much of the taxes levied against his property in 1870 as were to go into the three Funds named, were illegally levied and could not be collected. This was placed upon two grounds: First — It was said that the object of the levy of the tax for said Funds had ceased to exist prior to the levy, because all of the indebtedness of the county which had been acted upon by the Board of Commissioners and allowed, had been fully paid, leaving a large amount of money in each of the Funds, and because the other creditors of the county refused to accept the terms and conditions of payment provided for in the Act. Second — That so much of the said Act as requires the Supervisors of said county to levy the tax for the several Funds aforesaid is unconstitutional and void.

We cannot accept these views as sound. The Interest Tax Fund is provided for the purpose of paying the interest on the outstanding bonds of the county. It is made to take the place of the "interest tax" required to be levied by the Act of May 4th, 1855, to fund the debt of the County of San Diego and provide for the payment of the same. It was evidently provided by the Legislature to pay the interest on the bonds of the county in case the holders should not choose to accept the terms of payment offered them by the Act of 1868; for if they accept those terms, both principal and interest are made payable out of the Funded Debt Redemption Fund.

Opinion of the Court — Belcher, J.

We do not see how it can be said that the occasion for the Floating Debt Redemption Fund has ceased to exist, or that the law providing for it is unconstitutional. It is true the Legislature cannot require the creditors of the county to accept the terms of payment proposed, but it may refuse, as it has refused, to provide funds to pay them in any other way. It might even refuse to provide funds to pay any portion of the indebtedness. This is well settled by the decisions of this Court, and is so declared in Rose v. Estudillo. This being so, it is not for the Courts to say that the creditors of the county will never accept a portion of the money due them instead of the whole, or that a law providing means to pay a portion only of their claims is for that reason unconstitutional.

The Funded Debt Redemption Fund was provided for the payment of the outstanding bonds of the county. The Act does not require these bonds to be presented to, or passed upon by the Board of Commissioners. Whenever there are five hundred dollars or more in this Fund, the Treasurer is to call for bids for the surrender of the bonds, and is to accept the lowest bid or bids therefor, provided he can accept none for more than fifty per cent of the face value thereof, exclusive of interest. If these bonds are worth more in the market than the Treasurer is authorized to pay for them, the holders will of course retain them, but if less they will be glad to surrender them on the terms proposed. But whether they be worth more or less, there can be no constitutional objection to the law which provides a Fund out of which the holders can obtain for them fifty per cent of their nominal value whenever they may choose to dispose of them at that rate.

It was also successfully claimed by the defendant, in the Court below, that the assessment of block seventeen and the north half of block eighteen, in Horton's addition to the City of San Diego, was not made in substantial compliance with the requirements of the Revenue Act, and did not therefore create any obligation to pay the taxes levied thereon. The alleged illegality of the assessment consisted in the fact that the Assessor placed a valuation upon block seventeen as a whole, and also upon the north half of block eighteen as a whole, and did not place any separate valuation upon the several lots into which those blocks had been divided upon a map of Horton's addition, then on file in the Recorder's office of the county.

Section twenty of the Revenue Act of 1861 requires the Assessor to list or assess the real property situate within the limits of any city or incorporated town, describing by lots or fractions of lots, and also, in a book, to make a map or plan of the various blocks within any incorporated city or town, and to mark thereon the various subdivisions as they are assessed. We are unable to see that the assessment complained of is substantially variant from the requirements of the Act. The intention undoubtedly was to require the Assessors to use the easy and accurate mode of description in common use in cities and incorporated towns. This is usually done by lot, block, and range, having reference to some recorded map or plan of the city or town. But if one man owns and returns a whole block or half block, we see nothing in the language of the statute or in the supposed reasons for its passage, forbidding the Assessor to list and value it as a whole.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL ON AFFIDAVITS.—When an application for a new trial is made on affidavits, the affidavits used in the hearing of the motion must be identified, by the indorsement of the Judge or Clerk, made at the time of the hearing, as having been read or referred to on the argument. The ordinary indorsement of filing by the Clerk is not sufficient.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The Court below denied the defendant's application for a new trial, and he appealed from the order.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Tully R. Wise, for Appellant.

Melville Johnson, William H. Patterson, and Thomas A. Brown, for Respondent.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The defendant moved for a new trial on two grounds:

First—Accident or surprise, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against.

Second—Error, in the refusal of the Court to continue the cause on the application of the defendant.

There is no statement upon motion for new trial. The transcript contains a series of affidavits, which appear to have been filed by the Clerk at various times between the rendition of the judgment and the hearing of the motion.

Under the provisions of section one hundred and ninety-five of the Practice Act a statement is unnecessary when the motion is made upon affidavits only. But in such case it is required that the affidavits should be identified by the indorsement of the Judge or Clerk, made at the time of the hearing, that they were read or referred to on the hearing.

It is evident that a mere ordinary indorsement of filing is not sufficient to identify the papers as having been used upon the hearing of the motion. They may have been deposited with the clerk for other and quite different purposes. We cannot, therefore, consider the affidavits.

Judgment and order affirmed.

[No. 2,501.]

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF BEZER
SIMMONS, DECEASED.

APPOINTMENT OF ATTORNEY FOR HEIRS NOT REPRESENTED.—In proceedings to obtain an order for the sale of real estate belonging to the estate of a deceased person, it is the duty of the Probate Court to appoint an attorney for heirs not represented; and an attorney's fee of fifty dollars for such services is not unusual or excessive.

EMPLOYMENT OF ATTORNEY TO PROCURE LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.—The employment of an attorney for the mere purpose of procuring letters of administration is a contract made in advance of any authority on the part of the client to deal with the assets of the estate in anywise; and whether the application be successful or not the estate is not to be charged with the fees of the attorney for the applicant.

EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL BY ADMINISTRATOR.—The administrator, after he has become such, has the right, and it is ordinarily his duty, to employ competent counsel to aid him in the management of adversary suits, in which the estate may be involved while under his care, and fees for such services may be allowed from the assets of the estate.

ADMINISTRATOR'S COMMISSIONS.—As affording a basis for the allowance of an administrator's commissions, the value of the estate which has been taken into possession, and having been in possession, has been accounted for, is alone to be regarded.

IDEM.—The Probate Court should not allow an administrator fees or commissions for property which does not come into his hands, but which is in the possession of other parties, who claim title to it adversely to the estate, even though it is appraised and included in the inventory.

IDEM.—If expenses are incurred in attempting to administer, the administrator should be allowed them, so far as they are necessary.

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, C. J.

APPEAL from the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

B. S. Brooks, for Appellant.

Bartlett & Pratt, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

Orrin Simmons, administrator de bonis non, brings this appeal from an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, allowing the final account of Adolphus Hollub, his immediate predecessor in the administration.

It appears that in 1850 the decedent departed this life intestate, and that in November of that year Frederick Billings, his brother-in-law, took out letters of administration upon the estate. In April, 1853, he presented his petition to the Probate Court, setting forth that no estate of any description had ever reached his hands, or was likely to do so; and upon his application in May following he was discharged by the Court from his trust.

In 1860 Hollub, then Public Administrator, presented his petition to the Probate Court, in which petition he substantially set forth these proceedings of Billings, and alleged that the decedent had left valuable real estate, which had not been theretofore administered upon; and upon his application he was appointed administrator de bonis non in February, 1861. In May following Hollub filed an inventory and appraisement of the property of the estate, in which it appeared that the decedent died seized of certain real estate, situate in Sacramento City, of the appraised value of one thousand six hundred and eighty dollars.

In September, 1861, a claim against the estate for some fifteen thousand dollars was allowed; and in April, 1869,

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

Hollub filed another inventory and appraisement of the Sacramento property, in which a more detailed description of the lots was set forth, and their aggregate value, with a good title, stated to be upwards of forty-four thousand dollars.

It was at the same time reported to the Court, however, by Hollub, that the title of the estate to the property was in dispute, that its possession was then held adversely to the estate, and that neither he nor the former administrator had ever been in its possession, and that the appraisement of forty-four thousand six hundred and fifty dollars represented "the present cash value of the property with a good title." Subsequently, on the 30th day of April, 1869, Hollub presented his petition in the usual form, praying an order of sale of the Sacramento property to pay the claim he had allowed and expenses of administration. The petition, in addition to the allegations usual in such cases, also set forth that the title of the estate to the property was still in dispute, and the property itself in the possession of parties holding adversely, and that possession, if it could be obtained at all, could only be obtained after expensive and protracted litigation, and that the estate had no funds with which to carry on such litigation, nor if it had would such litigation be advisable.

It was also alleged in the petition, that the estate is largely insolvent, and that its creditors unanimously favored the sale of whatever interest it might have in the property.

A notice of this application for an order of sale having been published, the appellant, Orrin Simmons, a brother and heir at law of the deceased, thereupon appeared and presented a petition, in which he prayed that the letters of Hollub might be revoked and letters of administration issued to himself, and after a hearing an order to that effect was entered by the Court in November, 1869; the petition of Hollub, for an order of sale, being at the same time dismissed. The order by which the letters of Hollub were revoked, directed the newly appointed administrator to pay to the retiring administrator what might be due him for his services and expenses, and for proper compensation of his counsel and attorney, the amounts to be thereafter ascertained and allowed by the Probate Judge.

The final account of Hollub was thereupon filed, setting forth the several items which he claimed should be allowed him, and among them the following:

"Paid H. J. Labatt, attorney's fees, obtaining letters of administration, fifty dollars."

The account also stated, that Hollub had incurred the following liabilities in the administration, to wit:

"Bartlett & Pratt, attorney's fees, seven hundred dollars; Theodore Hittell, attorney for absent heirs, services in Probate Court on application to sell real estate, fifty dollars;" and that Hollub had himself performed services reasonably worth the sum of one thousand five hundred dollars.

These services of Hollub are referred to in the account as being those set forth in the written response filed by him in resisting the application of the appellant Simmons for letters of administration. They are in substance, that being informed in 1860 of the claim the estate held to the lands in Sacramento City, and that the parties then in adverse possession of the property would pay something for that claim, he, at the instance of creditors of the estate, applied for letters of administration thereon; that he caused an inventory of the property to be prepared and filed, and the title to be searched, and obtained the services of counsel in its investigation, with a view to the institution of legal proceedings for its recovery, if deemed advisable; that about this time the flood in Sacramento City depressed the market value of the property, and the proceedings concerning it were therefore temporarily suspended; that in April, 1869, the prices of real estate in Sacramento having in the meantime materially advanced, he caused another inventory to be made out and filed, and he thereupon employed and retained other counsel to recover the property or procure a sale of the interest of the estate therein, etc.

The correctness of each of the several items which we have enumerated was contested by the appellant, but upon the hearing his objections were in all respects overruled, except that the compensation of Hollub was reduced from the sum of one thousand five hundred dollars, claimed by him, to one thousand three hundred and thirty-nine dollars and fifty cents, "that sum (in the language of the order) being three per cent upon forty-four thousand six hundred and fifty dollars, the appraised value of the said estate."

First — The allowance of a fee of fifty dollars for the services of the attorney of the absent heirs, appointed by the Court to represent them in the proceedings to obtain an order for the sale of the real estate, is attacked here as being "unfounded and excessive." It can hardly be said to be unfounded, for the statute has in such case made it the duty of the Court to appoint an attorney for heirs not represented (Sec. 159); nor does the amount allowed in this instance seem unusual or excessive in any wise. The evidence as to the services rendered by the attorney is not found in the record here — and we must presume, in support of the order of the Court below, that the case presented there justified the allowance — we could hardly be expected to hold that the allowance of fifty dollars amounts to error per se.

Second — But the compensation allowed to an attorney for services in obtaining letters of administration for Hollub cannot be supported. The statutes regulating the settlement of estates of deceased persons, provides for the employment of attorneys in the Probate Court, at the expense of the estate, in certain enumerated instances only, and in those instances it will be found that the attorneys do not represent the administrator — they are appointed by the Court, and their general duties are not to aid the administrator but rather to resist his proceedings in so far as such proceedings may appear to be hurtful to the interests of the estate, or not warranted by the rules of law.

But the employment of an attorney, for the mere purpose of procuring letters of administration, is a contract made in advance of any authority on the part of the client to deal with the assets of the estate in anywise. His application may not be successful, and in that case it would hardly be pretended that the estate is to be bound for the attorney's fees. Where a bona fide contest as to the right to administer has arisen and been determined, in which the employment of counsel was necessary, it may be in the discretion of the Court to allow the necessary expenses of all the parties concerned, including a reasonable counsel fee; but this has no reference to the mere ordinary proceedings to obtain letters of administration, in which no such circumstances appear, and, whether the application be successful or not, the estate is not to be charged with the fees of the attorney for the applicant.

Third — Of course the administrator, after he has become such, does not undertake to personally conduct without the aid of counsel, the management of adversary suits in which the estate may become involved while under his care. He has a right, and it is ordinarily his duty, to employ counsel competent for that purpose. He does not undertake, in accepting letters of administration, that he is possessed of a sufficient degree of learning in the principles and practice of the law to enable him to personally manage a lawsuit in Court. The allowance of a fee to counsel rendering services in such a case is, therefore, not objectionable in itself, and we can not, upon principles already adverted to, undertake to say that the amount allowed to Bartlett & Pratt for their professional services was excessive; for, though witnesses appear to have testified before the Probate Court, the record here is silent as to the proof adduced in support of the claim of Bartlett & Pratt.

Fourth—The Court below determined that Hollub was entitled to compensation, and adopted the second appraisal of the property of the estate as a basis by which to arrive at the amount of that compensation. The statute fixes the compensation of an administrator at a named percentage upon the value of the estate administered upon. It does not follow, however, in any case, that the appraisal on file is necessarily to constitute the basis upon which the compensation is to be allowed. The inventory is required to set forth all the estate which shall have come to the knowledge as well as that which shall have come to the possession of the administrator. (Sec. 105.) But he is to be charged in his account with only such portion of the estate as may come to his possession at the value of the appraisal. (Sec. 216.) This is for the purpose of fixing the measure of his accountability in the event it be afterwards lost through his fault. The inventory may or may not afford a basis of calculation for the purpose of allowance of commissions upon property taken into possession and accounted for; but if resorted to in making such allowance, it cannot in any case amount to more than prima facie evidence of value, and the value should be left open to inquiry, if the inventoried value be not satisfactory to all parties concerned.

It has been seen that the order of the Court fixed the compensation of the administration "at three per cent upon the appraised value of the estate, ascertained in the last inventory and appraisal on file," etc. But this last inventory and appraisal did not show, nor purport to show, the value of the estate. No one pretends that it did. The appraisers certified the cash value of each of the lots, it is true, but

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

Hollub, in his report indorsed on the appraisement, certifies in substance that the appraisement shows the value of the property with a good title, and the allegations contained in his petition for an order of sale show that the title of the estate was not considered to be good or sufficient. It is there set forth that while it is certain that expensive and protracted litigation must ensue if the title be asserted by suit, it is not certain that possession could even then be had. But commissions were allowed to Hollub, as though he had received into his possession and accounted for an estate of the value of forty-four thousand six hundred and fifty dollars, and this in the face of the fact that nothing whatever had been received, and of course nothing actually accounted for as assets of the estate. Alarming results might follow if an administrator were to be allowed a percentage upon the actual cash value of what might turn out to be the property of other persons, and which had never been in his possession or in that of the intestate, merely because he, as administrator, had chosen to assert a claim to such property in behalf of the estate and had caused it to be returned in an inventory, or, as here, in a supplemental inventory. The entire available assets of an estate might be conveniently absorbed in paying the percentage upon the cash value of property held only by this imaginary title — a title resting in the mere assertion of the administrator himself.

The commissions to be allowed to an administrator are fixed by the statute. (Sec. 221.) They are a designated percentage "upon the amount of the whole estate accounted for by him." We are of opinion that an administrator cannot be said to have "accounted for" an estate, in the sense of the statute, unless he shall first have taken it into possession. He is charged by the statute, as we have already seen, with the value of "the whole of the estate of the deceased which may come into his possession," etc. (Sec. 216); and it is made his duty to "take into his possession all the estate of the deceased, real and personal." (Sec. 194.) When he shall have taken the property into possession and accounted for it, he is entitled to compensation by way of commissions upon its value. Unless he take it into possession, he is not charged in his account with its value. He may, and doubtless would, incur a responsibility, should he fail to take it into possession when he lawfully might, if by such failure it should become ultimately lost to those entitled to its benefits; but as affording a basis for the allowance of commissions, the value of the estate which has been taken into possession, and having been in possession has been accounted for, is alone regarded. Whether the failure to obtain possession be his fault or misfortune, is not material. Unless this view be the correct view, then there is no reason why the administrator might not receive a percentage upon debts claimed to be due the estate, but never collected or realized. Such a claim might be as well supported as the one allowed below, resting, as it does, upon an alleged title to real estate which has not only not been successfully asserted, but seems to have been of such an unreliable character that the counsel employed by the administrator themselves had little or no confidence in it, and therefore "determined against bringing any suits to recover the property." We are of opinion that there was error in awarding compensation to Hollub upon the basis of percentage upon the supplementary inventory and appraisement.

It appears that, in his attempt to administer, Hollub has incurred some expenses. These, of course, must be allowed him (Sec. 219), so far as they were, or fairly seemed to be, necessary.

The order of the Probate Court, in so far as it allows the fee of Labatt, and the claim of Hollub for commission, is reversed. In all other respects it is affirmed, and the cause

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA
v. PANCHE VALENCIA AND GUADALUPE VA-LENCIA.

INDICTMENT FOR MURDER.—An indictment against two persons for murder may charge in one count, one as principal, and the other as accessory, and in another count the latter as principal, and the former as accessory.

IDEM.—Such indictment does not charge each defendant with two offenses, nor are the two counts repugnant.

MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE.—The willful and felonious killing of another does not constitute murder in the first degree, but there must be also deliberation and premeditation.

INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY IN CRIMINAL CASE.—Where, on a trial for murder, two parts of the charge of the Court to the jury are contradictory, and one is correct and the other is erroneous, the judgment of conviction will be reversed, even though the appellate Court may be satisfied from the evidence that the jury ought to have found the defendant guilty.

PROVINCE OF THE JURY IN CRIMINAL TRIAL.—On a trial for murder, the questions of deliberation and premeditation are peculiarly the province of the jury to determine.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

The defendants were convicted in the Court below, and appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

A. Teague, for Appellants.

A party cannot be charged as principal and accessory in the same indictment.

The definition of murder given in the charge, willfully and violently killing, would make every grade of killing murder in the first degree.

Southard & Deuprey, and A. Teagus, also for Appellants.

It is laid down that, under our Criminal Practice Act, though an accessory before the fact is liable to the same punishment as the principal, he must be indicted and charged as an accessory and not as a principal. (People v. Campbell, 40 Cal. 129; People v. Trim, 39 Cal. 75; People v. Schwartz, 32 Cal. 160.)

The law is equally well established in this State that the principal may be acquitted and the accessory to the same crime found guilty. (People v. Newberry, 20 Cal. 489.) Also, that the accessory may be found guilty in a county far removed from the scene of the execution of the crime for which he is charged. By these rulings it is evident that principal and accessory are not so allied, in a criminal light, as to allow of the merger of the one into the other, and the charging one person with murder, and aiding and abetting the same, at one and the same instant.

How could the Valencias determine of which crime they must answer, accessory or principal? Were they to consider, what is impossible, that they were both principals, both accessories?

Where one material part of an indictment is repugnant to another, the whole is void, is a familiar rule of criminal pleading. (See Archibald's Crim. Pleadings, Vol. 1, pp. 54, 66; 2 East P. C. 985.)

In the indictment aforesaid, two offenses so different in grade, as, to our mind, to be entirely repugnant to each other, are charged against one and the same person; we therefore contend that said indictment contains such repugnance as to vitiate the whole document.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

John L. Love, Attorney General, and J. W. Coffroth, for the People.

The offense charged was murder, and the second count distinctly refers to the first. The pleading clearly shows upon its face that the matters and things set forth in the different counts are descriptive of one and the same transaction. (People v. Thompson, 28 Cal. 216; People v. King, 27 Cal. 509; People v. Murphy, 39 Cal. 55; People v. Schwartz, 32 Cal. 164.)

Section eleven of the Act concerning crimes and punishments says that an accessory before the fact "shall be deemed and considered as principal, and punished accordingly." In close connection with this definition of an accessory follows section two hundred and fifty-five of the Criminal Practice Act, declaring that "no distinction shall exist between an accessory before the fact and a principal," and that "all persons concerned in the commission of a felony shall hereafter be indicted, tried, and punished as principals." The text books are full of cases sustaining the form of the present indictment. (1 Archibald Cr. Pl. 309, Sec. 94.)

Where two persons were indicted for murder, A. in the first count being indicted as principal, and B. present, aiding and abetting, and in the second count B. was indicted as principal, and A. with being present, aiding, and abetting, the indictment was held to be good. (1 Archibald Cr. Pl. 319; R. v. Downing, 1 Dennison's Crown Cases.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The defendants were indicted for murder. The indictment contains two counts. The first charges Pancho Valencia as the principal, and Guadalupe Valencia as an accessory; and the second charges Guadalupe as the principal, and

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

Pancho as an accessory. The demurrer to the indictment was overruled, and, we think, correctly. The point now urged is that the indictment does not conform to sections two hundred and thirty-eight and two hundred and thirty-nine of the Criminal Practice Act, because it charges each defendant with two offenses, and because the two counts are repugnant. It is apparent that only one offense is charged, which is the murder of Hewitt. The principal and the accessory are alike guilty of the same offense; but the rules of pleading require that an accessory shall be charged as such, and not as a principal. Had only one of the defendants been indicted, if it were doubtful whether the evidence would show that he was the principal or an accessory, he should be charged in one count as the principal, and in another count as an accessory. There would be neither two offenses charged in the indictment, nor would the two counts be inconsistent. (People v. Schwartz, 32 Cal. 164; People v. Trim, 39 Cal. 75; People v. Campbell, 40 Cal. 129.) The same rule would obtain where two or more are charged in the same indictment.

The Court in charging the jury, after having read from the statute the definition of murder in the first and murder in the second degree, malice, etc., proceeded as follows: "I charge you further, if you are satisfied from the evidence that on or about the 3d day of March, 1871, in the County of Solano, the defendant Pancho Valencia willfully and feloniously took the life of Joseph Hewitt by means of shooting, and that the defendant Guadalupe Valencia stood by, aided, abetted, or assisted in the killing, then it is your duty to find the defendants guilty of murder in the first degree."

It is not doubted that that part of the charge is erroneous, as it omits from the definition of murder in the first degree the essential qualities of deliberation and premeditation; but it is contended by the prosecution that as the Court had correctly defined murder in the first degree, and as the jury would consider together all the parts or propositions of the charge, the error in the part above cited is cured by the correct definition which had already been given. The two parts of the charge are contradictory, and the jury would not be able to say that the Court intended that the former rather than the latter should be received by them as the correct definition of murder in the first degree. There is no doubt that the jury would always give greater heed to a charge delivered in the language of the Judge, in which only the particular manner in which it is claimed by the prosecution that the murder was committed is mentioned, than to the statutory definition in which are enumerated several different kinds of murder, as constituting murder in the first degree. We are not justified in saying that the error was productive of no injury to the defendants, because we may be satisfied that the jury ought to have found from the evidence, as they did, that the defendants are guilty of murder in the first degree. The question as to the deliberation and premeditation of the defendants is one which is peculiarly the province of the jury to determine; and should we sustain the charge of the Court, because of the apparently satisfactory character of the evidence, that question would virtually be withdrawn from the jury.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF PERSON ACCUSED OF CRIME.—The Act of 1851, to regulate proceedings before committing magistrates, contains no provision authorising or permitting an oath to be administered to the person accused. He is not to be examined generally, nor cross-examined at all; only the five questions specified are to be put to him, and his answers thereto must be committed to writing.

ISSUE — EVIDENCE OF JUSTICE INADMISSIBLE.—The evidence of the committing magistrate, as to the statement made by the prisoner on his preliminary examination, is not admissible on the trial.

ISSUE — ACT NOT APPLICABLE.—The Act of 1866, authorising accused persons to become witnesses in their own behalf, is not applicable to preliminary examinations before committing magistrates.

APPEAL from the County Court of Santa Cruz County.

The defendant was convicted, and appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

W. M. De Witt and J. W. Coffroth, for Appellant.

J. L. Love, Attorney General, and Julius Lee, for Respondents.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The prisoner was tried in September, 1871, in the County Court of Santa Cruz County, upon an indictment for grand larceny in stealing an ox of one Peterson, and was convicted. Before the indictment was found he had been arrested and brought before a Justice of the Peace for examination into the charges made against him. He appeared there without counsel, and upon being inquired of by the Justice if he desired counsel, he answered that he did not. The Justice thereupon examined the witnesses for the prosecution and then put this question to the prisoner: "Will you make a statement or be sworn in your own behalf?" The prisoner answered that he would be sworn; and thereupon he was sworn "to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, in regard to the charge against him." The prisoner is said to have then testified in substance that he had stolen the ox of Peterson.

On the trial had upon the indictment in the County Court the prosecution called the Justice of the Peace as a witness, and were permitted, against the objection of the prisoner, to prove the substance of his alleged testimony thus given before the Justice.

The Act of 1851 (Hitt. General Laws, Sec. 1742), especially regulates the proceedings to be had before committing magistrates upon preliminary examinations concerning the commission of public offenses. It contains no provision authorizing or permitting an oath to be administered to the person accused. It provides, it is true, that he may, if he so desire, make a statement in relation to the charge against him, but such statement is not permitted, but is forbidden, to be made under the sanction of a corporal oath. The point of time in the course of the proceedings, at which he may make or decline to make this statement, is fixed by the statute; it must be after the depositions of the witnesses, upon which the warrant was issued, have been read to him, and when the examination of the witnesses on the part of the people, had in the presence of the accused, is closed. He must then be distinctly informed by the magistrate that it is his right to make a statement in relation to the charge against him if he see fit, but that he is at entire liberty to waive making such statement, and that his waiver cannot be used against him on the trial. This requirement is important to be observed as removing possible apprehensions lingering in his mind, calculated to disturb, or, it may be, to overrule his more deliberate judgment, and so impelling him to speak to the charge, though he would otherwise desire to remain silent. If he elect, however, to make a statement, it is to be taken in writing. The prisoner, in making the statement, is not to be exposed to the danger of willful misrepresentation, inattention, or forgetfulness upon the part of the persons present, who may afterwards appear as witnesses against him, testifying as to what he did or did not say in making his statement concerning the charge. Nor is he to be examined generally, nor cross-examined at all, in making his statement. Five designated questions are to be put to him by the magistrate — these are given in the statute, and none others are permitted. His answer to each question is to be distinctly read to him as it was taken down to each, and it is to be corrected, if he desire it, until it is made to express what it is his purpose to state. Numerous other and like provisions are added, carefully detailing the steps to be pursued in receiving and authenticating the statement made — all of them designed to assure the utmost freedom of the accused from restraint or influence from any quarter in making his statement, and intended to provide against the danger of misapprehension or misunderstanding in any respect. It is easy to discern, in the provisions of the statute, the beneficent spirit of the common law embodied in its great maxim: "Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare."

We are of opinion that, under the provisions of the statute referred to, there was no authority conferred upon the Justice to administer an oath to the prisoner upon his preliminary examination, nor to hear or receive testimony from the mouth of the accused in that proceeding, and that the statements made by the prisoner and detailed by the Justice were improperly admitted.

Nor do we think that the subsequent Act of April 2, 1866 (p. 865), authorizing accused persons to become witnesses in their own behalf, has any applicability to mere preliminary examinations had before committing magistrates. The statute speaks of trials of indictments, complaints, and other proceedings, and provides that the credibility of the testimony given by the accused shall be left to the determination of the jury, etc. We find nothing, either in its letter or context, evincing a purpose to interfere in any respect with the statute specially regulating the subject of the preliminary examination of persons charged with the commission of public offenses.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

REPEAL OF ACT.—When an Act is repugnant to a prior Act, it repeals the prior Act, without any repealing clause.

PASSAGE OF A BILL THROUGH THE LEGISLATURE.—If an Act is properly enrolled and authenticated, and is deposited with the Secretary of State, it is conclusive evidence of the legislative will at the time of its passage, and Courts will not look into the Journals of the Legislature to see whether or how the bill passed.

LAWS REPUGNANT TO EACH OTHER.—If there are two Acts for the assessment and collection of a tax, and by one a notice of the election to vote it, must be posted ten days, and published two weeks, and the tax is not to exceed one dollar and fifty cents on the hundred dollars, and by the other, the notice is to be posted twenty days, and published three weeks, and the rate of taxation is not to exceed seventy cents on the hundred dollars, the two Acts are repugnant, and the latter repeals the former.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Second Judicial District, Tehama County.

The defendant recovered judgment in the Court below and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Jo Hamilton and P. B. Nagle, for Appellant.

W. H. Jones, for Respondent.

Opinion of the Court—Belcher, J.

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

This is an action for the collection of a delinquent school tax, alleged to have been duly assessed in pursuance of the provisions of an Act entitled an Act to authorize a tax to be levied upon the taxable property of Red Bluff School District, Tehama County, for building purposes, approved March 25th, 1870. The object of the Act was to call an election and submit to the qualified electors of the district the question whether a tax should be levied on the property of the district for the purpose of erecting a school house therein. It provided that the "election shall be called by posting notices in three of the most public places in the district for ten days, and by publication in some newspaper in the district for two weeks. Said notices shall contain the time and place of holding the election and the rate per cent proposed to be levied on the property of the district, which shall not exceed one dollar and fifty cents upon the one hundred dollars."

Sections three and five are as follows:

"SEC. 3. At such election the ballots shall contain the words, 'Tax—Yes,' or 'Tax—No,' and also the name of one person as Assessor and Tax Collector. If a majority of the votes cast are 'Tax—Yes,' the officers of the election shall certify the fact to the Board of Trustees, and also the name of the person receiving the plurality of votes for Assessor and Tax Collector, and the Trustees shall issue to such person a certificate of election."

"SEC. 5. For the purposes of equalizing the assessment the Board of Trustees shall have all the power conferred by law upon County Boards of Equalization. The rate per cent voted at such election shall be and is hereby levied and assessed to, on, or against the persons and property named and described in said roll so equalized; and it shall be a lien on all such property until the tax is paid; and the said tax, if not paid within thirty days from the date of such equalization, shall be recovered by suit in the same manner and with the same costs as delinquent State and county taxes."

It is claimed by the defendant that this Act was in conflict with and was repealed by the Act of April 4th, 1870, entitled an Act to amend an Act to provide for a system of common schools.

Section ninety-one of the last named Act provides:

"The Board of Trustees of any district may, when in their judgment it is advisable, call an election and submit to the qualified electors of the district the question whether a tax shall be raised * * * for building one or more school houses. * * * Such election shall be called by posting notices in three of the most public places in the district for twenty days; and also, if there is a newspaper in the county, by advertisement therein once a week for three weeks. Said notices shall contain the time and place of holding the election. The amount of money proposed to be raised, and the purpose or purposes for which it is intended to be used. * * * At such elections the ballots shall contain the words 'Tax—Yes,' or 'Tax—No,' and also the name of one person as Assessor and one as Tax Collector. * * * If a majority of the votes cast are 'Tax—Yes,' the officers of the election shall certify the fact to the Trustees, and shall also certify the names of the person or persons having the plurality of votes for Assessor and Collector. The Trustees shall issue certificates of election, and the Assessor shall, on receiving his, forthwith ascertain and enroll, in the manner provided for County Assessors, all the taxable persons and property in the district; and within thirty days he shall return his roll, footed up, to the Trustees. The Trustees, upon receiving the roll, shall deduct fifteen per cent therefrom for anticipated delinquencies, and then, by dividing the sum voted, together with the estimated cost of assessing and collecting added thereto, by the remainder of the roll, ascertain the rate per cent required; and the rate so ascertained (using the full cent on each hundred dollars in place of any fraction) shall be and is hereby levied and assessed to, on, or against the persons or property named and described in said roll. * * * The maximum rate of tax levied by a district tax in any one year for building purposes shall not exceed seventy cents on each hundred dollars. * * * The trustees, upon receiving any assessment roll from the Assessor, shall give five days notice thereof by posting a notice in three public places in the district, and shall sit for at least three days as a Board of Equalization."

Opinion of the Court — Belcher, J.

Section one hundred and fifteen repeals "all Acts and parts of Acts conflicting with the provisions of this Act."

The last Act is general and applies to all the school districts in this State. It follows, if both of these Acts are to stand, that they had in Red Bluff School District when this tax was levied two Acts under which they were authorized to raise money to build a school house. By one the notice calling an election was directed to be posted ten days and published two weeks, and by the other it was to be posted twenty days and published three weeks; by one the notice was to contain the rate per cent proposed to be levied on the property of the district, "which shall not exceed one dollar and fifty cents upon the one hundred dollars," and by the other it was to contain the aggregate amount of money proposed to be raised, but the maximum rate of tax levied by a district in any one year, for building purposes, "shall not exceed seventy cents on each hundred dollars."

It is manifest that these provisions — and there are others of a similar character — are in conflict and cannot stand together. They are repugnant and irreconcilable, "and it is well settled that where a subsequent Act is repugnant to a prior one, the last operates, without any repealing clause, as a repeal of the first." (Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 315.)

Points decided.

Counsel for the plaintiff call our attention to the fact that it appears from the Senate and Assembly Journals that the bill for the special Act was introduced and passed in the Senate on the 4th March, 1870, and was passed in the Assembly on the 14th March, 1870, while the bill for the general Act was introduced in the Assembly on the 18th of December, 1869; and they ask: "How is it possible that the Legislature intended on the 18th December, 1869, to repeal a statute to be introduced and passed into a law between the 4th and 25th of March, 1870?" The plain answer is that we cannot look into the Journals of the Legislature to see when a bill was introduced in or how it passed through the two Houses. If an Act is properly enrolled, authenticated, and deposited with the Secretary of State, it is conclusive evidence of the legislative will at the time of its passage. (Sherman v. Storey, 30 Cal. 253.)

The judgment is affirmed.

CONDITIONAL CONTRACT TO BUY A MINE.—A contract with the owners of the stock of a mining corporation, as parties of the first part, reciting that the parties of the second part are desirous of buying the stock and mine, if the tests they make prove satisfactory, and shall take possession of the mine, and make improvements on it, and that the stockholders shall assign the stock to trustees, and that the parties of the second part shall pay at a time fixed a certain sum to the trustees for the stockholders and have the stock, but forfeit their improvements and redeliver possession if they fail to pay, accompanied by a resolution of the Board of Directors to convey the mine to the parties of the second part if the payment is made, merely gives the parties of the second part the option of purchasing, and by their failure to pay they lose the privilege of buying, but do not become liable for the amount they were to pay.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The stock of the corporation was divided into one thousand shares, of which M. G. Griffith and W. N. Muffley, the assignors of the plaintiff, owned ninety-one and two thirds shares. Stockholders owning about nine hundred and sixty shares signed the contract. The resolution of the Board of Directors authorized the President and Secretary of the mine to deliver possession of the same, and to execute a deed thereof to the defendants. The Court below sustained the demurrer to the complaint, and final judgment was rendered for the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

C. A. Tuttle, for Appellant.

W. H. L. Barnes, for Respondents.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The plaintiff sues as the assignee of Griffith & Muffley of their interest in a contract made between them and a number of other persons, stockholders of the "Cosumnes Copper Mining Company," of the one part, and the defendants of the other part. The complaint sets forth the contract in hæc verba, and the sufficiency of the complaint must be determined by an inspection of the instrument.

The contract recited that the corporation was the owner of a vein of copper ore; that the parties of the first part were stockholders in the corporation and desirous of selling their respective shares; that the parties of the second part (defendants) were "desirous of making certain improvements on the said mine, and erecting smelting works for the purpose of reducing the ores of said mine, and of eventually making a purchase of the shares of stock of the parties of the first part and of the mine, if the tests which they shall cause to be made prove satisfactory."

The stockholders, upon their part, agreed that they would assign their stock to John Sime & Co., to be held by that firm "in trust, to reassign and return the same to the parties of the first part if the parties of the second part fail to perform their part of this agreement; and if the parties of the second part fulfill their part of this agreement, and pay the money agreed to be paid, then to assign and deliver said certificates of stock to the parties of the second part," etc.

The defendants, upon their part, agreed to immediately construct a road to the mine, and within a specified time erect a furnace and smelting works for the reduction of the ores.

They further agreed "to pay" * * * "to the parties of the first part, by paying the same to the said trustees for them, the sum of fifty thousand dollars at the end of six months from the time this agreement is signed and possession of the mine taken;" and, in similar terms, agreed to make two further payments of fifty thousand dollars each, at intervals of six months.

It was then provided that "if the parties of the second part fail to fulfill any of the agreements herein contained to be by them performed, they shall forfeit whatever improvements they may have made in and about the mine, and all moneys paid in accordance with this agreement, and all machinery connected therewith (except the said furnace and machinery connected therewith, and tools)."

And in case of such failure the parties of the first part were "to take peaceable possession of said mine and all improvements, except as reserved, without any recourse at law."

A resolution of the Board of Directors of the corporation, which was also set forth in the complaint, authorized the delivery of possession of the property to the defendants, and a conveyance to them, when they should have fulfilled their contract with the stockholders, and should surrender up the stock held by Sime & Co. in trust.

Immediately after the execution of the contract, the stockholders transferred their stock to Sime & Co., and the defendants entered into possession of the mine, and erected a portion of the works required for testing the ore; but they failed to pay the first installment of fifty thousand dollars. Plaintiff sues to recover the proportion of this sum alleged to be due to him as assignee of Griffith & Muffley.

The defendants demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

In construing the contract, the first question naturally presented is, what was the consideration for the defendants' agreement to pay the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars? The fifth clause of the contract which contains the agreement to pay, does not specify any consideration for the payment; and, as a consideration is needed to uphold the promise, we must look for it without the clause which contains the promise only.

We think it is very evident that this amount was to form the consideration for the purchase of the stock, which, if purchased, would, by the action of the Board of Directors, result in a conveyance of the mine to the defendants. It was a device by which the defendants could acquire the title to the mine, and the stockholders could receive their several proportions of the purchase money directly, and without the trouble and delay of the proceedings for its distribution which the statute would otherwise require.

It cannot be claimed that it was the true import of the contract that this large sum of money was to be paid for a brief possession of the mine, or for the privilege of erecting furnaces and testing the value of the ore. It was intended as the purchase money of the property itself, and it is substantially as if the contract had been made with the corporation instead of the stockholders.

The contract contains no obligation on the part of the defendants to purchase the stock. On the contrary, it seems to be clear, from the terms of the instrument, that the purchase should be at defendants' option. It recites that the defendants are desirous "of eventually making a purchase of the shares of stock * * * and of the mine, if the tests which they shall cause to be made prove satisfactory." The trustees were to assign the stock to the defendants if they performed their part of the agreement—otherwise, to reassign it to the stockholders. The contract provided for a peaceable repossession of the mine by the stockholders in case of defendants' failure to perform, and a forfeiture of all moneys paid or improvements made by them. It was one of a class of contracts, common among miners, by which the mine owner gives to another person the privilege of prospecting the mine for a certain time, and the option of purchasing at a fixed price, or perfecting the improvements made by him. The defendants, by their failure to pay the first installment of the purchase money, exercised their choice, and so lost the privilege of purchase, and forfeited their improvements; but did not become liable for the amount, which, by a reasonable construction of the instrument, they were to pay only in the event of their election to consummate the purchase and receive the title to the mine.

WILLIAM BORLAND v. S. S. LEWIS.

FORFEITURE OF SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LAND.—A failure to pay the interest annually, and to pay the principal at the end of five years, on a swamp and overflowed land purchase, made under the Act of 1855, works a forfeiture, and the State may resell, as if no purchase had been made.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

The defendant had judgment in the Court below.
The other facts are stated in the opinion.

George Cadwalader, for Appellant.

The construction which we place on section six is that the "forfeiture" is not, in fact, worked until it is judicially declared as against the holder of a certificate of purchase. The Act of April 9th, 1861 (1 Hittell, 4102), goes exclusively on this theory. By its first section the Register of the State Land office was directed to notify delinquent purchasers to pay up within thirty days. By the succeeding section it was made the duty of the District Attorney of the county where the land was situate to bring suit against the holders of certificates of purchase for the cancellation of the same. By section three payment within twenty days after decree of cancellation ended the proceeding, and restored the purchaser "to his rights in the land, the same as if no neglect or forfeiture had been made." By section five the State waived part of the cause of forfeiture — i. e., that which related to the reclamation of one half of the land. By section six it was provided that no second certificate of purchase should issue until the rights of the first purchaser had been judicially canceled. By section nine an additional credit of two years was given for the payment of the principal. By a law passed April 10th, 1862, entitled "An Act for the relief of purchasers of swamp and overflowed, salt marsh, and tide lands," one year's interest was remitted; and by the Act of March 31st, 1863, a second year's interest was likewise remitted. The State undoubtedly was competent to waive the assertion of her right of forfeiture; and this, we deem, she did by the Acts aforesaid. The plaintiff's certificate, instead of being annulled by failure to pay the agreed interest in advance, was, in 1859, declared to be prima facie evidence of title. (Stats. 1859, p. 227.)

Terry & Carr, for Respondent.

By the terms of the statute of 1855 the payment of the purchase money was a condition precedent, and no title could vest in a purchaser until full compliance with all the requirements of the Act. (Montgomery v. Kasson, 16 Cal. 193; 1 Washburn on Real Property, 468.) The conditions being precedent, no act on the part of the grantor was necessary to divest the title of the purchaser, for the sufficient reason that no title had ever vested. But if the entry is held to be a grant upon condition subsequent the plaintiff is in no better position. In the latter case the condition might be waived by the vendor's failure to enter for condition broken, or to take steps to declare a forfeiture. At common law an entry is necessary to forfeit an estate for condition broken. But "if the grantor is himself in possession of the premises when the breach happens, the estate reverts in him at once, without any formal act on his part; and he will be presumed, after the breach, to hold for the purpose of enforcing a forfeiture." (1 Washburn on Real Property, 475; Willard v. Henry, 2 N. H. 120; Hamilton v. Elliott, 5 S. & R. 375; Andrews v. Senter, 32 Me. 394.)

The plaintiff was never in possession of the land — the possession after his purchase remained as before, in the State, by virtue of its sovereignty; and upon the occurrence of the breach the forfeiture was enforced, without the necessity of any formal act. The Acts of the Legislature, passed subsequent to the entry of plaintiff, did not affect his interest, or relieve him from the consequences of his failure to perform his contract.

Ejectment to recover a parcel of swamp and overflowed land. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment. It appears from the findings that the plaintiff purchased the land in 1855; that in 1856 he paid one year's interest and received a certificate of purchase; that he made no further payment until 1865, when he paid all the interest which had accrued, except for two years, which the Legislature had remitted. The plaintiff never had the possession of the premises in controversy. Traverse, the defendant's grantor, made application to purchase the land January 4th, 1858; caused a survey to be made; received and recorded a certified copy thereof; paid one year's interest on the purchase money; and he, and the defendant after his purchase, paid the interest for several succeeding years; but neither Traverse nor the defendant received a certificate of purchase. It also appears that in 1861 Traverse conveyed the premises to the defendant; that Traverse, from his purchase to his conveyance to the defendant, had the possession of the premises, and that thereafter the defendant was in possession.

The purchase of each party was made under the provisions of the swamp land Act of 1855 (Stats. 1855, p. 189). It was provided by section five that a person might purchase such lands on a credit of five years, by paying to the County Treasurer the interest for one year in advance. Thereafter the interest was required to be paid annually in advance. It was made the duty of the County Treasurer to pay over the money to the Treasurer of State, at the times when the State revenues were required to be paid, and transmit a certificate showing the purchase; and it was made the duty of the Treasurer of State to certify the same to the Secretary of State, who was required to issue a certificate of purchase. The sixth section provided, that "if any person or persons, purchasing lands upon a credit of five years, as provided in section five of this Act, shall fail or neglect to pay the principal and interest within the said term of five years from the date of the certificate of purchase, or shall fail or neglect to pay the interest, as required by this Act, for the space of one year from the time such interest may become due, or shall fail or neglect to reclaim at least one half of the land so purchased within the said term of five years, such neglect or failure shall work a forfeiture of such lands, and the same shall be resold as if no purchase had been made."

The plaintiff argues that there is no forfeiture in fact, because of his failure to pay the annual interest, until it is so judicially declared by a competent tribunal; that the statute merely specified certain facts, which, being proved, furnish the basis for a judgment or forfeiture. In our judgment it was intended, by the sixth section, to make the failure to pay the interest for one year after it became due operate as a complete forfeiture of the purchaser's rights in and to the land. Had it been designed that the officers charged with the sale of these lands should delay further action until the forfeiture had been judicially determined, it would have been so expressed in the Act; but, on the contrary, that section provides that a failure on the part of the purchaser to pay the interest, etc., "shall work a forfeiture of such lands, and the same shall be resold as if no purchase had been made." The last clause would be useless if the resale could not be made until the forfeiture had been pronounced by a Court, for that would effectually rescind and put an end to the contract, when, of course, the lands would be subject to sale without further directions.

It requires no argument to prove that the State may waive a forfeiture—as it is contended by the plaintiff was done by the Act of April 9th, 1861 (p. 140)—and it is equally clear that if the State, after the forfeiture and before the waiver, resells the land, the waiver will not have the effect to divest the rights acquired by the second purchase.

Judgment affirmed.

POSSESSION OF LAND.—If one who is in the actual possession of a portion of a tract of land, claiming the whole, makes a conveyance of the whole, and the grantee enters into actual possession of such part, claiming the whole, such entry, under the deed, gives the grantee constructive possession of the whole tract.

STATEMENT ON APPEAL AFTER NONSUIT.—The question presented on a motion for a nonsuit is a question of law, and in a statement on a motion for a new trial, after nonsuit, the decision of the Court should be specified as an error of law. The specification need not embody the evidence.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Ejectment to recover possession of a part of block twenty-five, mentioned in the opinion. This land lies within the territory in San Francisco covered by the Van Ness Ordinance. The court below held, that the rule laid down in Hicks v. Coleman, mentioned in the opinion, did not apply to land within the territory covered by the Van Ness Ordinance, and that the rule had no application to city lots.

The plaintiff moved for a new trial, and made the following specification on the question of nonsuit: "The Court erred in granting defendants' motion for a nonsuit and in granting a nonsuit."

The plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Sharp & Lloyd, W. H. Patterson, and M. H. Myrick, for Appellant.

It was error for the Court below to say as it did say by granting the nonsuit, that there was no evidence of actual occupation by plaintiff's grantors. (San Francisco v. Beideman, 17 Cal. 443; Hubbard v. Barry, 21 Cal. 321; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 201; Townsend v. Greeley, 5 Wallace, 326; Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489, 512-13; Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366.) The evidence tended to show, and did show, prior possession in plaintiff's grantors, and that the title thereby acquired had vested in plaintiff by regular mesne conveyances; and that plaintiff had been ousted by defendants. John Reynolds, for Respondents.

No title was shown under the Van Ness Ordinance. (Wolf v. Baldwin, 19 Cal. 306; Polack v. McGrath, 32 Cal. 15.) The possession of the gardens was not sufficient to extend the possession, so as to embrace the premises in controversy. Brummagin v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24; Wolfskill v. Mallachowitz, 39 Cal. 276; Walsh v. Hill, 38 Cal. 481.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

The premises in controversy form a part of Mission Addition block number twenty-five, in the City of San Francisco. In 1850 or 1851 Clark, Wilson & Stock entered upon a tract of land composed of blocks twenty-five and twenty-eight, and small portions of adjacent blocks and the intervening streets, which were not then laid out, and reduced some portions thereof to their actual possession. Wilson & Stock conveyed the tract to Dehon, who entered under the deed into the actual possession of a part of the tract. The plaintiff claims under that deed. It also appears that the plaintiff, by his servants, was in the possession of certain houses situated on the premises in controversy, at the time of the entry of the defendants. The defendants moved for a nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiff had not shown such possession as would give him title under the Van Ness Ordinance, and that he had not shown such prior possession as would entitle him to recover, and the motion was granted on both grounds. The entry of Dehon under the deed of Wilson & Stock had the effect to give him the constructive possession of the whole tract. (Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 122; Ayres v. Bensley, 32 Cal. 620.) That evidence, together with the fact that the title of Dehon had vested in the plaintiff, was sufficient to go to the jury, upon the issue of prior possession. We see nothing in the facts of this case, to prevent the application of the rule in those cases, to the tract of land described in that deed. The occupation of the houses by the servants of the plaintiff, as already mentioned, was also competent evidence on the question of prior possession, and should have been submitted to the jury. It is unnecessary, at this stage of the case, to express any opinion as to whether there was such an occupation of the premises as to entitle the occupant to the benefits of the Van Ness Ordinance.

The defendants insist, that as these questions were presented on the motion for a new trial, they cannot be considered, because there was not a sufficient specification of the grounds of the motion within the requirements of section one hundred and ninety-five of the Practice Act. This objection is untenable. The question presented on a motion for a nonsuit is a question of law, and in the statement on new trial the decision of the motion should be specified as an error of law. Were this not the correct practice, the party complaining of the granting of a nonsuit would be compelled, after stating the evidence, to restate it in his specifications, in order to show that it was insufficient to justify the decision — or in other words, that it was sufficient to make a prima facie case to go to the jury.

Judgment and order reversed and case remanded for a new trial.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT did not express an opinion.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

It was admitted on the trial that on the 5th day of November, 1855, Sanders and Brenham, under whom both parties claim, were the owners in fee, and entitled to the possession of the demanded premises; and the case shows that on that day several attachments were issued against them, which the plaintiff claims were duly levied on this property. It further appears that the attachment suits soon afterwards ripened into judgments, on which executions subsequently issued, under which the property was purchased by the plaintiff at Sheriff's sale, and for which, in due time, he obtained the Sheriff's deed. This is the plaintiff's title.

But it further appears that on the same day on which the attachments are alleged to have been levied, Brenham commenced an action against Sanders for the dissolution of their copartnership, alleging that the firm was insolvent, and praying for a settlement of its affairs, the appointment of a Receiver, and the application of the partnership property towards the payment of the partnership debts.

On the same day Sanders filed his answer, admitting the allegations of the complaint, and consenting to a decree as prayed for. Thereupon the Court, on the same day, appointed Bernhard Peyton, Receiver, and entered an order directing Sanders and Brenham to convey and deliver to the Receiver all their partnership property of every description.

In obedience to this order Sanders and Brenham, on the same day, by a deed in due form, conveyed to Peyton, as Receiver, all the real estate of the firm, including these premises.

Peyton afterwards resigned his trust as Receiver, and conveyed the property to his successor; and the defendant Baird, who is the present Receiver, now holds this title in his capacity of Receiver, the action of Brenham v. Sanders being still pending. The present action is ejectment, and the plaintiff cannot recover unless he holds the legal title.

The deed from Sanders and Brenham to Peyton was long prior in date to the Sheriff's deed, under which the plaintiff claims. But the plaintiff contends that the Sheriff's deed took effect by relation, as of the date at which the attachments were levied, and, therefore, overreaches the deed to

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

Peyton, which, though made on the same day, was subsequent in time to the levy of the attachments.

If the legal principle involved in this proposition be conceded to be correct, of which there is no doubt, it becomes material to inquire whether the attachments were, in fact, levied on the property so as to create a valid lien thereon.

Section one hundred and twenty-five of the code, as it stood in 1855, provided that, in levying an attachment on real property, the Sheriff shall deliver a copy of the attachment to the occupant, if there be one, and if there be no occupant, that he shall post a copy in a conspicuous place on the premises, and shall file a copy in the office of the Recorder, together with a description of the property attached. On each of these attachments the Sheriff returned that, by virtue of the writ, he had attached all the right, title, and interest of Sanders and Brenham in and to the property — describing it — “and that he posted a notice on the most public part of said described property, and filed and recorded a copy of the writ and of the above description with the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco, on November 7th, 1855.” This return does not show a valid service of the attachment. It was the duty of the officer to deliver a copy of the attachment to the occupant, if there was one; and if there was no occupant, then to post a copy of the attachment in a conspicuous place on the premises. These returns do not show whether or not there was an occupant of the premises; and if we were at liberty to infer that there was no occupant, on the ground that we are to presume the Sheriff did his duty, and would have delivered a copy to the occupant, if there had been one; and if we assume that there was, in fact, no occupant, then it was the duty of the Sheriff to post on the premises a copy of the attachment. The return does not show that this was done, but only that a “notice” was posted on the premises. The purport of this “notice” does not appear; but if it did, the Sheriff had no authority to substitute a notice for the copy which the statute required to be posted.

Section one hundred and forty-one of the code requires the Sheriff to return an attachment "with a certificate of his proceedings indorsed thereon, or attached thereto." It is his duty to state in his return what acts he performed in serving the writ, in order that the Court may be enabled to decide upon its sufficiency to constitute a valid service.

We must assume, therefore, that in these returns the Sheriff stated all he did toward making the service; and as these acts did not constitute a valid service, there was no lien created by the attachments.

In Main v. Tappener, ante, 206, we held that, in order to create a lien, the requisite acts must not only be performed by the officer, but that they must be performed in the order prescribed by the statute.

It results from these views that the attachments under which the plaintiff claims created no lien on the property; and the judgments, on which the executions issued, not having been docketed until after the deed to Peyton was executed and delivered, there was no judgment lien, to which the Sheriff's deed could relate, so as to overreach the legal title then held by Peyton, and now vested in the defendant, Baird.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this form of action.

This view of the case renders it unnecessary to decide the other questions presented on the appeal.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

EXECUTORS OF THE LAST WILL OF CHARLES S. LORD, DECEASED.

DEED OF GIFT.—A deed of gift of a portion of the community property, made by the husband, is not void per se.

IDEM.—If such deed be made with the intent of defeating the claims of the wife in the community property, the transaction is tainted with fraud.

IDEM.—In the absence of fraudulent intent, a voluntary disposition of a portion of the community property, reasonable in reference to the whole amount, may be made by the husband.

IDEM.—The pendency of a suit for divorce does not of itself interrupt the husband's powers in relation to his right of sale of the community property, although he cannot, with the intent to deprive the wife of her claims, in anticipation of a divorce, make a voluntary conveyance of any portion of the community property.

DEED OF GIFT BY HUSBAND TO HIS MOTHER.—A deed of gift of community property, of the value of four thousand dollars, made by a husband worth one hundred thousand dollars, to his mother, in consideration of love and affection, is not unreasonable in amount.

IDEM.—If a husband, pending a suit for a divorce, procures his mother to live with him, and take charge of his infant children, on a promise of providing for her, and makes her a deed of a portion of the community property, these circumstances show that he is not actuated by a fraudulent intent towards his wife in making the deed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

In the divorce suit spoken of in the opinion, C. S. Lord obtained a divorce in 1867, and the Court, in its decree, awarded him the custody of his three infant children, and decreed that he pay his wife one hundred dollars per month during her natural life, or in lieu thereof, the sum of ten thousand dollars, at his election. Afterwards, and September 21st, 1867, the Court granted the defendant a new trial, and the plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court from the order granting the new trial. This appeal was pending at the time of his death.

Argument for Appellant.

September 30th, 1867, Lord made the will spoken of in the opinion, in which he devised his property to his executors, to hold in trust; among other things, to pay the sum decreed by the Court to his wife, if the order granting a new trial was reversed, and the judgment remained in force. The will also confided the care and custody of his infant children to his mother.

This action was brought to have the deed of Lord to his mother declared fraudulent and void, and to have the same canceled. The defendant had judgment in the Court below, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Quint & Hardy, for Appellant.

The right of the husband to dispose of the common property is restricted to the ordinary cases of sales for proper consideration. (In re Buchanan's Estate, 8 Cal. 507; Smith v. Smith et al., 12 Cal. 224.)

The fact that the suit for divorce was pending placed all the common property in custody of the law, and while it may be conceded for the purposes of this case that the husband might have changed the character of the property—i. e., might have converted lands into money or stocks or securities—it seems to us manifest that the wife would have been entitled at the termination of that action to such a share of all the common property owned when the suit was brought as the Court might then have determined to be proper. (Hittell's Dig., Art. 3574.)

If the husband cannot make a bequest of more than half of the common property, to take effect at his death, by what rule shall we say that he can make a gift to take effect before his death? As we understand the law, the husband is the trustee of the wife, and by authority of the statute is permitted to manage her estate. He may exchange it—may convert her money into lands, or sell her lands for money.

Argument for Respondents.

This he may very well do, because the wife may always be able to secure an equivalent for her property. But when the husband undertakes to dispose of her property by gift he is acting in violation of the trust. (Swaine v. Perrine, 5 John. Ch. 488; Black v. Jones, 1 A. K. Marshall, 312; Petty v. Petty, 4 B. Monroe, 215; Quistet v. Quistet, Wright's Ohio Rep. 492.)

This conveyance was in fraud of the rights of the wife for the following reasons: The husband and wife were living apart from each other, and he was prosecuting a suit against her for a divorce. His conduct towards his wife proved his disposition to injure her. His testamentary disposition of all the community property shows that it was his purpose to deprive her of the whole of the real estate belonging to the community. The attempt to deprive the appellant of the custody of her children shows the animus of the husband in making the conveyance.

McRae & Rhodes, for Respondents.

A wife's interest, during the coverture, in the common property, like an heir's, is a mere expectancy. The husband can sell, mortgage, manage, and control it to any extent (barring actual fraud), and the wife has no remedy; error of judgment is no ground for the interference of a Court. (1 Hitt. Dig., Art. 3571, Sec. 9; Van Dusen v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 310; citing Grice v. Lawrence, 2 La. An. 226.)

A deed is not void if founded on consideration when it conveys community property, even after suit for divorce has been commenced, provided there be estate enough left to compensate the wife for her half interest in the estate so given away; and this in the face of an express statute law to the contrary. (Hagerty v. Harwell, 16 Tex. 663.)

We ask this Court to inspect the above case especially. It shows conclusively that the deed of the husband cannot be attacked, even in case of fraud; but the remedy of the wife is to sue the executors for the amount of the difference, to which by law she would be entitled. (Monroe v. Leigh, 15 Tex. 579; Grice v. Lawrence, 2 La. An. 226; Hagerty v. Harwell, 16 Tex. 663; Peck v. Brummagin, 31 Cal. 440; Wright v. Hays, 10 Tex. 130; Stamler v. Coe, 16 Tex. 663.)

Opinion of the Court — NILES, J.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The plaintiff was the widow of C. S. Lord, deceased. C. S. Lord died in July, 1868, leaving estate of the value of from one hundred thousand to two hundred thousand dollars, all of which was common property of plaintiff and deceased; and a will, appointing the defendants, Wooster, Knight, and Nudd, his executors. On the 7th of April, 1868, Lord conveyed to his mother, Olive S. Hough, one of the defendants, a parcel of land at Menlo Park, containing about six and three quarter acres, and then of the value of about four thousand dollars. The deed purported to be in consideration of natural affection.

Prior to the execution of the deed, C. S. Lord had instituted proceedings for a divorce against the plaintiff, and had obtained, by order of the District Court, the temporary custody of the three infant children of the marriage. This suit was pending when he died.

In November, 1867, he visited his mother, then a resident of the State of New York, and agreed with her that if she would leave her then residence and go to California, and take charge of the children, he would provide liberally for her support. She consented, and came to this State in March, 1868, and from that time had the entire charge and care of the children, and resided upon the premises afterwards conveyed to her.

The plaintiff claims that the conveyance should be decreed to be void, as being voluntary and in derogation of her rights in the common property.

Opinion of the Court — NILES, J.

A deed of gift of a portion of the common property by the husband is not void per se. If the gift be made with the intent of defeating the claims of the wife in the common property, the transaction would be tainted with fraud. In the absence of such fraudulent intent, a voluntary disposition of a portion of the property, reasonable in reference to the whole amount, is authorized by the statute which gives to the husband the absolute power of disposition of the common property as of his own separate estate. This doctrine was recognized, although not expressly decided, in the cases of Smith v. Smith, 12 Cal. 225; and Peck v. Brummagin, 31 Cal. 446.

The pendency of proceedings for a divorce does not, of itself, interrupt the exercise of the husband's powers. The property does not come into the custody of the Court by the institution of the suit. The husband has still the control of it and full power of disposition of it. He is held to equal good faith in all transactions relating to it, as before the commencement of the suit. He is subject to the same restrictions in its disposal. He cannot make a voluntary conveyance of any portion of the property with the intent to deprive the wife of her claims, in anticipation of the divorce, any more than he could make such fraudulent disposition in anticipation of her widowhood.

The circumstances surrounding the transaction afford no sufficient evidence of fraudulent intent upon the part of Lord. No inference of such intent can be drawn from the relative values of the land conveyed by him to the defendant, and of the entire property. A gift of four thousand dollars to his mother, by a man worth over one hundred thousand dollars, is certainly not unreasonable in amount. Nor do the terms of the will of Lord show any fraudulent design in the conveyance to the defendant. Whatever fraudulent intent he may have had at the time he made the will was consummated so far as he could consummate it by the execution of that instrument. We cannot assume that it affected every subsequent act in relation to the property. His intent in making the conveyance must be determined from the circumstances attending that transaction, and the intent evinced by his act of six months before could aid but little in such determination.

On the other hand, the agreed facts show the utmost good faith upon the part of Lord. The care and management of the infant children, which was being exercised by the defendant when the conveyance was made, and which continued thereafter, would constitute a valuable consideration, if it clearly appeared that the property was given in exchange for these services. At least these circumstances are sufficient to show that Lord was not actuated by fraudulent motives in the transaction, but by a laudable desire to make provision for the care of his children, who were dependant upon him for support.

JOHN A. CARDINELL v. J. P. O'DOWD, P. J. McMAHON, M. NOLAN, AND PATRICK DURKIN.

STATEMENT ON APPEAL.—A statement made in view of a motion for a new trial may be considered on an appeal from the judgment, if the parties stipulate "that the statement may be used as settled statement on motion for new trial and on appeal to the Supreme Court."

APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS MADE ON INDEBTEDNESS.—If a party who is indebted on several promissory notes, all held by the same person, makes a payment of money to the holder and directs it to be applied on one of the notes, but the holder applies it on other notes than the one directed, and the payor afterwards acquiesces and takes the notes upon which the application was made, this is a ratification of the application made by the creditor.

Argument for Respondents.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The note sued on was given for seven hundred and eighty dollars, but the complaint alleged that there was due on it four hundred and fifty-eight dollars and thirty-five cents, with interest from October 6th, 1869, at one and one quarter per cent per month.

Judgment was rendered for the defendants December 8th, 1870, and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment. The statement filed contained this heading:

"Statement on motion for a new trial and on appeal, should said motion be overruled."

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Quint & Hardy, for Appellant.

It may be conceded that a debtor at the time of making a payment has the right to direct as to the particular indebtedness to which such payment shall be applied; but when the creditor does not so apply the payment, but does subsequently make an application which is acquiesced in and agreed to by the debtor, he is bound by the application made with his assent and concurrence. (American Leading Cases, p. 288, and cases there cited; Sturgis v. Robbins, 7 Mass. 301; Brewer v. Knapp, 1 Pick. 332; Logan v. Mason, 6 Watts and Serg. 9; Moss v. Adams, 4 Iredell Eq. 42.)

J. C. Bates, for Respondents.

The cases cited by appellant have not the slightest application to the facts of this case.

"A party paying is not allowed so to appropriate as to effect the relative right of his sureties." (Parsons on Bills and Notes, pp. 222, 223; Merrimack Co. Bank v. Brown, 12 N. H. 320; Myers v. United States, 1 McLean, 493; Postmaster General v. Norvell, 1 Gilp. 106.)

Opinion of the Court — Belcher, J.

And a fortiori such party would not be allowed subsequently to do any act by way of acquiescence or ratification to revive the liabilities of his indorsers or sureties.

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

The objection that the statement was made in view of a motion for a new trial and therefore cannot be considered on an appeal from the judgment, is not well taken. The parties stipulated that the statement might be "used as settled statement on motion for new trial and on appeal to the Supreme Court." It was held in Hastings v. Halleck, 13 Cal. 203, that a similar stipulation was "sufficiently broad to include any appeal which plaintiff should elect to prosecute in the cause."

The action is upon a promissory note, and the defendants plead payment made by Nolan. At the time of the alleged payment the note was held by the City Bank of Savings, Loan, and Discount, as were also three other notes upon which Nolan was liable as maker or indorser. In September Nolan paid to the bank four hundred dollars, and in October, five hundred dollars. He instructed the clerk who received the money, he says, to apply the payments on the note in suit, so far as was necessary to pay it in full, and the balance on the other notes. All of the four hundred dollars was applied to the payment of the other notes, and a portion of the five hundred dollars. The other notes were delivered up to him, but according to his testimony, not till December, when he says: "I did not want to accept them, but he put them on the counter and I took them away."

Murphy, a witness on the part of the plaintiff and President of the bank, testified that "Nolan came in with either four hundred dollars or five hundred dollars, and he wanted to pay some money on this note; I asked why he did not pay his own notes; he then took one or two of his own notes;

Opinion of the Court — Belcher, J.

Kenny handed me his notes; I think it was two; I saw him take the notes at the time the money was paid; think it was in September or October; I don't know whether it was four hundred dollars or five hundred dollars he paid at the time; I cannot state whether it was the first or second payment the other notes were delivered." On cross-examination he said: "I think it was about the first of October; I recollect I was in the bank and saw Nolan paying once; all his notes were then handed, in my presence, to him."

There was other testimony tending to show that Murphy was not present when the second payment was made.

Counsel for plaintiff asked the Court to instruct the jury in reference to the first payment of four hundred dollars, "That if, at the time said payment was made by Nolan, it was paid on other notes and the notes given up to him at the time, then no part of said four hundred dollars could apply on this note. And that though Nolan did direct the application of this money to the payment of the note in question, yet that the holder did not so apply it, but applied it to the payment of other notes against Nolan, and he afterwards received it and acquiesced in such application, and took and received the notes upon which such application was made and paid. Then, and in that event, it would be a ratification of the application made by the creditor."

The Court refused to give the instruction, and this is the principal error relied on for a reversal of the judgment.

It is clear that the first portion of the proposed instruction, if it had stood alone, and there was testimony to warrant it, should have been given. Counsel object that there was no such testimony, but they overlook the testimony of Murphy, which at least tended to show the exact state of facts supposed.

The rule invoked in the second proposition of the instruction is thus stated by Mr. Greenleaf: "After a payment has been rightfully ascribed to one of several debts, it is not in the power of either party alone to change it. But if both parties consent, the ascription may be changed to another; in which case the indebtedment discharged by the former appropriation of the money is revived." (2 Greenl. Ev., Sec. 532 a.)

Argument for Appellants.

We think the instruction should have been given as asked. Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

JAMES LICK v. ALEXANDER AUSTIN; AND CHRISTIAN REIS AND GUSTAVE REIS v. ALEXANDER AUSTIN.

DOUBLE TAXATION.—If land subject to a mortgage is taxed, and the debt secured by the mortgage is also taxed, and the tax on the debt is paid by the mortgagee, the mortgagor cannot complain of double taxation.

ASSESSMENT FOR TAXES.—In assessing land for taxation, the Assessor cannot deduct from its value the amount due on mortgages by which it is incumbered, and call the remainder its assessed value.

IDEM.—Query? Is the statute allowing the Assessor to deduct from solvent debts due the taxpayer, the amount of his indebtedness, constitutional?

IDEM.—Choses in action are property subject to taxation, even when secured by mortgage.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiffs appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Jackson Temple, for Appellants.

In the case of The People v. McCreery, the Court was asked to hold that the lender or mortgagee was subject to double taxation, because he was taxed the full amount of his mortgage, and the mortgagor the full amount of the property mortgaged. This Court intimated that the mortgagor was subjected to double taxation, but declined to pass upon the question, for the reason that the mortgagor alone could complain of it, and intimated also that there was no difference between the case of a mortgagor and any other debtor. We now present the case on the part of the mortgagor and debtor — the party which this Court in the McCreery case have said can complain of the assessment, if any one can.

Argument for Appellants.

It is double taxation.

This proposition can hardly be made plainer by argument or illustration. If property is taxed at its full value, and then the credit it gives the owner, one of its attributes, is also taxed, it is evident that there is double taxation somewhere. The common illustration is this: A. loans B. one hundred dollars. B. purchases a horse of C. for the money. A. is taxed one hundred dollars because B. owes it to him. B. is taxed one hundred dollars, the value of the horse. C. is taxed one hundred dollars for the money in his hands.

The injustice of this system of taxation is not noticed for the first time in California; the same conflict of interest has been carried on in other States, and will continue until a more just and enlightened system is adopted. In other States, however, where the power of the Legislature is not restricted as in California, the question has been solved by merely asserting the omnipotence of the Legislature, although the injustice of the system is acknowledged. (People v. Worthington, 21 Ill. 171; The State v. Bronin, 3 Zabriskie, 494; 4 Zabriskie, 255; 7 Hill, 268-286; 10 Mass. 514.)

These unjust laws would probably never have existed but for two ideas which, in my opinion, are radically erroneous. The mistake is made by Legislatures and by the Courts in considering a chose in action property, within the meaning of the Revenue Law. At first a chose in action was not considered property. It was not assignable. It is a mere right of action to recover something. It is not a right to the thing itself. Property, strictly, is ownership of the thing owned. A right of action is neither, and must not for a moment be confounded with a right to recover property which a party owns but is not possessed of. A right resting in contract is not a right to any specific thing; when money is loaned, the title to the property loaned passes to the borrower, who must convert the property in order to use it. It is apparent upon slight reflection that, if no chose in action were assessed or taxed, still all the wealth of the country would be taxed at its full value. All property possessing value in itself would be taxed, but the State would not tax property at its full value and the credit it gives also; or, in other words, would not tax property to one person, and the right of action to acquire the ownership of the same property, to another. And I think this system would distribute the burdens of government equally. But one other theory of taxation occurs to me which would distribute the burdens of taxation equally, and that is to tax every one in proportion to the value of his estate — for what he is worth. This is the theory of the McCreery case, as I understand it.

The question whether the amount of the incumbrance should be deducted from the value of the mortgaged property, or the total indebtedness of the taxpayer should be deducted from the aggregate valuation of his estate, is not very material. The result would be the same in either case, and the pleadings in this case are so framed as to meet either view.

The constitutional provision requires all property to be taxed at its value — that is to say, at its market value, for there is no other rule. The market value is what it will bring in its present condition. Whenever real estate which is mortgaged is sold, the vendor is required to have the mortgaged discharged, or the amount due upon the mortgage is invariably deducted from the purchase money, or else the property is sold for an amount less than it otherwise would be, just equal to the mortgage debt. The market value of the property, therefore, is obviously just the amount of the debt less than it otherwise would be.

Joseph M. Nougues, for Respondent.

The only provision of the Constitution supposed to bear upon the questions presented by the pleadings is found in section thirteen of Article XI, which provides that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law." Turning to the statute, we find that in section five (Hittell's Digest, Sec. 6154) the property which is the subject of taxation is clearly defined, and the method of ascertaining its value for the purposes of taxation is directed. Among this property which is the subject of taxation is real estate; and no provision is made for deducting from the sum of its assessed value any indebtedness of the owner in possession. In Article 6289 of Hittell's Digest we find a provision, as follows:

"* * * In the case of a mortgage of real estate the mortgagor shall pay the taxes on the value of the property."

It must be apparent that under the clause of the Constitution to which we have referred the power to ascertain valuations for purposes of taxation is given to the Legislature — "ascertained as directed by law" is the phrase; that is to say, ascertained as directed by the statute. That is the only law meant, for the Constitution does not, in itself, attempt to point out the method by which such valuation shall be ascertained.

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

These actions were brought against the Tax Collector to enjoin the sale of certain real estate for the non-payment of taxes. It is alleged in the complaints that the real estate, when it was assessed, was subject to certain mortgages; that the Assessor was duly informed of that fact, but that he assessed the real estate without regard to, or making any deduction on account of, the mortgages; that applications were made to the Board of Equalization to reduce the assessment in each case, on account of the mortgages, but the applications were refused; and that in each case the plaintiff tendered to the Collector the amount that would be due for taxes on the valuation of the property, as made by the Assessor, less the amount of the mortgages upon the real estate, but the tender was refused. The demurrer to each complaint was sustained.

The question discussed by counsel is whether the facts alleged in the complaint show cases of double taxation. It is not alleged that the valuation, as made by the Assessor, of the several parcels of land, was in excess of their real value. It is not, therefore, double taxation, in view of the real value of the land. It is not alleged that the taxes on the mortgages were paid; but if they were paid by the respective mortgagors, they were so paid, not by virtue of any statutory requirements, but voluntarily, or by virtue of a contract, and, therefore, the mortgagors could not complain either of the law or its administration in that respect by the revenue officers. If the taxes on the mortgages were paid by the mortgagees, the mortgagors cannot complain that their land was subject to double taxation. It was held in People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 482, that a solvent debt secured by a mortgage is property, within the meaning of the constitutional provision in respect to taxation, and as such was subject to taxation as the property of the mortgagees. It being the duty of the mortgagee to pay the taxes assessed upon the mortgage debt, the mortgagor, when assessed for the land, has no legal cause of complaint, that the mortgagee has paid, or is liable for the payment of, the taxes on the mortgage debt.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

The only plausible ground assumed by the plaintiffs, is that real estate subject to a mortgage should be assessed at its value, less the amount of the mortgaged debt, because the excess, if any, of the value of the land over the mortgage debt is the true value of the mortgagor's interest in the land. The Constitution and laws might have been so framed as to work that result, but they were not. The Constitution, section thirteen, Article XI, provides that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value; and the revenue law provides that the Assessor shall ascertain the value of each parcel of property, etc.; but it is nowhere provided that the aggregate amount of the taxpayer's debts shall be deducted from the valuation of his property, nor that his indebtedness shall be deducted from the valuation of any of his property, except from his solvent debts. Whether that provision of the statute is valid is not a question in this case; but assuming that the statute in that respect is valid, it clearly shows that the solvent debts of the taxpayer are the only property from which he is permitted to deduct his indebtedness.

The plaintiffs have favored us with an able argument, to show that choses in action are not property, within the sense of that term, as used in section thirteen, Article XI, of the Constitution. By tracing the law back to an early day in the history of the common law, it will be found, as is claimed by the plaintiffs, that choses in action were not regarded as property; and not far from the same period it will be found that a mortgage was regarded as a conveyance of the legal title to real estate; but in the progress of commerce, aided by a more enlightened system of jurisprudence, both rules have been revised, and now a mortgage is regarded as a mere security for the payment of a debt; and a chose in action has been so much elevated above its former status that the mortgage debt is regarded as the principal thing and the mortgage scarcely more than its attendant shadow. Indeed, choses in action have assumed such dignity, that we now find cases in which a plea of payment is held to be sustained by proof of the assignment of a bill or promissory note. Had the plaintiffs succeeded in sustaining their position, it is not perceived how it would aid them in maintaining their point as to double taxation. If the mortgage debts are not property, and if, notwithstanding that, the mortgagees have been assessed for their nominal value, and have paid the taxes thereon, the mortgagors are no more affected thereby, and have no greater cause of complaint, than they would have had the mortgagees been taxed for the assumed value of something which never had any existence. People v. Kohl, 40 Cal. 127, is not in point, for there the owner of the land was taxed, in the same fiscal year, on the value of the land and on the purchase money — the promissory note -- received on the sale of the land.

In our opinion the real estate of the plaintiffs was properly assessed at its full value, without any regard to mortgages which were liens thereon, or without deducting the mortgage debts from the valuation of the real estate.

LEGAL TITLE NOT DIVESTED BY FORECLOSURE SALE.—A proceeding in foreclosure instituted against a mortgagor alone, cannot overreach or affect the title of a vendee of the mortgagor, vesting intermediate the delivery of the mortgage and the commencement of the action to foreclose it.

DEED AS MORTGAGE.—Under a plea of the general issue in ejectment, a deed absolute in form cannot be attacked on the ground that it was in fact intended to be a mortgage.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

This was an action of ejectment to recover the undivided half of lot number three in the block bounded by I and J, and Front and Second streets, in the City of Sacramento.

Statement of Facts.

In August, 1849, John S. Fowler, the owner of the lot, conveyed an undivided half of it to Samuel Brannan. In September following Brannan leased to Fowler his half of the lot, together with the City Hotel thereon, for one year, at an annual rental of twenty-five thousand dollars, and at the same time executed to Brannan a mortgage upon his half of the property to secure the payment of the rent, which mortgage was duly recorded. On the 10th of June, 1850, Brannan sold and conveyed his interest in the lot to Talbot H. Green, and on the sixth of August following, sold and transferred the lease and mortgage to Green. During the term of the lease—from October 1st, 1849, to October 1st, 1850—Fowler carried on the business of a hotel in the building situated on the lot, and W. R. McCracken was his clerk. Three days after the lease had expired, the rent being in part unpaid, Green commenced an action to foreclose the mortgage. At that date McCracken had in his possession an unrecorded deed from Fowler of his interest in the premises, dated September 10th, 1850, taken as security for the payment of his services as clerk. He was not made a party defendant in the foreclosure suit. He had the deed recorded December 5th, 1850. Green obtained a judgment in the foreclosure suit for nine thousand six hundred and eighty-seven dollars, and at the sale thereunder he was the purchaser, bidding four thousand dollars, and receiving from the Sheriff a deed for Fowler's interest in the property. In April, 1851, Green deeded the lot to W. D. M. Howard; and in the ensuing month Howard commenced an action against Fowler and McCracken to recover possession of the premises. The defendants appeared and denied the title of the plaintiff in that action, but they afterwards surrendered the possession to Howard, and on motion of the plaintiff the action was dismissed. Howard soon afterwards made valuable improvements upon the property, and remained in possession until he died in 1856. The defendants are tenants of Howard's heirs. In 1867 McCracken executed a deed conveying all his interest in the lot to the plaintiff Davenport, having taken no previous steps to assist his title.

Argument for Appellants.

This action was commenced in October, 1867. At the trial the defendants introduced evidence tending to prove the existence of a copartnership between Howard and Green in 1849-50, and that the mortgage assigned to Green by name was in fact an assignment to the firm.

The plaintiff had judgment and the defendants appealed.

This case was before the Supreme Court at the January Term, 1871, on appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendants. (See 41 Cal. 101.)

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

A. P. Catlin, for Appellants.

The delivery of possession was as effectual in equity as if in the suit then pending judgment had gone against McCracken. In that suit Howard might have recovered by proving just what McCracken stated the fact to be, connected with his deed from Fowler, namely: that his deed was only a mortgage to secure payment for his services as Fowler's clerk. Such a recovery would have been a good record estoppel against McCracken. Why, then, do not his acts, voluntarily executing the same thing, with full knowledge of the condition of his own title, constitute an estoppel in pais? This transaction has all the elements of an estoppel in pais. If McCracken had not abandoned his claim, and delivered over the property, Howard could have had the sale under the foreclosure set aside, the decree opened, McCracken made a party, and his interest sold. Howard was led to waive these steps, which would have extinguished McCracken's interest. Assuming the latter to have held the legal title, would it not be a fraud on his part to lie by until it was too late for Howard to avail himself of his remedy, and then assert his title? The act of McCracken in aban-

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, C. J.

doing the only claim which he said he had on the property, to wit: his claim for his services, in delivering possession to Howard, and in acquiescing therein until Howard's remedy was barred, was a continuing act by which the latter was placed in a worse position than he otherwise would have been. (Bowman v. Cudworth, 31 Cal. 148.) McCracken also put himself in a better position by acting as he did, because he thereby obtained a much longer lease of time in which he might redeem. Howard became a mortgagee in possession by consent of the mortgagor, and was entitled to retain such possession until satisfaction of the mortgage debt, or at least until a demand for an accounting and a refusal to account. A mortgagee in possession cannot be evicted by the mortgagor or any one claiming under him until the debt is paid. (Waring v. Smythe, 2 Barb. Ch. 135; Friesche v. Kramer, 16 Ohio, 125; Walson v. Spence, 20 Wend. 260; Smith v. Smith, 15 N. H. 55; Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609; Skinner v. Buck, 29 Cal. 253; 2 Halst. 178.)

W. S. Mesick, and Beatty & Denson, for Respondents.

There was no turpitude in this case, and therefore it does not come within the definition of estoppel in pais. (Biddle Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 40.)

The mortgage debt was merged in the judgment and sale. The relation of mortgagor and mortgagee no longer existed after the sale. Howard, in fact, had nothing to do with the mortgage. (Naglee v. Macy, 9 Cal. 426; Johnson v. Sherman, 15 Cal. 293; Robinson v. Russell, 24 Cal. 472; Smith v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 88; Bolton v. Landers, 27 Cal. 104.)

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

Both parties attempt to deraign title to the undivided half of the premises in contest from John S. Fowler—the plaintiff, through the conveyance of Fowler, made to McCracken in September, 1850, recorded in December following, and the defendants, through the foreclosure of the mortgage to Brannan, made by Fowler, and recorded in September, 1849. The action to foreclose the mortgage was brought in October, 1850, after the delivery of the deed to McCracken. It was brought against Fowler alone, and the deed to McCracken was already of record before the decree of foreclosure was rendered, and, of course, before the Sheriff's sale thereunder was made. That the legal title thus vested in McCracken was not divested by the foreclosure sale and Sheriff's deed is clear and unquestionable, for it is settled in this State that a proceeding in foreclosure, instituted against a mortgagor alone, cannot overreach or affect the title of a vendee of the mortgagor vesting intermediate the delivery of the mortgage and the commencement of the action to foreclose it. (Carpentier v. Williamson, 25 Cal. 161, and cases there cited.)

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

But the defense mostly relied upon is of an equitable character. It is alleged that McCracken, the grantee of Fowler, surrendered possession to the holder of the Sheriff's deed in foreclosure, and so abandoned his claim, and that ever since then, during a period of many years, the possession has been held under the foreclosure title without challenge or objection. The principal facts upon this point are that the holder of the Sheriff's deed (being at the time the undisputed owner of the other undivided half of the premises) brought an action against Fowler and McCracken as being in possession, in which he sought to recover the entire premises. In that action both defendants appeared and filed an answer, in which they denied the title of the plaintiff there. No trial was had, nor judgment rendered upon the merits; but the action was dismissed, and the defendants defendants therefore established the existence of the copartnership between Howard and Green in 1849-50, and so proven that the mortgage assigned to Green by name was thus really assigned to Howard and Green, it would not have aided them in the defense.

It is lastly claimed that the judgment cannot be supported, because, as is said, it is clearly shown that the instrument from Fowler to McCracken, purporting to be a deed of conveyance, was, in fact, a conveyance by way of mortgage merely—and this point is much discussed by counsel on each side. I am of opinion, however, that it does not arise in the case. Under the general issue pleaded it was not competent to the defendants to attack the McCracken deed on the alleged ground that it was a mortgage, and for the purpose of defeating its otherwise legal effect as being an absolute deed of conveyance, which it purports upon its face to be. This point must be considered as settled here by the case of Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117. If the defendants had therefore had an interest in making it appear that the McCracken deed was a mortgage, they must have resorted to the equity side of the Court for that purpose; and applying there they must, of course, have averred it to be such in the pleading. We have searched in vain to find any such allegation in the defense here pleaded by these defendants. There is no attempt made in that direction; on the contrary, the distinct averment of the defendants is, that the McCracken deed was a conveyance of the title of Fowler, and was intended by the parties as such; a conveyance by which, as they allege, the title was vested in the grantee in secret trust for the grantor and to defraud the creditors of the grantor.

In view of this state of the pleadings, no question could be made as to whether or not the McCracken deed was intended as a mortgage.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

March 24th, 1848, T. M. Leavenworth, the then Alcalde of San Francisco, granted to Jacob D. Hoppe the one hundred vara lot described as follows:

“A lot of land containing one hundred varas square, in

Statement of Facts.

the vicinity of the Town of San Francisco, and bounded by the extension of the following streets: South by Union street, west by Battery street, north by Filbert street, and east by a line parallel with Battery street, one hundred varas eastward from the same."

On the 13th of June, 1849, Hoppe conveyed the same to the plaintiff. Said grant was included in the provisions of section two of the Act passed March 26th, 1851, entitled an Act to provide for the disposition of certain property in the State of California. The plaintiff purchased the same property from the State of California, at the sale made under the provisions of "An Act to provide for the sale of the interest of the State of California in the property within the water line front of the City of San Francisco," approved May 18th, 1853, and received a deed therefor November 2d, 1854, from the Board of Land Commissionera. The deed of the State described the property as follows:

"Commencing at the southwest corner of Front and Filbert streets; thence westerly along Filbert street two hundred and seventy-five feet to Battery street; thence at right angles southerly along Battery street, two hundred and seventy-five feet to Union street; thence at right angles easterly along Union street two hundred and seventy-five feet to Front street; thence at right angles northerly along Front street, two hundred and seventy-five feet to the place of beginning; being lots 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, and 396, in the block bounded by Filbert, Battery, Union, and Front streets, as subdivided by the Board of California Land Commissioners. Together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, which are or may hereafter be the property of the State of California; and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof, which may be due or become due to the Statement of Facts.

State of California; and also all the estate, right, title, interest, property, possession, claim, and demand whatsoever, as well in law as in equity, of the said party of the first part, of, in, or to the above described premises, and every part and parcel thereof, with the appurtenances as aforesaid. To have and to hold, all and singular, the above mentioned and described premises, together with the appurtenances as aforesaid, unto the said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns forever."

At the time of the commencement of this suit the plaintiff was in the possession of said premises, by his tenants, and this action was commenced in February, 1871, for the purpose of restraining a nuisance and injury to his reversionary estate.

In the year 1852, plaintiff erected on the premises a large warehouse for the storage of merchandise, and built a wharf thereon, which from time to time he enlarged and improved, of some eighty feet in width, and between two hundred and three hundred feet in length. From the year 1852 till the commencement of this suit, the plaintiff and his tenants had continuously used said wharf for docking and berthing vessels of all sizes, engaged in foreign and inter-State commerce, which came directly and without impediment up to said wharf, and were in the enjoyment of large sums of money therefrom for dockage and wharfage, and used said warehouse, in connection therewith, for the storage of merchandise. A large trade had been drawn to said wharf, and the yearly income from its receipts was in excess of five thousand dollars.

Front street has never been actually used or constructed as a street, highway, or thoroughfare, or extended northwardly beyond the southerly line of Union street. The Board of Supervisors of the city and county had not, up to the time of the commencement of this action, nor at any time since, ordered or directed any portion of Front street as projected northerly beyond the southerly line of Union street, to be extended or constructed as a thoroughfare, street, or highway; and when vessels were berthed at plaintiff's wharf they were at the foot of Front street, and occupying what would be a portion of Front street when extended northerly to Filbert street. The value of said wharf as a means of commerce is fifteen thousand dollars; and without an open frontage on the navigable waters of the Bay of San Francisco, would be valueless. Up to the time of the alleged wrongs complained of by plaintiff, his said wharf and premises had always enjoyed an open and unobstructed water frontage on said bay.

Prior to the commencement of this action, no compensation or tender or offer of compensation for depriving plaintiff of the beneficial use of his property had been made, or in any manner secured to him by any one.

The wharf which defendants in their answer aver they were about to construct, would, if built to Battery street, completely inclose and shut out the said wharf and premises of plaintiff from all communication by means of water craft, with the navigable waters of said bay.

On the 12th day of January, 1871, John J. Marks, Jasper O'Farrell, and Washington Bartlett, the State Harbor Commissioners, entered into a contract with the defendants to construct a wharf in the navigable waters of the bay, in front of the plaintiff's wharf. It was the construction of this wharf the plaintiff sought in this action to enjoin. The defendants, in their answer, relied on their contract with the State Harbor Commissioners as a defense. The Court below granted a perpetual injunction as to so much of the wharf proposed to be erected by the defendants as was within the red or water front line of the City and County of San Francisco, established by an Act of the Legislature of the State of California entitled "An Act to provide for the disposition of certain property of the State of California," passed March 26th, 1851.

The Court denied the injunction as to the construction of so much of said wharf as was outside of said red or water front line of 1851—that is to say, "as to so much of the same as surrounds the premises of plaintiff, commencing at the northerly line of Union street, running thence to the northerly line of Greenwich street, thence westerly at right angles along Greenwich street, to the easterly or red line of Battery street." From that portion of the judgment denying the injunction the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Hambleton & Gordon, for Appellants.

The establishment of the permanent water front of the City of San Francisco by the Act of March 26th, 1851, was a contract between the public and the property owners, and could not be changed or destroyed, except by the assertion of the right of eminent domain, followed by legal condemnation and compensation. The deed from the State of California, whereby was merged in the plaintiff the leasehold and revisionary estate of these premises in fee simple absolute, operated by way of estoppel, to preclude the State from subsequently destroying their ordinary and beneficial use without compensation. As to the State of California, the plaintiff was a riparian proprietor, and as such, has a right (though his strict legal title is bounded by the premises conveyed) to the water as appurtenant thereto.

The fencing in of the premises of plaintiff by the contemplated pier, is such a taking of private property, without just compensation, as is prohibited by our Constitution; and the damage to arise from such a barrier is not consequential or casual to the property, but a necessary and direct confiscation of the same, and cannot be justified by the maxim of damnum absque injuria. The power to obstruct navigation or travel must be clearly given, and when not given or transcended, the obstruction will be a nuisance. (Attorney General v. Stevens, Saxton N. J. 369; Newark Plank Road Co. v. Elmer, 1 Stockton Ch. N. J. 754; Attorney General v. Hudson River R. R. Co., 1 Stockton Ch. N. J. 527; Fletcher v. The Auburn R. R. Co., 25 Wend. 463; Hughes v. Providence R. Co., 2 Rhode Island, 493.)

The Court below having found so much of the projected pier as fell within the water front line illegal, and the contract therefor, ultra vires, should have restrained the whole proceeding, both by interlocutory order and final decree. The Court held a portion of this wharf, and the contract therefor, illegal, for the manifest reason that the Board had no power, within the water front line of 1851, for such purpose. But its relief should not have been stayed here. The resolutions of the Board and the advertisement look to but one entire contract, and the contract itself is indivisible and entire. Upon defendants' part, they were to build a pier of specified dimensions, and not otherwise. Upon the other part, the Board were to pay one single sum for the whole work. There was no such thing legally possible as an apportionment, either of the work or the relative price therefor. The whole contract must stand or fall together. (El Dorado County v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 523.)

Baron v. Mayor of Baltimore, 2 American Jurist, 203, is very similar in character to the litigation in hand, and the defense, so far as pleading State authorization, was identical. The owner of a wharf, in the harbor of Baltimore, sued the city authorities, acting under their charter, for shoaling the water around his wharf, by reason of introducing into the bay a large amount of drainage from their public works. The Court held that his easement in the navigable waters

By the last section of the Act of 1851, it is provided that “nothing in this Act shall be construed as a surrender by the State of its right to regulate the construction of wharves or other improvements, so that they shall not interfere with the shipping and commercial interests of the Bay and Harbor of San Francisco.” It seems to us that under that provision the city retained the right to build wharves, not only running at right angles with the city front, but parallel with it, and that to build a wharf on the outer seventy-five feet and parallel or longitudinal along the water front would be no violation of the faith of the State.

Appellant is not a riparian owner. “A riparian proprietor is one who owns land bordering upon a watercourse.” (2 Bouvier’s Law Dictionary, 447.)

To maintain his pretension to riparian rights, appellant must show: First—that he is the owner of land. Second—That said land borders upon a watercourse. Third—That said watercourse is a fresh water stream. Fourth—That the description of said land contained in the grant, or deed thereof, entitles him to riparian rights. By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The plaintiff, being the owner in possession of a private wharf, which would be rendered useless and valueless by the erection of the proposed wharf or landing place by the defendants, in the navigable waters of the bay, is entitled to a perpetual injunction, unless the defendants have shown a lawful right, derived from competent authority, to proceed with the contemplated work. The only authority which they produce is a contract entered into by them with the Board of State Harbor Commissioners, whereby they were employed to construct the proposed wharf. It is incumbent on the defendants to show affirmatively, not only that the Board had competent authority to order the work to be done, but that in awarding the contract for doing it they have substantially pursued the statute. Section nine of the Act of April 24th, 1863 (Stats. 1863, p. 406), organizing the Board of State Harbor Commissioners, requires that, in inviting bids for work to be done in the erection of wharves, "the advertisement for proposals shall contain an accurate description of the work to be done, with a full description of the materials to be used, and such other details as may be necessary to a correct understanding of the entire work to be performed." In the advertisement under which this contract was let, the Commissioners did not pursue the statute in several important particulars. It did not contain an accurate description of the work to be done, nor any description of the materials to be used, nor did the contract conform to the advertisement. On the contrary, a portion of the wharf, for which proposals were invited, was to be sixty-eight feet wide, whereas in the contract this portion was to be only forty feet wide. These departures from the requirements of the statute are fatal to the contract. The Commissioners derived their authority wholly from the statute, and the mode prescribed for performing their duties in letting contracts, is the measure of their power. They acquired no jurisdiction to enter into a contract for the performance of this work until they had, substantially at least, complied with the statute in the mode of inviting proposals. The provision requiring the advertisement to contain an accurate description of the work to be done, and a full description of the materials to be used, was intended not only to promote competition in bidding, but also to prevent collusion and an abuse of their authority by the Commissioners. It was intended to be not merely directory and to be disregarded by the Commissioners at their option, but is an imperative requirement, without a compliance with which they had no power or jurisdiction to let the contract, which was therefore void for want of authority to enter into it. It is well settled in this State and elsewhere, that when a statute prescribes the particular method in which a public officer, acting under a special authority, shall perform his duties, the mode is the measure of the power.

It is said, however, that this is a matter which does not concern the plaintiff, and that no person, except the parties to the contract or the State, can object to the contract on this ground. But this is a mistake. When one justifies what would otherwise be a trespass or a nuisance, under a license, permission, or power, derived from competent authority, it is incumbent on him to show affirmatively: first, that the authority was competent; second, that the license or power was duly granted. If he fails to show either, his defense fails. The defendants having failed to show any valid authority for erecting the wharf, the injunction was improperly dissolved as to any portion of the proposed work, and should have been made perpetual as to the whole.

Judgment and order dissolving the injunction reversed and cause remanded, with an order to the Court below to modify its judgment in accordance with this opinion.

J. W. HILL v. GEORGE KIDD.

BETS ON ELECTIONS — Wagers upon the result of public elections are illegal and void, upon grounds of public policy.

ACTION ON CONTRACT OF WAGER.—An action to obtain affirmative relief, upon a contract of wager made upon the result of a public election, cannot be maintained.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Hall & Montgomery, for Appellant.

Byers & Elliott, for Respondent.

By the Court, BELCHER, J.:

This is an action to recover the sum of one thousand dollars, alleged to be in the hands of the defendant, as the stakeholder of a wager made between the plaintiff and one McMullen upon the result of the Presidential election of 1868, in the State of California.

The wager was made on the 31st day of October, 1868, and the agreement was that each party should deposit — and each party did then deposit — in the hands of the defendant, the sum of one thousand dollars, to be held by him as stakeholder until after the Presidential election of that year, when, if it should be found that Seymour had received more votes in the State of California than Grant for the office of President of the United States, the stakes were to be paid to McMullen; and if Grant had received more votes than Seymour, the stakes were to be paid to the plaintiff.

The election was held on the third day of November, and Grant received the greater number of votes.

Upon demand, after the result of the election was made known, the defendant paid to the plaintiff one thousand dollars of the stakes, but refused to pay him the other one thousand dollars.

The defendant demurred to the complaint, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the Court overruled the demurrer. The defendant then answered, and, admitting that the wager was made substantially as stated in the complaint, alleged, among other things, that McMullen died on the 13th day of November, 1868, and that thereafter, upon demand, the defendant paid to his legal representatives the one thousand dollars deposited by him.

The answer was stricken out by the Court, on motion of plaintiff, "upon the ground that the event had occurred and been decided before notice of repudiation was served upon the defendant."

Judgment was then ordered, and entered for the plaintiff upon the complaint.

It is settled by all the cases where the question has arisen, so far as we know, that wagers upon the result of public elections are illegal and void, upon grounds of public policy.

It is equally well settled that no action in affirmance of an illegal contract can be maintained. When parties make such contracts they must rely upon the good faith of those with whom they deal for their performance, and that failing they are denied all redress. "The Courts," as was said in Martin v. Wade, 37 Cal. 168, "refusing to defile their hands with these transactions, deny the parties all relief in respect to the contract, or anything incidental to it, or growing out of it."

The case of Johnston v. Russell, 37 Cal. 670, is not authority for the plaintiff. In that case it was held that one may disaffirm a wagering contract at any time before the event in respect to which the wager is made has happened, and the result became known, but not afterwards. If he disaffirms he may recover back his stake; but "after the money has been lost and won, and the result is generally known, neither party ought to be heard in a Court of justice." (See, also, Rust v. Goff, 9 Cow: 169.)

The judgment is reversed, and the Court below is directed to enter an order dismissing the complaint.

Mr. Justice RHODES did not express an opinion.

GEORGE SCHMITT v. PEDRO GIOVANARI.

CONFIRMATION OF MEXICAN GRANT.—A confirmation of a grant of land made by Mexico, under the provisions of the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1851, necessarily requires a confirmee, and, although the confirmation may inure in law or in equity to the benefit of other persons than the confirmee, yet the person whose claim is confirmed is the confirmee.

SALE OF LAND UNDER SPANISH LAW.—By the Spanish law, the vendor of land was under the implied obligation to make his sale and conveyance effective, and a title afterwards acquired by him inured to the benefit of the vendee.

PERFECT TITLE ACQUIRED BY MEXICAN GRANT.—A grant of land by Mexico did not convey a perfect title, unless there was a segregation and a judicial delivery of the possession of the quantity of land granted.

PASSING TITLE TO MEXICAN LANDS.—The Spanish word "cedo" was the ordinary word used in Mexican conveyances to pass title to lands.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND UNDER MEXICAN LAW.—By the Mexican law, before the acquisition of California by the United States, it was not necessary that an instrument conveying land should express a consideration in order to pass the title of the vendor.

CONSTRUING DECREE CONFIRMING MEXICAN GRANT.—The construction given by the Supreme Court of the United States to its decree confirming a Mexican grant of land in California, is of binding authority in the State Courts.

EFFECT OF DECREE CONFIRMING MEXICAN GRANT.—A decree of a Court of the United States confirming a Mexican grant to one who had purchased from the original grantee, and which declared that the confirmation should be without prejudice to the legal representatives of the original grantee, and should inure to the benefit of any person who owned the land by any title derived from the original grantee, gives a perfect title to a purchaser from the conferee, who bought from him before he presented his petition for a confirmation to the Commissioners appointed under the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1851, as against one who bought from him after the confirmation.

PURCHASER FROM GRANTEE OF MEXICAN GRANT.—One who bought land included in a Mexican grant before the presentation of a petition for its confirmation, became entitled to have a confirmation of his claim, but if he neglected to apply for the same, and suffered his grantor to present a petition and have a confirmation made to such grantor, he must, in order to obtain the benefit of the confirmation, so far as the legal title is concerned, rely on the estoppel springing from his vendor's deed, unless there is a clause in the decree of confirmation giving him the benefit of the same.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Sonoma County.

The defendant recovered judgment in the Court below, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

William D. Bliss, for Appellant.

The grant made by Governor Alvarado to Peña was of a specific tract of land, with defined boundaries. Under that grant and the decree of the Departmental Assembly of the Californias, and the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, Peña and those holding under him acquired a perfect title in fee simple to all the land within those boundaries, including the premises in controversy. (Minturn v. Brower, 24 Cal. 644.)

The deed from Peña to Vallejo conveyed the title to the entire rancho.

The deed from Vallejo to Andres Hoepfner, dated August 12th, 1846, was sufficient, under the law then in force in California, to transfer the title to the land and the right of possession. (Havens v. Dale, 18 Cal. 359; Merle v. Matthews, 26 Cal. 455.)

As the deed was made to Hoepfner after his marriage, and for a valuable consideration, the land was acquired by onerous title, and became a part of the common property under the Mexican law. (Fuller v. Ferguson, 26 Cal. 546.)

Argument for Respondent.

Upon the death of Andres Hoepfner, intestate and without issue, the whole title to the land passed to his surviving wife. (Statute of Husband and Wife, 1850, Sec. 11.)

The deed from Anna Hoepfner to James R. Travers, and the conveyance from Travers to plaintiff, conveyed to plaintiff one undivided half of the rancho, and entitled him to a recovery against the defendant. (Collier v. Corbett, 15 Cal. 183; Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 361.)

B. S. Brooks, for Respondent.

The grant was an inchoate one, and the fee remained in the Government.

The instrument purporting to be a conveyance from Vallejo to Hoepfner, did not convey the title. On this point the ancient common law of England and that of Spain were almost identical. (See Schott v. Burton, 13 Barb. 173, and cases there cited.)

No authority can be cited to show that under the Spanish law the instrument would operate as a deed. (Febrero Novissimo 1, Tit. VI, Cap. 2; De los Instrumentos, ib., Lib. 2, Tit. IV, Cap. 2, Sec. 3; Hoen v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 121; Domat's Civil Law, Cushing's ed., Vol. 1, Art. 145.)

Hoepfner did not present his claim for confirmation, and so far as he was concerned the land became a part of the public domain. The whole grant was confirmed to Vallejo.

The object of the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States was to approve so much of the decree of the District Court as confirmed the claim presented, and to strike out the proviso added to it in the District Court, as matter over which the Board of Land Commissioners had no jurisdiction, and which they had often said could not be adjudicated in these proceedings. (United States v. Sutter, 21 How. S. C. R. 170; Townsend v. Greely, 5 Wallace, 535; United States v. Covillaud, 1 Black, 341.)

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

But the proviso could not, if it had any effect, inure to the benefit of the plaintiff. It went upon the supposed inefficacy of the deed from Peña to Vallejo, because Peña could not deed what he had not, and his deed did not convey the after-acquired title.

We believe it to be also established that the decree of confirmation vests the legal fee in the confirmee, and in him alone; that he is entitled to the possession of the land, and that any rights which others may claim through the same source of title must be asserted in a Court of equity; and that all claims of an imperfect or inchoate character, founded on Spanish or Mexican grants, not presented for confirmation, are extinguished. (Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 272; Touchard v. Crow, 20 Cal. 160; Castro v. Hendricks, 23 How. U. S. 441.)

By the Court, RHODES, J.:

Action of ejectment to recover possession of a portion of the Agua Caliente Rancho, which was granted to Lazaro Peña on the 13th day of July, 1840, by the Governor of California. On the 14th of December, 1839, Peña executed to M. G. Vallejo a formal conveyance, purporting to convey to him the rancho; and on the 12th of August, 1846, Vallejo executed and delivered to Andres Hoeppner an instrument in writing, which the plaintiff relies upon as a conveyance of the rancho. Hoeppner was then married to Anna Hoeppner, but between 1855 and 1858 he died intestate and without issue. Anna Hoeppner, December 21st, 1858, conveyed all her right, title, and interest in the rancho to Travers; and the plaintiff claims title to the undivided half of the rancho under that deed. Vallejo filed with the Board of Land Commissioners his petition for the confirmation of his claim to the rancho, and such proceedings were had in the matter that the claim was confirmed by the District Court in 1859; and in 1862 the decree was affirmed by the Supreme Court. The difference between the language of the decree of the District Court and the mandate of the Supreme Court will hereafter be noticed. It may, however, be remarked here, that a confirmation of a claim or title under the provisions of the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1851, necessarily requires a confirnee. Vallejo was the only petitioner; and although the confirmation may inure in law or in equity to the benefit of other persons, either by the terms of the decree of the District Court or by operation of law, the decree confirmed the claim of Vallejo, and he will be regarded as the confirnee. The defendants deraign title through two deeds executed by Vallejo in 1863 and 1864; and they also claim through another deed, which it is unnecessary now to notice. The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, J.

The date of the conveyance of Peña to Vallejo is 1839, while that of the grant is 1840. In confirming the grant the Supreme Court treated the date — 1839 — as a clerical error for 1840, and that must have been the view also of the District Court, for the claim of a petitioner will not be confirmed unless he show a prima facie title; and we are of the opinion that it must be regarded as a clerical error, and that 1840 was the true date of the execution of the conveyance.

If, however, we are wrong in this, then the operation of the deed, which was very full and formal, caused the title, when the grant was afterwards made to Peña, to inure to the benefit of Vallejo. Under the Spanish law the vendor was under the implied obligation to make his sale and conveyance effective. He was bound to defend the title, if notified of a suit brought against the purchaser, and if unsuccessful in this he was required to indemnify the purchaser. (See Schmidt, Civ. Law of Spain and Mex., 135; Fuero Juzgo. Law 9, Book 5, Title 4; Partidas, 5, Law 32, Title 5.)

It is insisted by the plaintiff that the grant to Peña conveyed a perfect title, and reliance is placed on the authority of Minturn v. Brower, 24 Cal. 644, to show that such title needed no confirmation under the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1851, and was unaffected by the confirmation to Vallejo. In that case it was conceded by the parties that a perfect title had been granted to Peralta, but we have not found in any subsequent case, in which that doctrine has been invoked, that the grantee acquired a perfect title. In this case it does not appear that the amount of land which was granted did not exceed the area within the boundaries mentioned, and the contrary will be inferred from the decree of the Departmental Assembly, by which the grant is approved "to the extent of two and a half leagues in length by a quarter of a league in width." A segregation and a judicial delivery of the possession of the quantity of land granted became essential to the vesting of a perfect title.

The plaintiff claims that the confirmation, whether it be regarded as a confirmation of the title granted by the Mexican Government, or only a confirmation of the claim of Vallejo, inured to the benefit of the vendees of Vallejo; and he relies not only upon the terms of the decree of the District Court, but also upon the rule in Estrada v. Murphy, 19 Cal. 272; Clark v. Lockwood, 21 Cal. 222; Wilson v. Castro, 31 Cal. 438, and other cases, that the confirmation of a claim under the provisions of the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1851, inures to the benefit of the grantees of the confirmee, so far as the legal title is concerned. In each of the cases referred to, in which that rule was applied, the conveyance was executed intermediate the filing of the petition and the confirmation; and in such case it is immaterial whether the deed conveyed the land or only the right, title, and interest of the confirmee; for in either form it transferred all the rights of the confirmee in or to the land — one of which was the right to have a confirmation of his claim or title, a segregation of the land which had been granted, and a release or conveyance on the part of the United States. But where, as in this case, the conveyance was prior to the filing of the petition, other rules would be applicable. The Act of 1851 (Sec. 13) provides that all lands, the claims to which shall not have been presented to the Commissioners within two years from the date of the Act, shall be deemed held and considered as a part of the public domain of the United States; and as the claim of the vendee would be barred by his failure to present his claim as provided by the Act, he must, in order to obtain the benefit of the confirmation of the claim of his vendor, so far as the legal title is concerned, rely on the estoppel springing from his deed. It is unnecessary, however, for the purposes of this case, to determine whether the instrument executed by Vallejo to Hoeppner was, under the law in force at the time of its execution, sufficient to create an estoppel of such a character that the after-acquired title of Vallejo would feed the estoppel, and thus inure to the benefit of his vendees; for, if that instrument amounts to a conveyance, the decree of confirmation of the District Court settles the question as to the transmission of the title.

That instrument, as translated from the Spanish language, is as follows:

“He who subscribes; certifies that having bought lawfully and in due form of the citizen, Lazaro Peña, the land of Agua Caliente, to which the preceding approval of the Departmental Assembly of Alta California refers, I cede and transfer all the rights which I have to the said land, in favor of Don Andres Hoeppner, who will make the use of it which most suits him. And for the necessary ends and uses I give this in Sonoma, the 12th of August, 1846.

“M. G. VALLEJO.”

“Witnesses: A. A. HENDERSON, Asst. Surgeon U. S. ship Portsmouth; JACOB PLESE.”

Opinion of the Court — RHODES, J.

The instrument was indorsed upon the decree of the Departmental Assembly, and delivered to Hoeppner. It was proven that its consideration was an agreement on the part of Hoeppner to teach music to the family of Vallejo, but that he failed to fully perform his agreement. There is no evidence in the record that Vallejo delivered the possession of the rancho to Hoeppner, except what is found in the testimony of Dr. Leavenworth, who purchased of Hoeppner a portion of the rancho, in 1848, or the early part of 1849. He testified that when he went to see the land, after his purchase, he found Anna Hoeppner, the wife of Andres Hoeppner, in possession.

In Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 108, it was held that the word "cedo"—here translated "I cede"—was the ordinary word used in Mexican conveyances to pass title to lands; and we see no reason to doubt the correctness of that decision.

It is also objected that the instrument is insufficient as a conveyance, because it does not express a consideration, but we hold, upon the authority of Havens v. Dale, 18 Cal. 366, and Merle v. Matthews, 26 Cal. 455, that it is not essential that the instrument, intended as a conveyance, should express the consideration or the price of the land. This instrument was before the Supreme Court of the United States, in Steinbach v. Stewart, 11 Wall. 566, and the Court pronounced it a conveyance of the title to the rancho. The larger portion of the instruments intended as conveyances, which were executed in California about the date of this instrument, were as devoid of form as this one, and in holding that this instrument amounts to a conveyance, we only follow the current of the authorities in this State.

The decree of confirmation of the District Court contains the following proviso: "Provided that this confirmation of the above land to the said M. G. Vallejo shall be without prejudice to the legal representative of Lazaro Peña, the original grantee, or whoever may be entitled to said lands under him; and said confirmation to said Vallejo shall inure to the benefit of any person or persons who may own or be entitled to the said land by any title, either at law or in equity, derived from the original grantee by deed, devise, descent, or otherwise."

The decree of the Supreme Court is "that the decree of the said District Court in this cause, in so far as it confirms the original grant, be and the same is hereby affirmed." In Steinbach v. Stewart, supra, it was argued on the part of the plaintiff that the proviso in the decree of the District Court was annulled by the decree of the Supreme Court; but it was held that no portion of the decree of the District Court was reversed, and that that decree was left in force to its full extent. The construction given to those decrees in that case is of binding authority here; and we accordingly hold that the confirmation inured to the benefit of those holding title under or through the conveyance executed by Vallejo to Hoepfner, and vested in them the legal title to the rancho.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

JAMES REGAN v. OWEN McMAHON, THEODORA HIGUERA DE SANCHEZ, WIDOW OF FRANCISCO SANCHEZ, DECEASED, AND THIRTY OTHERS.

APPEAL FROM INTERLOCUTORY DECREE IN PARTITION.—An appeal from a preliminary decree in partition must be taken within sixty days from the entry of the decree in the minutes of the Court.

ERRORS OF PRELIMINARY DECREE NOT TO BE REVIEWED ON APPEAL FROM FINAL DECREE.—Supposed errors in the preliminary decree in partition cannot be reviewed through an appeal taken from the final decree.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL IN PARTITION.—A motion for a new trial may be resorted to for the purpose of correcting the errors in a preliminary decree of partition; but it must be made within the proper time.

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, C. J.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

[This case was before the Supreme Court at the July Term, 1871, upon an appeal by defendant Sharp. See 41 Cal. 679.]

E. A. Lawrence, for Appellant.

Hoge & Harmon, for Respondents.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

This action was brought to obtain partition of the Rancho San Pedro.

The parties having appeared in the Court below, such proceedings were had that on the 27th day of December, 1869, a decree was entered determining their several rights and directing a partition to be made. Referees having been appointed to make partition accordingly, and their report in that behalf being confirmed, it was afterward, and on the 16th day of December, 1870, decreed that the partition by them made and reported to the Court be held valid and effectual forever. It appears that on the 14th day of December, 1870, a statement on motion for a new trial was filed by some of the parties who are the appellants here, and the statement having been settled, the motion for a new trial was denied on the 3d day of April, 1871, and on the second day of June following this appeal was taken from the decree of 1869, that of 1870, and from the order denying the new trial.

First — The statute (1864, p. 223) provides for a direct appeal from such a decree as that of 1869, in partition cases. Another statute, however, limits the time within which an appeal may be taken to the period of sixty days from the entry of the decree in the minutes of the Court. (Practice Act, Sec. 336, Subd. 3.) The appeal in this case taken from the decree of 1869, not having been taken within the prescribed time, cannot be entertained.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

Second — Nor can the supposed errors of the decree of 1869 be reviewed through the appeal taken from that of 1870. The former decree, being in itself a distinct subject of appeal, is taken out of the category of orders examinable upon appeal from the final judgment. In McCourtney v. Fortune, 42 Cal. 387, we used this language: "Upon appeal from a final judgment, an order made in the cause which is itself by the statute made the subject of a distinct appeal, cannot be reviewed."

Third — The motion for a new trial was correctly denied. We have no doubt that such a motion, if made within proper time, may be resorted to for the purpose of correcting the errors in a preliminary decree of partition. The statute authorizing an appeal from such a decree, it is true, does not expressly provide for such a motion, neither does it expressly provide for a statement on appeal, but it was unhesitatingly assumed here, and we think correctly assumed, in Gates v. Salmon, 28 Cal. 320, that the appellant might upon an appeal in such case, annex to the record a statement on appeal. It might, and generally would be difficult, if not impossible, for him to present the errors complained of, unless he were permitted to resort to such a statement or to a bill of exceptions, which might under some circumstances perform the office of a statement on appeal. We think, upon the same reasoning, that he should be allowed to move for a new trial — it would often be impossible to effectually pursue the appeal which the statute (1864, p. 323) has allowed in such cases as this, except by a resort to a motion in the Court below for a new trial — supported in the usual way. Accident or surprise may have occurred, irregularity intervened, or material evidence been newly discovered. The purpose of the statute was to place the interlocutory decree beyond attack or question, after the lapse of sixty days from its entry, if no step had been taken in the meantime to assail it; its aim was to save to parties in partition suits the costs, often so ruinous, of a repartition necessitated by reason of some error of the preliminary decree, ascertained only after partition actually had. That a party would have the right to move for a new trial at some stage of the cause will not be controverted; that the proceedings of the Court had anterior to and resulting in the interlocutory decree, by which the respective interests of the parties are to be judicially ascertained, are, at some point of time, examinable through a motion for a new trial, is undeniable. If, after partition actually had and confirmed by final decree, such a motion may still be availed of to agitate questions lying behind, and having their determination in the interlocutory decree, then the sole purpose of the statute is seen to be defeated, and the particular mischief against which it was directed still remains. But the motion for a new trial made in this instance was clearly too late, and the right to make it was waived by the neglect of the parties.

The appeal taken from the decree of 1869 must be dismissed, and the decree of 1870 and the order denying a new trial must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice NILES did not express an opinion.

CHARLES J. KING, JAMES F. CROSETT, AND SAMUEL FOSTER v. B. J. WISE.

CONTRACT ESTABLISHING TRUST RELATION.—If one party agrees to unite with two others in the purchase of land, each to furnish one third the purchase money, and such party to conduct the negotiations, and buy the land for the least possible price, he assumes a position of trust towards his associates, and is bound to exercise the utmost good faith towards them, and share with them all the profits of the bargain.

Statement of Facts.

FRAUD OF ONE JOINT PURCHASER OF LAND TOWARDS HIS ASSOCIATES.—If A. agrees to unite with B. and C. in the joint purchase of a tract of land, each to furnish one third the price, and A. to conduct the negotiations, and buy the land at the least possible price, and A. represents to them that the land costs six hundred and fifty dollars per acre, when it only costs five hundred dollars per acre, and a purchase is made at the former sum, and A. pockets the difference between the two prices, B. and C. are entitled to recover from A. the full sum they paid beyond what they would have paid at five hundred dollars per acre.

ITEM.—Before bringing an action to recover such difference, B. and C. need not offer to rescind the contract of purchase, and an affirmation of the contract by them, after they discover the fraud practiced on them by A., does not destroy their right of action for the damage sustained.

RECOURSEMENT OF DAMAGES.—A claim of A. and B. to recoup damages from C., by way of set-off against the promissory note of A., B., and D., held by C., cannot be sustained, nor can such claim for damages be set off against an aliquot part of the sum due on the note.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

On the 23d of March, 1869, the defendant proposed to plaintiffs Crosett and King to unite with them in the purchase of a tract of thirty-six acres of land in Alameda County. They agreed to unite with him in the purchase, and each was to furnish one third of the purchase money, and the defendant was to conduct the negotiations, and buy the land at the least price for which it could be purchased. Defendant represented to Crosett and King that J. Hardy owned the land, and that it could not be purchased for less than six hundred and fifty dollars per acre, and that the terms of purchase were five hundred dollars down and six thousand dollars in ten days, and the balance in periodical installments of about two thousand dollars each. On the same day Crosett and King paid defendant three hundred and thirty-three and thirty-three one hundredths dollars, being two thirds of the five hundred dollars. One Tyler was the real owner of the land, and Hardy had no interest in the matter, but acted as defendant's agent and trustee; and defendant, on the said twenty-third of March, gave

Statement of Facts.

Hardy the five hundred dollars, who, on the same day, paid it to Tyler, and took from Tyler a contract to sell the land at five hundred dollars per acre, payable in periodical installments, of which the first was three thousand dollars, payable ten days thereafter. Four days thereafter defendant, without consultation with Crosett or King, sold his interest in the transaction to plaintiff Foster.

The suit was first commenced in the name of Crosett and King, but Foster was, afterwards, by consent, made a joint plaintiff.

On the third day of April thereafter Crosett, King, and Foster, by direction of defendant, executed with Hardy a contract for the purchase of the land, at six hundred and fifty dollars per acre, and paid him four thousand dollars as an installment of the purchase money, being two thirds of six thousand dollars; and Wise and Foster also paid Hardy two thousand dollars, on the same account, and Hardy paid one half, to wit, three thousand dollars, to Tyler, and took from Tyler a contract for the purchase of the land at five hundred dollars per acre, payable thereafter in installments, and paid the remaining three thousand dollars to defendant. On the thirty-first of May thereafter, Hardy assigned to Crosett, King, and Foster, his contract with Tyler, and Crosett, King, and Foster, jointly, assumed to pay the obligations of Hardy to Tyler. At the same time, Crosett, King, and Foster executed to Hardy four promissory notes for the aggregate sum of two thousand four hundred dollars, payable on the respective days of August 3d and December 3d, 1869, and the 3d day of April and 3d day of August, 1870. The notes were intended to represent the unpaid difference between the price Hardy agreed to pay Tyler for the land and that which the plaintiffs agreed to pay Hardy. The plaintiffs knew when they made the notes that they were for the benefit of Wise, and that Wise would receive the money paid on them. Hardy immediately assigned the notes to the defendant Wise. When Crosett & King executed the contract for the purchase of the land, and paid the money to Hardy, they were ignorant of the fraud Wise was practicing on them. When this action was commenced, the plaintiffs had not returned the land to either Hardy or defendant, or offered to rescind the contract of purchase. Foster was cognizant of all of Wise's acts, and was not deceived.

The complaint set out the above facts, and asked for judgment for the damages the plaintiffs had sustained by the deceit practiced on them by Wise, and that the plaintiffs might recoup and set off, against the promissory notes, the amount of the judgment they might recover, to the extent of the face of the notes, and that the defendant be compelled to surrender the promissory notes to be canceled. The defendant was insolvent.

The defendant had judgment in the Court below, and the plaintiffs, King and Crosett, appealed.

Gray & Haven, for Appellants.

The plaintiffs had the right to affirm the contract, even after the discovery of the fraud, and to recover damages for the tort; or they could have rescinded the contract and recovered back the money they had paid. four hundred dollars — i. e., three thousand six hundred dollars, being one hundred dollars per acre on thirty-six acres, in violation of the trust reposed in him by King and Crosett, which trust he accepted, and hence the plaintiffs are to recover that sum from him. (Dunlap's Paley on Agency, pp. 33, 34, 36; Fawcett v. Whitehouse, 1 Russell and Mylne, 132; Alvarez v. Brannan, 7 Cal. 503; Rea v. Suryhne, 39 Cal. 579; 1 Hilliard on Torts, 6.)

The measure of damages which plaintiff is entitled to recover, is the difference between the price of the land purchased by the defendant and the price paid by the plaintiff — i. e., three thousand six hundred dollars. (Sedgwick on Damages, 4th ed., pp. 559, 560; Van Epps v. Harrison, 5 Hill, N. Y. 63; Monell v. Coldon, 13 Johns. N. Y. 395; Short v. Stevenson, supra.)

The notes being a portion of the fruits of the fraud, and the defendant being insolvent, the plaintiffs have a right to have them canceled, on the ground that if defendant should bring suit on the notes plaintiffs could recoup in that suit the amount of any judgment which they are entitled to recover for the tort alleged, to the extent of the value of the notes. Such is the prayer of plaintiffs' complaint. To support the last proposition, we cite: Van Epps v. Harrison, 5 Hill R. 65; Waterman on Recoupment, Secs. 416, 422-428; California Practice Act, Sec. 47; Earl v. Bull, 15 Cal. 421; Dennis v. Belt, 30 Cal. 252; Sedgwick on Damages, 4th ed., p. 560.

J. M. Seawell, for Respondent.

The assertion by the defendant, that the land cost six hundred and fifty dollars per acre, is not actionable. The most that could be claimed is that it was an assertion that the land was worth six hundred and fifty dollars per acre.

The complaint does not state that the land was not worth that sum. (Sandford v. Hardy, 23 Wend. 269; Taylor v.

The measure of damages in an action for deceit is the difference between the real and represented values of the property sold. (Sedgwick on Measure of Damages, 5th ed., 655; id. 2d ed., 559; Whitney v. Alain, 1 Comstock's R. 312; Stiles v. White, 11 Metcalf's R. 356; Carr v. Moore, 41 N. H. R. 131; Page v. Sutton, 5 Mason's R. 1; Lamson v. Marin, 8 Barb. R. 9; Jones v. Bartlett, 1 Term R. 136.)

The plaintiffs, at the time of acquiring from Hardy the contract for the land and executing the notes, had full knowledge of the facts constituting the alleged fraud. Neither have they offered to restore the consideration. (1 Story's Equity Jurisprudence, Sec. 203 a; Irwin v. Kirkpatrick, 3 Eng. Law and Eq. R. 37; *Bronson v. By the Court, NILES, J.:

By the terms of the original agreement between the defendant and the plaintiffs, Crosett and King, the defendant was to purchase the land for the least price for which it could be purchased, and for the benefit of the three parties concerned.

By this agreement the defendant assumed a position of trust, and in that relation was bound to exercise the utmost good faith towards his associates in the transaction. It is one of the plainest principles of equity that an agent cannot make a profit out of his principal in the business of his agency. The defendant, as associate of the plaintiffs in the proposed purchase, and entrusted by them with its management, was held to the same good faith, and could make no bargain, the benefits of which his co-associates would not be entitled to share. It is not mentioned whether the price which the defendant induced the plaintiffs to pay was more or less than the value of the property purchased. The plaintiffs were entitled to share the profits of a good bargain, as they would have been bound to share the losses of a bad one.

It is claimed by the defendant that the failure of the plaintiffs to offer a rescission of the contract and a restoration of the land, and their affirmance of the contract after the discovery of the fraud, was a bar to their recovery in this action.

The rule, which requires a rescission of the contract upon the discovery of fraud, has no application to this case. The contest is not between a vendor, who has made fraudulent misrepresentations in regard to the property sold, and the vendee, who has been misled and injured by the fraud. The plaintiffs may have been willing to purchase the land at the price they paid, or at even a larger price, and may not wish to rescind the sale; but they are none the less entitled to hold the defendant to a strict observance of the trust confided to him, and to enjoy their proportionate benefit of any bargain he may have made. They do not complain that they were induced to pay more than the land was worth, but that they would have paid less if the defendant had been faithful to his trust. By their affirmance of the contract, after knowledge of the fraud, they lost any right they may have had to rescind the sale and recover back the purchase money; but it was not a release of their right of action against the defendant for damages resulting from his fraudulent acts. We are of the opinion that the plaintiffs should have judgment upon the facts as found by the Court.

Opinion of the Court — NILES, J.

It is not difficult to arrive at the exact measure of damages which plaintiffs are entitled to recover. The actual value of the land is not an element in the estimate. The plaintiffs should have, from the defendant, the difference between the price of the land purchased by him for the plaintiffs and the amount paid by the plaintiffs.

The claim of the plaintiffs, Crosett and King, to set off the amount of the judgment in this action against the promissory note held by the defendant, cannot be sustained. These were joint notes of the plaintiffs, Crosett, King, and Foster. It is well settled that joint and separate debts cannot be set off against each other at law, and I can see no good reason for the application of a different rule to a claim for damages which is the subject of recoupment. Nor do sufficient facts appear to call for the equitable interposition of the Court. If the liabilities were in reality mutual, as if Foster were a merely nominal party to the notes or surety upon them, the insolvency of the defendant might be a ground for equitable relief. But Foster is a bona fide debtor of the defendant upon the notes, and we do not see upon what recognized principle we can apportion to the plaintiffs, Crosett and King, by way of recoupment, an aliquot part of the joint indebtedness.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to the Court below to render judgment for the plaintiffs, Crosett and King, in accordance with this opinion.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

The order overruling the defendants' motion for a new trial was made November 29th, 1869. On the 10th February, 1870, the defendants filed and served their notice of appeal from this order, and from the judgment, and upon the same day filed an undertaking upon that appeal. On the 25th June, 1870, the defendants gave notice of a motion to vacate the order of November 29th, 1869, and to bring the motion for a new trial to a hearing, upon the ground "that it was irregular to dispose of the said motion for a new trial before the statement was engrossed and settled." This motion was based upon affidavits showing, among other things, that on the 5th November, 1869, the counsel for plaintiff and defendants entered into the following stipulation:

“In this case it is stipulated that the settled statement on motion for a new trial shall consist of the matters proposed to be inserted therein by the defendants’ amendments to plaintiff’s proposed statement on motion for new trial herein, and by what is left of the matters proposed to be inserted therein by plaintiff — said proposed statement, after striking out the matters proposed to be stricken therefrom by defendants’ said amendments, and that on engrossing said statement said matters shall be copied therein with the same force and effect as if set out in said statement and amendments; that said statement need not be engrossed until after argument on motion for new trial; that on the said argument on motion for new trial all the matters herein stipulated as constituting the settled statement may be referred to as if such statement were engrossed; and that in printing the transcript on appeal by either party, all said matters shall be printed in said transcript, and that said transcript shall be stipulated to contain the statement on motion for new trial on which the case was argued on motion for new trial.”

It further appeared that the order of November 29th, 1869, was made upon submission of the case by counsel, in pursuance of the foregoing stipulation, and before the statement had been engrossed or certified.

On the 7th July, 1870, the Court made an order overruling this last motion, and from this order, also, the defendants’ appeal.

First — The appeal from the order overruling the motion for a new trial was taken too late and cannot be considered.

Second — The transcript contains no statement on appeal from the judgment. A statement on motion for a new trial cannot be considered as a statement on appeal without some agreement of the parties that it shall be so used. (Cosgrove v. Howland, 24 Cal. 457.) On appeal from the judgment, therefore, we can look at the judgment roll only. Upon this no errors are assigned or disclosed by the record.

Points decided.

Third — The action of the Court in overruling the defendants' motion for a new trial before the statement was engrossed, and the engrossed statement agreed to, or certified as correct, would have been error in the absence of any stipulation between the parties. But the stipulation of November 5th, 1869, was not only a direct waiver of the engrossment before the hearing of the motion, but rendered certain the matters which the engrossed statement should contain. It is not necessary to consider what would have been the effect of the omission to engross the statement before the hearing of the motion for a new trial, upon an appeal from the order denying the motion. It is sufficient to say that a party will not be heard to complain of an error which was the result of his deliberate and formal consent. Upon this ground we think the motion to vacate the order denying a new trial was properly refused.

Judgment affirmed.

TERESA KEANE.

IDENTITY AND OWNERSHIP OF STOLEN GOODS.—Where, on the trial of K. for the larceny of certain articles of clothing, M. testified that she had lost the articles mentioned in the indictment, and that the stolen goods were hers, and B. testified that while tracking K. on the morning of the theft, he had found a bundle containing the articles named in the indictment: Held, that the evidence sufficiently established the ownership and identity of the stolen property.

APPEAL from the County Court of Santa Clara County.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, C. J.

The indictment charges the defendant with the larceny of one silk dress, one merino dress, three pairs of lace curtains, three table spoons, one carving knife, steel, and fork; five table knives, and a certain number of pieces of money of the value of seventy-nine dollars and twenty-five cents, the property of Robert McPhearson and Jennie McPhearson, his wife. At the trial, a policeman named Bellows testified that on the morning the theft was committed, he met the defendant on the alameda coming from towards Santa Clara, where the McPhearsons live, and where the larceny was committed, and while tracking her back he found a bundle containing the articles named in the indictment.

The defendant was convicted, and the people appealed from an order granting her a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

J. L. Love, Attorney General, for Appellants.

Bodley & Rankin, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, C. J.:

The prisoner was tried for the crime of grand larceny and a verdict of guilty found by the jury. Upon her motion, the Court set aside the verdict and granted her a new trial, on the ground that there was no evidence that the goods referred to by the witness Bellow were stolen, or were the goods of McPhearson or wife, and that in the evidence as given there was no identification of the stolen goods. Mrs. McPhearson, however, testified distinctly that the stolen goods were hers. She also testified that the goods she lost by the larceny were those mentioned in the indictment. It also distinctly appears in the statement that the bundle of articles which Bellow found "contained the articles named in the indictment," except the merino dress, which Mrs. McPhearson wore at the trial.

Statement of Facts.

It is not claimed that there was any conflict in the evidence — indeed, there was no evidence offered on the part of the accused; the case went to the jury entirely upon the evidence given on behalf of the people, and it sufficiently established the ownership and identity of the stolen goods.

The order granting the prisoner a new trial is therefore reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the Court below to proceed to judgment upon the verdict.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF JOHN BOLAND, DECEASED.

HOMESTEAD UNDER PROBATE ACT.— If there has been no homestead created during the existence of the community, by a compliance with the Homestead Act, the widow can acquire no homestead interest in the property, under sections one hundred and twenty-one, one hundred and twenty-four, and one hundred and twenty-five of the Probate Act, until an order of the Probate Court, or Judge, has been made setting it apart to her.

ISSUE.— If a widow who is entitled to a homestead, under sections one hundred and twenty-one, one hundred and twenty-four, and one hundred and twenty-five of the Probate Act, again marries before an order of the Probate Court is made setting apart such homestead, she loses, by her marriage, the right to such homestead.

APPEAL from the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

On the 24th day of October, 1860, John Boland purchased a lot in San Francisco, with money, his separate property. He resided on the same with his wife and daughter, Margaret Boland, and died on the 3d day of February, 1861. No homestead was claimed under the provisions of the Homestead Act. Boland left a will, which was probated, by which he devised all his property to his daughter, and nominated John McNamara, the executor of his estate. The daughter was born in 1851. After Boland's death the widow and daughter continued to reside on the lot until November, 1868, when the daughter married one Brackett, and left to reside elsewhere with her husband. In 1862 the widow married Charles W. Lane, and she and said Lane have continued to reside on the premises.

In 1869 Boland's former wife, Mrs. Lane, applied to the Probate Court for an order setting apart the premises as a homestead, under the one hundred and twenty-first, one hundred and twenty-fourth, and one hundred and twenty-fifth sections of the Probate Act. The executor and the daughter opposed the application, and asked that the property be distributed to the daughter under the will. The Court granted the application, and the executor appealed.

Frank F. Taylor, for Appellant.

Unless a person is the head of a family the right of homestead cannot exist. As the primary object of the law was the protection of the family, when the family ceases to exist, the reason for the privilege is gone. (McQuade v. Whaley, 31 Cal. 534.)

The theory of the respondent is that an order of the Court should be made now for a state of affairs — widowhood — which existed nine years ago.

W. C. Burnett, for Respondent.

The one hundred and twenty-fourth section of the Probate Act says that the homestead shall be set apart to "the widow or child." It is a right personal to the widow. The law does not say that a marriage shall deprive her of any homestead right.

Opinion of the Court — NILES, J.

By the Court, NILES, J.:

Conceding, for the purpose of this case, that the property in question could be set apart to the widow, under the provisions of the Probate Act, notwithstanding the will of John Boland, it is evident that the widow could acquire no homestead interest in the property until an order of the Probate Court, or Judge, was made, setting it apart to her. It differs from the case of a homestead created during the existence of the community, by a compliance with the provisions of the Homestead Act, the title to which vests in the wife upon the death of the husband, by right of survivorship. In the latter case the property becomes the property of the widow by operation of law. In the case presented it could only become hers by the decree of the Court or Judge. If there could be any doubt at what time the right of the widow attaches to the land, and withdraws it from administration, it is settled by the provisions of section one hundred and twenty-five of the Probate Act: "When property shall have been set apart for the use of the family, in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, if the deceased shall have left a widow and no minor child, such property shall be the property of the widow. If he shall have also a minor child or children, the one half of such property shall belong to the widow, and the remainder to the child," etc.

The right of Margaret Lane to have a homestead set apart to her from the estate of her former husband, John Boland, must, therefore, be determined from the facts as they existed on the 3d of January, 1870, when the order of the Probate Court was made. This was nearly nine years after the death of John Boland. Margaret, his former widow, had been for over seven years married to her present husband, Lane. The only child of John and Margaret Boland had married, and was no longer under her mother's charge or control.

Sections one hundred and twenty-one, one hundred and twenty-four, and one hundred and twenty-five of the Probate Act, under which the order was made, make provision for but two classes — the widow and the family of the deceased.

Points decided.

Margaret Lane occupied neither of these positions. Her widowhood terminated by her marriage with Charles Lane, and she then became a member of his family. Whatever right she may have once had to have the property set apart for her use, she lost when she lost the status upon which the right depended.

Order and judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

PURCHASER AT SHERIFF'S SALE.—In a complaint to set aside an execution sale, made under a judgment, on account of matters extrinsic to the judgment, at which the purchaser was not a party to the judgment, if there is no averment that the purchaser had notice of such extrinsic facts, he will be deemed a purchaser without notice.

INNOCENT PURCHASER AT SHERIFF'S SALE.—A purchaser for value at a judicial sale, who is not the judgment creditor, without notice of extrinsic facts which are relied upon to impeach the judgment under which the sale was made, is not affected by such facts.

IDEM.—A purchaser at a judicial sale is bound to inquire at his peril, whether it sufficiently appears on the face of the record that the Court had jurisdiction to render the judgment, and whether there is a valid execution; but beyond that he need not go, and subject to such inquiry his purchase will be protected, even though the judgment is afterwards reversed for error.

TITLE ACQUIRED AT JUDICIAL SALE.—A title acquired at a judicial sale by a bona fide purchaser, without notice, cannot be overthrown by subsequent proof that the judgment was obtained by fraud, or that the record which showed due service on the defendant was in fact false.

EVIDENCE TO CONTRADICT RECORD.—In an action to impeach the title to property acquired by an innocent purchaser at judicial sale, the plaintiff cannot contradict the record, by proof that there was in fact no service of summons, or that the judgment was obtained by fraud.

Statement of Facts.

COLLATERAL ATTACK ON JUDGMENT.—Against a stranger who is an innocent purchaser at a judicial sale, without notice, the judgment is no more open to attack than if offered in evidence in a collateral action.

VOID JUDGMENT OR EXECUTION.—A judgment is not void because it is for a larger sum than the proofs justify, nor is an execution void because it is for a larger sum than the judgment authorized.

SALE UNDER ERRONEOUS JUDGMENT.—If a judgment for a tax enforces a lien on real estate, not only for the tax on the land, but also for the owner's tax on personal property, and the latter is erroneous, a sale made under the judgment is not void, nor can it for that reason be impeached in an action brought to set it aside.

LIS PENDENS.—In an action to enforce the lien of a tax by a sale of the property, is not necessary to file a lis pendens.

LIEN OF TAX.—The lien of a tax extends back to the assessment, and the assessment creates a lien which is not extinguished until the tax is paid.

TAXES MATTERS OF PUBLIC RECORD.—The assessment of taxes and the lien which it creates, are matters of public record, of which all purchasers are bound to take notice, and the purchaser of land is bound at his peril to see that taxes have been paid.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

The complaint averred that the plaintiff owned a tract of land containing eight acres; that he purchased it of C. F. M. Dinnicke, on the 6th day of February, 1868; that prior to said sixth day of February, and while said Dinnicke owned the land, there was assessed to said Dinnicke a tax on said land and personal property, as State and county tax, sixty-eight dollars and fifty-one cents — of which sum, sixty-two dollars and forty cents were levied on the land; that on the 3d day of January, 1868, an action was commenced against said Dinnicke and the land and improvements, for the collection of said tax; that the Auditor failed to post notices that the delinquent tax list had been deposited with the District Attorney, and also failed to publish notice of such fact, nor did he file any affidavit of such posting or publishing; and that the Sheriff did not make any service of summons, either by posting a copy on the Court House door or delivering a copy to the person in possession of the land, or by serving on Dinnicke; that the District Court gave judgment against Dinnicke and the land and improvements. The judgment and summons and return were attached to the complaint as an exhibit, and the return of the Sheriff showed service of the summons on the 24th day of October, 1868, by posting a copy on the premises. The return showed that no service was made on Dinnicke. The complaint averred that the Auditor and Sheriff failed to post and make service, for the purpose of defrauding Dinnicke and those who might succeed to his interest in the premises. An execution on the judgment was issued and delivered to the Sheriff, on the 28th day of May, 1869, and the Sheriff sold the land to J. M. Kennedy, on the 3d day of July, 1869, and on the 6th day of January, 1870, executed to him a deed, and the plaintiff did not know that the taxes were delinquent, or had not been paid, until January 15th, 1870, and did not know that the taxes were a lien on the property, and did not know of the pendency of any action.

There was prayer that the deed to Kennedy be canceled and declared null and void, etc. No lis pendens was filed.

The defendant Delmas, who had acquired an interest in the property under the tax sale, demurred to the complaint, and the Court sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the complaint for want of equity. The plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Moore & Laine, and S. F. Leib, for Appellant.

In order to give a Court jurisdiction there must be service of process in some way. (Blackwell on Tax Titles, 211, 3d ed.)

If a judgment is void a sale thereunder is void. (Smith v. The State, 13 S. & M. 140; Hastings v. Burning Moscow, 2 Nev. 105; Webster v. Reid, 11 Howard, 432.)

exception to the general rule. The only difference is in the mode of giving notice.

It is insisted that the records of Courts of superior jurisdiction import absolute verity, and that their judgments cannot be impeached unless want of jurisdiction appears upon their face. The case of Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 402, and Reily v. Lancaster, 39 Cal. 354, are relied on to support this doctrine. The last named case is but a reiteration of the leading case of Hahn v. Kelly, supra, and need not be specially considered. The case of Hahn v. Kelly has, in our judgment, been by the bar and the lower Courts much misapprehended. The Judges who pronounced that opinion were extremely careful to limit the doctrine as above set forth to the case of a collateral attack; and further, the Court was equally careful to define what was meant by such an attack, viz: where the judgment was offered as evidence in some other proceeding. The Court in that case, did hold that in a collateral attack, even if the judgment roll, outside of the judgment itself, showed a want of service, and the judgment recited service that it would be conclusively presumed that a proper service had in fact been made, but proof of it had not found its way into the judgment roll or had been lost therefrom. But the Judge who pronounced the opinion and decision of the Court in that case says in the very outset that "any judgment of any Court is absolutely void if it appear that there was a want of jurisdiction in either respect." (34 Cal. 402.)

Again, at page four hundred and twenty-seven, it is said by Justice Sawyer that "if the record in fact does not speak the truth, the only remedy of the party is to attack it directly on appeal, or in the Court of which it is a record, if under the circumstances it can be there corrected, or by some direct proceeding known to the law to vacate it."

We think this is a direct attack on the judgment. The time for appeal had passed before the plaintiff had any knowledge of the tax or tax suit. (Story's Eq. Pl. Secs. 426-428; Sanford v. Head, 6 Cal. 298; Bryant v. Williams, 21 Iowa, 329; Hawley v. Blackman, 20 Iowa, 188.) The plaintiff was an innocent purchaser.

The twenty-seventh section of the Civil Practice Act provides that in an action affecting the title to real property there must be a lis pendens filed to charge a purchaser pendente lite with constructive notice; that he is to be charged with such notice only after the lis pendens is actually filed.

A tax proceeding is one affecting title to real property, and of all actions known to our system, one most needing a notice to the outside world, as the proceedings are to a great extent summary, and valuable estates are liable to be sold for very small sums of money. In this case property worth from five thousand dollars to six thousand dollars has been sold for less than one hundred dollars taxes. (Bensley v. Mountain Lake Water Company, 13 Cal. 319; Richardson v. White, 18 Cal. 102.) The Supreme Court of Michigan, in Clark v. Crane, 5 Mich. 154, says that "what the law requires to be done for the protection of the taxpayer is mandatory, and cannot be regarded as directory merely." A similar rule has been recognized in Illinois and other States. (Marsh v. Chestnut, 14 Ill. 223; Wheeler v. Chicago, 24 Ill. 108.) The rule is stated by Chief Justice Shaw, in Terry v. Milburry, 21 Pick. 67. See also, Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, pp. 74 to 78, and notes.

D. M. Delmas, for Respondent.

The judgment is not void. It is valid until set aside or reversed. This proposition would seem too plain to need argument or authority. The judgment in this case is that of a superior Court. It emanates from the highest tribunal of original jurisdiction known in this State. Such judgments are never void unless they are so upon their face. When not void upon their face they are at most only erroneous; but notwithstanding the error, they are absolutely binding, and so remain until set aside or reversed. (Creppe v. Durden, 1 Smith L. Cases, Am. note, 998.) A judgment is never void for want of jurisdiction unless the want of jurisdiction appears affirmatively in the record. (Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal.; Grignon's Lessee v. Astor, 2 How. 319; Voorhees v. U. S. Bank, 10 Peters, 449.) The District Court, which foreclosed the tax lien, expressly found, in its decree, that summons in that case was served as required by law. Equity has no jurisdiction to set aside that decree on the ground that it was erroneous, or unsupported by the evidence on which it was based, or that it can be shown by extrinsic proof that the summons had not in fact been served. The District Court, having jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action, was competent and had authority to decide whether its jurisdiction had attached upon the parties before it. When it had decided that question, its judgment upon that matter was binding and conclusive. (Sheldon v. Wright, 1 Seld. 497, 514; Borden v. State, 6 English, 519, 544; Cox v. Thomas, 9 Gratt. 323; Richards v. Skiff, 8 Ohio St., 446, 453; The Evansville R. R. Co. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 395, 421.)

Argument for Respondent.

The estoppel of a judgment is absolutely conclusive on all matters which could and ought to have been considered and passed upon in rendering it, and cannot be disproved or defeated, either at law or in equity, by proof that the law was mistaken by the Court, or misapprehended and misapplied by the jury. (Vaughn v. Johnson, 1 Stock. Ch. 173; 2 Smith Lead. Cases, 673; Burgess v. Lovengood, 2 Jones Eq. 457; De Reimer v. Chattillon, 4 Johns. Ch. 85.)

Courts of equity do not interpose to correct the errors or irregularities of Courts of law. (Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 138, 142.)

No case for equitable cognizance is made out by the bill, because: First — It is not alleged that Dinnicke, the personal defendant in the tax suit, did not have notice of the action. Second—It is conceded that the taxes for which the judgment was rendered were, at the time, legally due and owing by the defendants in that action. Third—The defendants herein are bona fide purchasers under the judgment.

Even where a person is allowed to file a bill to be relieved against a judgment against him, on the ground that he has a valid defense to the action and had no opportunity to defend, the bill must not only show that he was not legally notified, but also, that he had, in fact, no knowledge of the proceedings. (1 Smith L. C. 1023; Cowan v. Bradwood, 1 M. & G. 882; Reynolds v. Fenton, 3 C. B. 187.)

The defendants are bona fide purchasers at the Sheriff's sale. Against such purchasers equity never lends its aid.

The maxim is as old as chancery itself. Since the rule was authoritatively thus laid down, two hundred years ago, in Bassett v. Neworthy, Rep. Temp. Finch, 102, it may safely be asserted that no departure from it has ever been sanctioned by the decision of any respectable tribunal. (Story's Eq. Pl. Sec. 604; Lead. Cases in Eq., Vol. 2, pp. 72, 73; Simms v. Slocum, 3 Cranch, 300; Gray v. Brignardello, 1 Wallace, 627; Parker's Heirs v. Anderson, 5 T. B. Monroe, 445.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

It is not averred in the complaint that the defendant Kennedy had any actual notice of the extrinsic facts relied upon to impeach the judgment on which the execution issued, under which he purchased the property in controversy. He is, therefore, to be deemed a purchaser without notice of these facts. The plaintiff assails the judgment, and claims that it is void on two grounds, viz: First, by reason of facts appearing on the face of the record which, it is alleged, show that the Court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment; second, because there was in fact no service of the summons, and no appearance by the defendant; and also, because the judgment was fraudulently obtained. The last point will be first considered. The defendant being a purchaser for value, at a judicial sale, without notice of the extrinsic facts, which are relied upon to impeach the judgment, cannot be affected thereby. No principle is better settled than that a purchaser at a judicial sale, without notice, under proceedings regular on their face, and had in a Court of competent jurisdiction, is not affected by any mere error of the Court, for which the judgment might be reversed on appeal, nor for any secret vice in the judgment, not appearing on the face of the record, and which can be made to appear only by the production of extrinsic evidence. He is bound at his peril to inquire whether it sufficiently appears on the face of the record that the Court had jurisdiction to render the judgment, and whether there is a valid execution. But nothing more is required of him. Unless the plaintiff in the action be also the purchaser at the sale, the latter will not be affected by any mere error of the Court, even though the judgment be afterwards reversed for such error; nor can his rights be impaired by any secret vice in the proceedings, resulting from fraud or other similar cause, of which he had no notice. As between the parties to the action, a judgment fraudulently obtained will be set aside and held for naught when the fraud is made to appear. But there would be no security in titles acquired at judicial sales if the rights of a bona fide purchaser, without notice, could be overthrown by subsequent proof that the judgment was obtained by fraud, or that the record, which showed a due service on the defendant, was in fact false. The repose of titles, and indeed every consideration of public policy, demands that a purchaser at a judicial sale, without notice, under proceedings regular on their face, and by a Court of competent jurisdiction, should be protected as against mere errors of the Court, and against secret vices in the proceedings founded on fraud, accident, or mistake, and which can only be made to appear by the proof of extrinsic facts not appearing on the face of the record. No prudent person would purchase at a judicial sale, if he incurred the hazard of losing his money, in case it afterwards should be made to appear that the judgment was obtained by perjury or other fraudulent practices, or that the record on which he relied, as proving a service on the defendant, was in fact false. These propositions are too familiar to require the citation of authorities in their support, and we have been referred to none which appear to contravene them, unless it be two cases decided by the Supreme Court of Iowa. (Hansby v. Blackman, 20 Iowa, 128; Bryant v. Williams, 21 Iowa, 329.) The principle settled in those cases is, that a defendant in an action, who was not a resident of the State, and was not served with process by publication or otherwise, and for whom an attorney without authority had entered an appearance, might afterwards, on proof of these facts, recover the property sold under the judgment from a bona fide purchaser, without notice.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

It is unnecessary, for the purposes of this case, to examine the reasoning on which these decisions are founded. But if the peculiar facts of those cases should take them out of the general rule to which I have adverted, it would only prove that the rule, in its broadest sense, is not wholly without an exception, and would not impugn the rule itself. If an unauthorized appearance by an attorney, for a non-resident defendant, who was not served with process, can be afterwards shown to invalidate the title of a bona fide purchaser without notice, at the execution sale, it stands, so far as I am aware, as a solitary exception to the general rule, and the doctrine ought not to be further extended. I am, therefore, of opinion that it is not competent for the plaintiff to establish by proof dehors the record that there was in fact no service of the summons in this case, or that the judgment was obtained by fraud. This brings us to the question whether the record in the tax suit discloses on its face any want of jurisdiction in the Court to render the judgment under which the property was sold. The return of the Sheriff on the summons shows that it was served by posting a copy on the land, and that Dinnicke, the personal defendant, was not found; but the judgment recites that it appeared to the Court "summons herein was issued in proper form by the Clerk of this Court, and was served as required by law upon each of said defendants, who have made default." In Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 402, we decided that a recital of this character in the judgment was, in effect, an adjudication by the Court as to the sufficiency of the service, and that it was conclusive on that point, in a collateral attack on the judgment, unless it affirmatively appeared, from some other part of the judgment roll, that the recital was untrue. We further held, that the fact that there appeared in the judgment roll a summons with a return upon it, showing a defective service, or no service at all, was not sufficient to overcome the effect of the recital in the judgment. But the plaintiff claims that the rule there laid down is applicable only when the judgment is offered in evidence, in a collateral action, and has no application to a direct proceeding to set aside the judgment, as this is claimed to be. But as against a stranger, who purchases at an execution sale without notice, the judgment is no more open to attack than it would be if offered in evidence in a collateral action. In each case the validity of the judgment must be tested by the record alone, and not by extrinsic facts. If it be conceded that the facts alleged in this complaint would be sufficient to vacate the judgment in a direct proceeding for that purpose against the plaintiff in the original action, it by no means follows that the same result would ensue as against a stranger who purchased at the execution sale without notice, whose rights are not to be affected by proofs dehors the record; and the record in this case shows the due service of process. But the judgment is also assailed on the ground that it orders the land to be sold, not only for the tax which was specifically assessed upon it and the improvements, but also for the personal property tax assessed to Dinnicke, and which could not become a lien on the land until after the judgment was docketed, which was long after the plaintiff purchased. This was unquestionably an error for which the judgment might have been reversed on appeal; but it does not affect the validity of the judgment and render it wholly void. It was only an error of the Court in determining the amount of the specific lien on the land, and a judgment is not void because it is for a larger amount than the proofs justify (Murdock v. De Vries, 37 Cal. 527), nor is an execution void because it is for a larger amount than the judgment authorized.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the judgment, execution, and the sale thereunder to the defendant Kennedy, are valid. The plaintiff, however, contends that if all this be conceded, Kennedy acquired no title as against the plaintiff, who purchased the property without either actual or constructive notice of the pendency of the action. The complaint alleges and the demurrer admits that no notice of lis pendens was filed, and that the plaintiff had no actual notice of the pendency of the action. But in this class of cases a notice of lis pendens is unnecessary. By the third section of the Revenue Act of May 17th, 1861, it is provided that "every tax levied under the provisions or authority of this Act is hereby made a lien against the property assessed, which lien shall attach on the first Monday in March in each year, and shall not be satisfied or removed until the taxes are all paid, or the property has absolutely vested in a purchaser, under a sale for taxes;" and by section forty-four of the same Act, it is provided that when a judgment is rendered, to enforce a lien for taxes, "such judgments, rendered in the District Court, shall be docketed and become liens upon all the property against which judgment is rendered, from the date of such assessment, and against all other real estate of the person assessed, subject to execution for the amount of any judgment against him, from the time of such docketing, as in other civil cases." The effect of these provisions is: First, that the assessment creates a lien upon the real property assessed, which is not extinguished until the tax is paid, or the property is sold to a purchaser, under the proceedings to enforce the tax; second, that when a judgment is rendered for enforcing the payment of the tax, the lien of the judgment, by operation of law, relates back to and takes effect from the date of the assessment. The precise object of these provisions was to subordinate to the lien of the judgment all rights acquired by purchasers intermediate the assessment and the rendition of the judgment.

The assessment of lands, and the lien which it creates, are public matters of record, of which all purchasers are bound to take notice; and when a purchaser buys land which is subject to an existing lien for taxes, he must see at his peril that the taxes are paid; and if he neglects this duty he takes the hazard of a judgment against the land, the lien of which, by operation of law and by relation, will antedate his purchase. If the rule were otherwise, it would be necessary in an action to foreclose a tax lien to bring in as defendants all purchasers and incumbrancers subsequent to the assessment and prior to the commencement of the action, and the effect of the judgment in a large number of cases would be practically defeated by secret unrecorded conveyances which were unknown to the District Attorney. It was to obviate the necessity for this, that these provisions were intended, making the judgment lien take effect by relation from the date of the assessment. No notice of lis pendens is therefore necessary in this class of actions.

Judgment affirmed.

Oral Instructions.—The giving of an oral instruction to the jury in a criminal case without the consent of the defendant is error, pp. 35, 36.

This rule is adhered to in the cases following, citing the leading case: People v. Kearney, 43 Cal. 384, holding, however, that oral instruction may be given by mutual consent; People v. Prospero, 44 Cal. 184, where it was decided that consent cannot be inferred from a failure to object at the time the oral charge is given; People v. Max, 45 Cal. 255; People v. Hersey, 53 Cal. 575, where it was held that under the Penal Code as amended in 1874, if the charge be not given in writing, it must be taken down by the phonographic reporter; Broadway v. Territory, 6 Okla. 347.

The rule was somewhat modified by the decision of the court in People v. Leary, 105 Cal. 502, where it was held that if oral conversation and instruction to the jury causes no prejudicial injury to the defendant, it is not ground for a new trial; *Beatty, C. Appeal from Order Setting Aside Verdict.—The presumption in the supreme court is, that the proceedings below are correct, except in so far as the record manifests the contrary, p. 56.

An application to buy tide lands, made in accordance with law, confers a right to purchase upon the applicant, and such applicant cannot be deprived of the benefit of his application by the malfeasance or misfeasance of a state officer, p. 63.

The validity of an application to purchase state lands is not affected by the error of the surveyor general in issuing a certificate of purchase prematurely; Pollard v. Putnam, 54 Cal. 634. Tenancy in Common.—A tenant in common is, as against every person but his cotenant, entitled to the possession of every part of the common land, and may recover the possession of all such land in an action of ejectment brought against a stranger, pp. 71, 72.

Where parties are tenants in common of a water right, each of them may maintain an action to enjoin a trespasser from diverting any portion of the water: Lytle Creek W. Co. v. Perdew, 65 Cal. 452. If one of several tenants in common recover judgment in ejectment against an adverse claimant of the premises, the judgment determines the right of possession to the whole premises: Newman v. Bank of California, 80 Cal. 372; 13 Am. St. Rep. 171, 172. But in King v. Hyatt, 51 Kan. 511, 37 Am. St. Rep. 308, while the rule was not expressly doubted, it was held that where the owner of an undivided interest, acting solely for himself, sues an adverse holder, and it appears that the plaintiff and the holders of the other undivided interest have no community of interest and do not recognize each other's title, that the plaintiff can only recover possession of his own share. Leading case approved in Hopkins v. Noyes, 4 Mont. 560; Brown v. Warren, 6 Nev. 241; and Allen v. Higgins, 9 Wash. 448; 43 Am. St. Rep. 848. A tenant in common, in actual possession with his cotenant, is not affected by the judgment in an action of ejectment against the latter, to which he was not a party: Miller v. Blackett, 47 Fed. Rep. 549. Cited, also, in 50 Am. St. Rep. 839, note.

Statute of Limitations.—If the statute has fully run and has become effectual to bar an adverse title, the disseisor becomes vested with a new title, and estate founded on and springing from the disseisin, p. 73.

It is a settled rule that the possession of property of the requisite character and time confers a title to the property: Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 601, 608. But since the passage of the act of 1878, the taxes must be paid to set the statute in motion; Woodward v. Faris, 109 Cal. 18. Cited, also, in 94 Am. Dec. 742, note; and 49 Am. St. Rep. 714, note.

Eminent Domain.—It is competent for the legislature to prescribe the several steps to be pursued in the assertion of a right to compensation for land appropriated for public use, but the prescribed procedure must not destroy or substantially impair the right itself, p. 79.

It is no objection to the mode of exercising the powers conferred upon the agents under the statute that the legislature has referred it to the consent of those whose property is burdened with the cost of the improvement: Mulligan v. Smith, 59 Cal. 229.

Public Road.—Where a statute for the alteration of a public road required the publication of a notice stating with particularity the course and terminus of the proposed alteration, a notice of an alteration to run northerly from one point to another "over the most practicable route for a road," is insufficient, pp. 79, 80.

The intermediate points through which the road passes must be specifically set forth, Smithers v. Fitch, 82 Cal. 156.

Cloud upon Title.—Any claim of title which, if asserted, would drive the other party to the production of his own title to establish a defense, constitutes a cloud which a court of equity may be called upon to remove, p. 88.

Cited in Schofield v. Ute etc. Co., 92 Fed. 273, holding action maintainable to remove fraudulent obstruction to enforcement of a lien; McLeod v. Lloyd, 43 Or. 271, upholding sufficiency of allegation that defendant claims some interest or right of title to specified property, as shown by an abstract of title attached to complaint; Schenk v. Wicks, 23 Utah, 581, 582, where land contract provided for execution of deed on payment of purchase money note, and land sold under owner's subsequent trust deed to secure his own note, which matured before purchase money note, and after default in payment of latter note, it was paid under subsequent agreement, trust deed was cloud on title which relieved payment of purchase money note at maturity; rule approved in Corey v. Schuster, 44 Neb. 273; Engelbach v. Simpson, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 195; Goldberg v. Taylor, 2 Utah, 491; and West Portland H. Assn. v. Lownsdale, 9 Saw. 118; 17 Fed. Rep. 618. If a title be void upon its face, if it be a mere nullity, so that an action based upon it would fall of its own weight, it does not constitute a cloud, and an action to remove it cannot be maintained in the absence of special circumstances entitling the party to relief, p. 88.

A conveyance by a widow before her dower is allotted her is not a cloud upon the title of the heirs: Lytle v. Sandefus, 93 Ala. 399. Cited and the rule applied in Sloan v. Sloan, 25 Fla. 67; Maskey v. Lock-

On a trial for murder the prosecution will not be allowed to introduce evidence of the general character of the accused, unless the defendant initiate the inquiry, p. 149.

Upon the trial of a defendant for murder, evidence of his having immoral relations with a woman is inadmissible; People v. Wallace, 89 Cal. 162. Commission of other crimes in no way related to the one on trial cannot be proved: Mann v. State, 22 Fla. 608. Cited in Thompson v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. App. 341, as to her reputation for chastity when charge was murder. Where a defendant introduces evidence of his good character in a prosecution for larceny, the evidence should be limited to that particular trait of character having relevancy to the crime charged, i. e., honesty: State v. Bloom, 68 Ind. 56; 34 Am. Rep. 248. Evidence that defendant was reported to belong to a "gang of horse thieves" is inadmissible: State v. Thurtell, 29 Kan. 149. Approved in Carter v. State, 36 Neb. 488. Cited, also, in 50 Am. Rep. 99, note.

New Trial cannot be granted on any other grounds than those specified in section 440 of the Criminal Practice Act, p. 146.

Cited and followed in People v. Voll, 43 Cal. 167, holding that it is not ground for new trial that one of the triers appointed is on the panel of the jury in attendance in the case; People v. McCarty, 48 Cal. 559;

People v. Shainwold, 51 Cal. 470, deciding that the mere fact that a sheriff, in the absence of the judge, adjourned the court at 10 o'clock A. M., instead of waiting until 12 M., is not ground for a new trial: People v. O'Brien, 88 Cal. 488, 490, where it was held that misdescription of the names of some of the jurors summoned to try the cause is not ground for a new trial or for arresting judgment; and People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 128.

The fact that a juror had formed and expressed an unqualified opinion of the guilt of the accused is not ground for a new trial, where the objection is taken for the first time after the trial, p. 147.

Rule followed in People v. Mortimer, 46 Cal. 120; and in People v. Samsells, 66 Cal. 100, where the rule was applied in a case, in which after the verdict it was found that two jurors were not on the last assessment-roll of the county. Approved in State v. Marks, 15 Nev. 36. Distinguished in State v. Morgan, 23 Utah, 228, 229, where juror had beforehand prejudiced case, but answered falsely in voir dire, new trial granted.

Practice—Order of Argument.—The court in a capital case may, in its discretion, direct by which side the argument to the jury is to be opened, but by whichever side it is opened, the other side will have the close, p. 156.

Followed in People v. Haun, 44 Cal. 100. Rule changed by Penal Code.—In criminal cases since the penal code took effect, the district attorney must open and may conclude the argument: People v. Mortimer, 46 Cal. 116. Cited in People v. Ah Hop, 1 Idaho, 702, but distinguished.

Statutory Construction.—A statute is not to be considered as repealed by implication either in whole or in part except in so far as its provisions are found absolutely inconsistent with the subsequent act, p. 154.

If there is an inconsistency between statutes, the former is repealed by implication only to the extent of the conflict: Capron v. Hitchcock, 98 Cal. 432.

Evidence.—While it is objectionable to ask a witness if he had signed a written verdict of a certain tenor without first allowing him an opportunity to examine such verdict, it is not error to admit his answer if the witness does in fact examine the verdict before answering, p. 165.

The writing itself must first be shown the witness: Gunter v. State, 83 Ala. 106. Cited in Ortiz v. State, 30 Fla. 277, but distinguished, the court holding that where a defendant on trial for crime makes a statement under oath of his defense to the jury, a previous inconsistent statement, made under the same statute, is admissible against him as evidence of guilt, without his mind being directed to the time, place, or circumstances of such inconsistent statement. Rule approved in Simmons v. State, 32 Fla. 392.

General Citations.—Leading case referred to in People v. Sutton, 73 Cal. 246, but held by the court to have no bearing on the question at issue.

New Trial.—Where a new trial is asked on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the affidavits must set forth such evidence as would be received on the trial, p. 168.

43 Cal. 178-180. HANSON v. McCUE.

Rules of Court are binding on the court equally with suitors and are to be construed as statutes would be construed. p. 179.

But rules of the court must conform to and be governed by the statute: In re Jessup, 81 Cal. 483. Cited and followed in Merchants' Nat. Bank of Jacksonville v. Grunthal, 39 Fla. 394; Coyote G. & S. M. Co. v. Ruble, 9 Oreg. 123, holding that the court has no discretion when the time for filing a petition for a rehearing has expired; and Mill Company v. Johnston, 5 Utah, 149. See, also, 41 Am. St. Rep. 643, 644, note.

Petition for Rehearing Lost.—Where a petition for a rehearing is sent by the customary and most reliable means of transmission (express company) and fails to reach the clerk within the time allowed for filing such a petition, the petition is in contemplation of law in the hands of the clerk and if lost may be supplied, p. 180.

Followed in Bernal v. Wade, 46 Cal. 641. But in Ward v. Healy, 110 Cal. 589, the court held that the fact that a printed transcript was in the office of the express company and in transit to the clerk for filing, was not equivalent to filing within the rules of the court, refusing to extend the rule of the leading case to include such a statement of facts.

Remittitur.—When a remittitur is improperly issued, the court still retains jurisdiction of the case, and the remittitur may be recalled, p. 180.

Appeal.—An order striking out portions of a pleading cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment, unless it be supported by a statement on appeal, p. 184.

Cannot be presented upon an appeal from a judgment without a bill of exceptions: Spence v. Scott, 97 Cal. 181. Followed in Reinhart v. Company D, 23 Nev. 372. Cited in Hawley v. Kocher, 123 Cal. 79, noted under Morris v. Angle, 43 Cal. 240.

Pleading.—A complaint setting up in one and the same count ownership in and ouster from, a water right, and also a site for a dam, and the land on which a dam is built, and praying for restitution, is demurrable for improperly uniting several causes of action, p. 184.

A cause of action based upon alleged fraud, malice, and oppression of the defendant, and a cause of action arising from a breach of a covenant of warranty of property conveyed, cannot be united: Cosgrove v. Fisk. 90 Cal. 76.

43 Cal. 185-190. WOOD v. GOODFELLOW.

Mortgage—Statute of Limitations.—When third persons have acquired interests in mortgaged property subsequent to the mortgage, they may invoke the aid of the statute of limitations as against the mortgage, even though the mortgagor, as between himself and the mortgagee, may have waived its protection, p. 189.

Johnson*, 140 Cal. 31, 32, noted under Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 490; Hanna v. Kasson, 26 Wash. 574, where subsequent grantee of mortgaged lands has been compelled to redeem portion thereof from execution sale under personal judgment against mortgagor upon mortgage notes, limitations not extended as against foreclosure on mortgage debt; Raymond v. Bales, 26 Wash. 499, partial payment by mortgagor on his mortgage debt will not extend limitations as against judgment creditor of mortgagor who has bought mortgaged premises at execution sale; George v. Butler, 26 Wash. 462, 466, absence of mortgagor from state does not suspend limitations as to mortgage, when he has parted with interest in mortgaged premises to resident grantee. The absence of a mortgagor from the state stops the running of the statute as to him, but not as to subsequent lienholders: Watt v. Wright, 66 Cal. 206, 207. Rule cited in Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 507, but it was held that a mere creditor, who has acquired no contract lien and parted with no value, would not come within the rule. Rule denied in Kerndt v. Porterfield, 56 Iowa, 415, holding that a note and mortgage barred by the statute of limitations may be revived by an admission of indebtedness by the mortgagor and the priority of the mortgage lien will thereby be preserved as against subsequent liens. Denied in Waterson v. Kirkwood, 17 Kan. 13; and in Schnucker v. Sibert, 18 Kan. 109, 110; 26 Am. Rep. 767, 768, 769. Rule generalized in Gruner v. Westin, 66 Tex. 217, holding that "one who has purchased property from another, in whose hands and on whose account it is charged with a lien, may assert the loss of that lien or its extinguishment, whenever it becomes necessary for the protection of his own rights." Approved in Eubanks v. Leveridge. 4 Saw. 279. Cited, also, in 82 Am. Dec. 758, note; 31 Am. Rep. 41, note; and 60 Am. St. Rep. 205, 206, 207.

Mortgage—Subsequent Encumbrancers.—As against subsequent en-cumbrancers or a subsequent holder of the equity of redemption, the mortgagor has no power by stipulation to prolong the time of payment or in any manner increase the burdens of the mortgaged premises, p. 188.

Approved in Cook v. Prindle, 97 Iowa, 475, 59 Am. St. Rep. 431, holding that after the debt was barred, the mortgagor could not revive the mortgage lien, as against one to whom he had sold the land before the statute had run. Cited in Bassett v. Monte Cristo M. Co., 15 Nev. 300, as the correct rule. A renewal of a mortgage barred by the statute of limitations does not affect the rights of third parties to the property, accruing after the execution of the mortgage: Cason v. Chambers, 62 Tex. 307. Approved in De Voe v. Rundle, 33 Wash. 610, 611, where limitations has run against a mortgage it cannot be revived by any act of mortgagor as against a subsequent judgment lien.

Action on Mortgage must be brought within four years after its maturity, p. 190.

Demurrer.—Under a general demurrer objection cannot be taken that the complaint is ambiguous, p. 196.

Defects of form of averment or uncertainty cannot be considered on general demurrer. Ward v. Clay, 82 Cal. 505. Uncertainty in a pleading must be taken advantage of by a special demurrer: Palmer v. Utah & N. Ry. Co., 2 Idaho, 293. Referred to in Isaacs v. Holland, 4 Wash. 60.

43 Cal. 196-200. PEOPLE v. AVILA.

Indictment for Receiving Stolen Property.—An allegation of the name of the person who stole the goods, or that his name is unknown to the grand jury, is unnecessary and immaterial, p. 199.

It is sufficient to charge the offense as defined by the code, and it is not necessary to allege the value of the property: People v. Rice, 73 Cal. 221. Followed in People v. Ribolsi, 89 Cal. 496; and in People v. Clausen, 120 Cal. 383. Cited in Commonwealth v. Avery, 14 Bush. 631.

Idem.—A charge in an indictment which alleges that the defendant received certain stolen property for his own gain, knowing it was stolen, is sufficient, p. 199.

Followed in People v. Ribolsi, 89 Cal. 499.

43 Cal. 200-205. ESTATE OF UTZ.

Will.—Where a testator used the expression, "to my children," and proceeded to name them and the portion devised to each, but omitted any special mention of a devise to the children of a deceased daughter, the use of the word "children" did not indicate a purpose to exclude the children of the deceased daughter, and they were entitled to a full share of the estate, as if the deceased had died intestate, p. 203.

An illegitimate child unintentionally omitted from the will of its mother is entitled to share in the estate in like manner as if legitimate; Estate of Wardell, 57 Cal. 493. In order to disinherit a child whose name is omitted from a will, the words of the will must show that the testator had the child in mind, and must indicate directly or by implication equally as strong that he intended to omit such child from the will: In re Stevens, 83 Cal. 329; 17 Am. St. Rep. 257. The fact that the testator mentioned in the will the widows of his deceased sons, the mothers of the omitted grandchildren, is not sufficient to show that he had his grandchildren in mind and does not rebut the presumption that they were forgotten, or show that the omission was intentional: In re Salmon, 107 Cal. 617; 48 Am. St. Rep. 166.

Idem.—Rule in Shelly's Case when applied to wills, is confined to cases in which after a freehold interest is devised to one, the remainder is to go in terms to the heirs of the first taker, p. 204.

Rule abrogated by section 779 of the Civil Code; Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 220.

43 Cal. 206-210. MAIN v. TAPPENER.

Attachment.—The service or posting of an attachment must precede the filing of a copy of it with the recorder, p. 209.

Approved in Sharp v. Baird, 43 Cal. 580; and in Watt v. Wright, 66 Cal. 208. But if an attachment is levied according to law, a sheriff's deed, executed in pursuance of an execution sale under a judgment rendered in the attachment suit, takes effect from the levy of the attachment. Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 172. Cited and the rule followed in First Nat. Bank v. Jasper County Bank, 71 Iowa, 488.

Idem.—To complete the service of an attachment of real property, both the service of the attachment on the occupant or posting on the premises, and the filing of it with the county recorder, are essential, p. 209.

Approved in Schwartz v. Cowell, 71 Cal. 306. Cited in Ames v. Parrott, 61 Neb. 851, on point that statute must be strictly followed and holding levy insufficient under local statute. Distinguished in Woldert v. Nedderhart etc. Co., 18 Tex. Civ. App. 604, noted under Wheaton v. Neville, 19 Cal. 42; First Nat. Bank v. Sonnelitner, 6 Idaho, 27, notice of levy of attachment must describe property sufficiently to be identifiable by purchaser; dissenting opinion of Beck, C. J., in Reynolds v. Ray, 12 Colo. 121, where he dissented from the holding of the court, that a valid levy of a writ of attachment may be made on real estate and a valid lien acquired, by indorsing thereon a description of the property attached and filing a copy of such writ in the recorder's office. Leading case approved in Graham v. Reno, 5 Colo. App. 334.

43 Cal. 210-217. BYERS v. NEAL.

Ejectment—Judgment.—A judgment for plaintiff in ejectment where title was directly in issue, is conclusive and bars defendant's rights under the same title in a subsequent action, p. 214.

Approved in Avery v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. 249. Cited in Graves v. Hebron, 125 Cal. 405, applying rule to judgment rendered against a person before patent, but after issuance of pre-emption receipt in subsequent action to quiet title involving same question of boundaries. A judgment in ejectment, where both parties claimed under executory contracts from the holder of a Mexican grant, is a bar in a subsequent action between the same parties, notwithstanding the common grantor received his patent subsequent to the judgment: Phelan v. Tyler, 64 Cal. 83. But neither the parties nor their privies are precluded from showing in a subsequent action any new matters occurring after its rendition which give the defeated party a title or right of possession: Thrift v. Delaney, 69 Cal. 192. Rule applied in Breon v. Robrecht, 118 Cal. 472.

Pre-emption.—Where a pre-emptioner had made proof and payment, a patent issued to him does not confer a new title, but is merely a formal assurance of the estate already acquired by such proof and payment, p. 215.

Cited in Thrift v. Delaney, 69 Cal. 192, holding that no estate vests, however, in the pre-emptor until he has proved up and paid for the land. A pre-emptor becomes the equitable owner of land after payment, and ejectment may be maintained on the title and right of possession evidenced by the certificate of purchase: Witcher v. Conklin, 84 Cal. 503. Cited and followed in Brown v. Warren, 16 Nev. 235.

43 Cal. 225-228. PEOPLE v. DE LA GUERRA.

Writ of Mandate will issue to compel a judge to proceed with a cause which he refuses to do without sufficient reason, p. 228.

"Mandamus lies to compel an inferior court to proceed to the trial of a cause and to set it in motion, where it has unreasonably delayed the proceedings, or where its refusal is a denial of justice": State v. Judge of Civil District Court, 34 La. Ann. 77. Writ lies where an inferior court refuses to take jurisdiction when by law it ought to do so, or where, having attained jurisdiction, it refuses to proceed in its exercise: State v. Eddy, 10 Mont. 324.

43 Cal. 229-238. MINOR v. KIDDER.

Election Contest.—An election contest is not an ordinary adversary proceeding and public interests imperatively require that the ultimate determination should, if possible, reach the very right of the case, pp. 237, 238.

Cited in Sweeny v. Adams, 141 Cal. 561, discussing protection of public interest, therein involved; Abbott v. Hartley, 143 Cal. 485, holding petition sufficiently certain; Preston v. Culbertson, 58 Cal. 209, where the rule was applied; and Lord v. Dunster, 79 Cal. 488, holding it error for the court to deny a motion for a continuance made after the trial has ended but before its decision is announced, upon affidavits of an election board showing that they were greatly surprised at the result of the recount, and that they had since the adjournment of the court procured certificates of a sufficient number of voters of that precinct, who would testify that they had voted for respondent, to insure his election. But the doctrine of the leading case does not go to the extent of holding that the usual rules for the introduction and taking of evidence and other rules for the orderly conduct of judicial proceedings do not apply as much to election contests as to ordinary civil actions: Lay v. Parsons, 104 Cal. 663. Court has power of its own motion to adjourn the session in an election contest several days and does not thereby lose jurisdiction: Falltrick v. Sullivan, 119 Cal. 617. Cited in Nash v. Craig, 184 Mo. 356, where an amendment was allowed making the grounds of contest more specific; and in Schneider v. Bray, 22 Nev. 278.

Idem.—Any person who is an elector may contest the election of a county officer, p. 237.

So a private citizen may institute an inquiry into the conduct of office holders: In the Matter of Marks, 45 Cal. 216.

43 Cal. 238-241. SERVANTI v. LUSK.

Execution.—Personal property exempt from sale under execution is none the less exempt because the judgment debtor owns an undivided interest in it, p. 240.

Approved as a general rule in Wise v. Fry, 7 Neb. 136; 29 Am. Rep. 381. Referred to in Noyes v. Belding, 5 S. Dak. 616. The actual homestead of a head of a family is protected from forced sale, and there is nothing restricting the benefit of exemption to those having any particular kind of title—any interest of the claimant is exempt: In re Swearinger and Lamar, 5 Saw. 57. Cited, also, in extended note in 21 Am. Dec. 551; and in 1 Am. St. Rep. 593, note. Distinguished in Poreh v. Arkansas etc. Co., 65 Ark. 44, 67 Am. St. Rep. 897, denying right of partners to claim individual exemption in firm property during its existence, under local statutes.

All Facts Within Issues, not expressly found and not inconsistent with other findings, are presumed to have been found in accordance with judgment, p. 241.

Approved in Gay v. Havermale, 27 Wash. 401, decree against plaintiff on ground of laches which recites it is based on findings and evidence is erroneous where issue of laches not raised by the answer.

43 Cal. 242-250. JOHNSON v. SIMONTON.

Swill Milk Ordinance.—It is within the constitutional power of the legislature to authorize to supervisors to make all regulations necessary or expedient for the preservation of the public health, and under it the supervisors had the right to prohibit the feeding of cows on still slopes and vending the milk of such cows, p. 249.

Cited in Odd Fellows' Cem. Assn. v. San Francisco, 140 Cal. 231, 234, noted under Ex parte Andrews, 18 Cal. 679; Weeks v. McNulty, 101 Tenn. 506, 70 Am. St. Rep. 699, holding innkeeper civilly liable for injuries resulting from failure to erect fire-escapes under ordinance; Jackson v. Kansas etc. Co., 157 Mo. 637, ruling similarly as to breach of ordinance regulating rate of speed of railroad trains. Ordinance prohibiting the slaughtering of animals within the city limits is valid: Ex parte Heilbron, 65 Cal. 610. Ordinance is valid prohibiting the keeping of more than two cows within certain portions of the city limits: In re Linehan, 72 Cal. 116. An ordinance establishing fire limits is valid: McCloskey v. Kreling, 76 Cal. 512. Cited in Yount v. Denning, 52 Kan. 636, to the point that an ordinance authorized by statute, and duly passed, becomes binding on all persons within the corporate limits. Referred to in Commonwealth v. Parks, 155 Mass. 533, where an ordinance was held valid which prohibited blasting without the written consent of the board of aldermen; and in Bott v. Pratt, 33 Minn. 328; 53 Am. Rep. 51. Cited, also, in 34 Am. Dec. 633.

Idem.—The scientific correctness of the determination by the supervisors that the milk of cows fed on still slopes is unwholesome is not open to inquiry in the supreme court, p. 249.

Where the questions of fact calling into exercise the police power were determined by the municipality, the correctness of their determination as to matters of fact is not open to inquiry, by way of defense, to a prosecution under the ordinance: Ex parte Lacey, 108 Cal. 329; 49 Am. St. Rep. 95.

43 Cal. 250-253. GRIMM v. CURLEY.

Adverse Possession.—Where a grantee by mistake and in good faith entered into a strip of land adjoining his lot, but not within its boundaries, and remains in continuous, open, notorious, and adverse possession for five years from the time of entry, the remedy of the former owner is barred, p. 253.

Cited in Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 590, 49 Am. Rep. 103, to the point that to set the statute of limitations in motion there must be a hostile possession, open and notorious; Bowers v. Ledgerwood, 25 Wash. 18, holding adverse possession established under facts stated. Leading case followed in Silverer v. Hansen, 77 Cal. 582, 584. If one tenant in common notifies the other that he claims the whole property as his own, and the latter acquiesces in the pretension and leaves the premises in the possession of the first, the statute of limitations begins to run notwithstanding each of the parties was under a mistake as to his rights: McCormack v. Silsby, 82 Cal. 76. Title may be acquired by adverse possession for five years, although the land in controversy was claimed under a mistaken belief as to boundaries: Woodward v. Faria, 109 Cal. 17. Cited in Loockey v. Horsky, 4 Mont. 463, and in 24 Am. St. Rep. 369, note.

40 Cal. 253-263. CORWIN v. BENSLEY.

Lis Pendens.—If such a lis pendens is filed in an action to try the title to land as imparts notice to purchasers from a party to the action, such purchasers must apply for leave to protect their interests during the pendency of the suit, p. 259.

One who purchased land subject to the mortgages, and with notice of the pendency of the suit to foreclose them, becomes bound by the notice to appear in the action and defend his interests: Amador C. & M. Co. v. Mitchell, 59 Cal. 178.

Does a lis pendens filed by a plaintiff, in an action to try title to land in which defendants set up title and ask for affirmative relief, impart notice to purchasers from plaintiff pending the action? p. 259.

Answered in the affirmative in Welton v. Cook, 61 Cal. 487, declaring the leading case not an adjudication upon the point.

If a lis pendens is not filed or recorded, the title of a bona fide purchaser without actual notice would be unaffected by the judgment, p. 259.

Statutory mode must be followed, or there can be no lis pendens as to third parties: Pennington v. Martin, 146 Ind. 637.

43 Cal. 264-269. BUHNE v. CORBETT.

A plea or defense regarded as an entirety is not to be defeated or disregarded merely because it is inconsistent with some other plea or defense pleaded, p. 269.

The rule is well established in the cases citing it. Cited in Banta v. Siller, 121 Cal. 418, noted under Billings v. Drew, 52 Cal. 568; Detroit etc. Co. v. Stevens, 20 Utah, 247, noted under Bell v. Brown, 22 Cal. 672; Hayes v. Silver etc. Co., 136 Cal. 241, on point that verified answer must be consistent. A party does not waive the effect of a denial contained in one portion of his answer by setting up in the appropriate manner new or affirmative matter: Billings v. Drew, 52 Cal. 568. A judgment on the pleadings is not authorized if the answer deny the material allegations of the complaint, although in a special defense separately stated the allegations formerly denied are admitted: Botto v. Vandament, 67 Cal. 334. Cited in McDonald v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 101 Cal. 218, to the point that there is no distinction between verified and unverified answers in this particular. The effect of a denial in one defense is not waived by the setting up of affirmative matter of examination in another defense, nor can the admissions made in the affirmative defense relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of proving the matters denied: Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 316. Approved in People v. Lothrop, 3 Colo. 449; Stebbins v. Lardner, 2 S. Dak. 140; Lawrence v. Peck, 3 S. Dak. 648, holding that even if defenses were inconsistent, it would not justify the court in requiring the defendant to stand upon one alone and abandon the other; and Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Warren, 3 Wyo. 137.

The effect of a denial of possession in one defense is not waived by the setting up of affirmative matter admitting possession in another defense, and the admissions made in the affirmative defense cannot relieve the plaintiff from proving the matters denied, p. 269.

Approved in Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 316. Denied in McLaughlin v. Alexander, 2 S. Dak. 236; and in Seattle National Bank v. Carter, 13 Wash. 289.

Cited in Ray v. Moore, 24 Ind. App. 490, where denials and plea of confession and avoidance were joined.

43 Cal. 270-274. ALDEN v. COUNTY OF ALAMEDA.

When a money judgment is recovered against a county, the proper remedy is to present it to the supervisors for allowance as an audited claim, and if the board refuses to allow it, it may be compelled to do so by mandamus, p. 273.

Cited in County v. Raymond etc. Co., 139 Cal. 132, but holding personal judgment against county for compensation in its condemnation suit not prejudicial to defendant therein; Bigelow v. Los Angeles, 141 Cal. 507, noted under McCann v. Sierra Co., 7 Cal. 121; Greeley v. Cascade Co., 22 Mont. 589, noted under Dana v. San Francisco, 19 Cal. 496. Where a city board of education has audited and allowed a claim against a school district, mandamus will lie to compel it to draw an order on the county superintendent: Barber v. Mulford, 117 Cal. 360. It is for the board to determine how far the county will defend against a claim which has been prosecuted to judgment, and if the board refuses or delays to make payment the claimant is entitled to a writ of mandamus: Stoddard v. Benton, 6 Colo. 517. Cited in State v. Commissioners Lander Co., 22 Nev. 76, to the point that a judgment for a certain sum against a county is an auditing within the meaning of the statute. Rule approved in Emery County v. Burrenson, 14 Utah, 333; 60 Am. St. Rep. 901; Lockard v. Board of Commrs., Decatur Co., 10 Kan. App. 319. Cited, also, in 68 Am. Dec. 297, note.

Rule Limited.—Rule requiring presentation to the board applies only to unliquidated claims and accounts, not to bonds and coupons, nor to a judgment upon bonds and coupons, and such presentation is not necessary before an action on such a judgment: Vincent v. Lincoln County, 62 Fed. Rep. 707.

No action can be prosecuted against a county until the claim has been first presented to the supervisors for allowance and has been rejected, pp. 272, 273.

An averment that a claim has been duly presented and rejected is not sufficient—the plaintiff must aver all matter required by the statute: Rhoda v. Alameda Co., 52 Cal. 351.

43 Cal. 274-278. LIVERMORE v. STINE.

If a party claiming under a contract required by the statute of frauds to be in writing be permitted, without objection, to prove the contract by parol, such testimony cannot be stricken out at a subsequent stage of the trial because not in writing, p. 278.

Applied in a case where a deposition was improperly admitted as evidence: People v. Salorse, 62 Cal. 145, laying down the general rule that a party must object at the time the act is done or the ruling made by the court. Cited in Schultz v. Noble, 77 Cal. 81. *People v. Plaintiff is only entitled to recover the actual loss suffered from the breach of a contract to furnish freight to a steamboat, that is, the net profits that would have been made under the contract, p. 284.

Where there was a breach of contract to purchase all the lumber plaintiff should manufacture, et cetera, it was held that the measure of damages was the contract price of the lumber less the expense he would have incurred in manufacturing it: Winans v. Sierra Lumber Co., 66 Cal. 67.

The measure of damages for breach of contract to furnish a steamboat with freight is the difference between the net profits that would have been made under the contract and the net profits which might have been made with reasonable diligence, but the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that a profit had been or might have been realized, p. 284.

Under the act of 1863, the statute of limitations did not begin to run against lands included in a Mexican grant until after final confirmation by the courts of the United States or the issuance of a patent, p. 291.

Statute of limitations begins to run only from the issuance of the patent: O'Connor v. Fogle, 63 Cal. 11, where the rule was applied to a patent issued by the state. Cited, also, in 85 Am. Dec. 172, note; 76 Am. St. Rep. 483, note, on adverse possession of public property.

Where the final confirmation of a Mexican grant was to be made by the board of United States land commissioners, and not by the district court, the district court has no jurisdiction under the act of Congress of June 14, 1860, to adjudicate on the survey unless the survey had been returned into court and remained pending there at the time of the passage of the act, p. 292.

In an action of unlawful detainer against a tenant for holding over, if the tenant be able to show that he did not enter under the lease, but that, being already in possession, he was induced to accept a lease from the plaintiff, through deception and imposition practiced upon him, then this state of facts destroys the relation of landlord and tenant and he is not estopped to deny the title of the plaintiff, p. 305.

Referred to in Peralta v. Ginochio, 47 Cal. 460. Approved in Steele v. Bond, 28 Minn. 273; and in Loring v. Harmon, 84 Mo. 127, holding that if the "lessee was in possession at the time he entered into the lease, as tenant of another, he may resist a recovery on the ground that he accepted the lease in mistake, or was induced by fraud or misrepresentation to accept it." Cited, also, in 13 Am. Dec. 71, note.

Rule Limited.—The rule that in an action of unlawful detainer the tenant is not estopped from disputing the title of the landlord, is limited to cases where the tenant was induced to accept the lease by reason of the fraud of the lessor which destroyed the relation of landlord and tenant; Knowles v. Murphy, 107 Cal. 114.

A broker employed to make a sale of land is entitled to his commission on finding a purchaser ready and willing to complete the purchase on the terms agreed upon, p. 311.

Cited and approved in the following cases: Gonzales v. Broad, 57 Cal. 226, holding that the refusal of the purchaser to purchase because of an unsatisfactory title does not affect the broker's right to his commission; Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 263, deciding broker is entitled to his commission if he find a purchaser, even though the owner negotiated a sale himself; Wilson v. Sturgis, 71 Cal. 229; Maxon v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 352, deciding, however, that the mere finding of a person able to purchase and who makes a deposit with the broker, to be returned if title is defective, and who refuses to consummate the sale owing to a defective title, does not entitle the broker to his commission, particularly where the vendor never met or even knew the name of such purchaser; *Oullahan v. Homestead.—If, on the death of the husband, the widow performs the conditions and obtains the patent for the homestead, she acquires an absolute title in fee, from all trust in favor of children, p. 319.

Cited and applied in Buxton v. Traver, 67 Cal. 174, holding that the children of a deceased pre-emption claimant acquire no rights in a homestead filed by the widow on the same land after the pre-emptor's death.

Idem.—If the father and mother should both die before the conditions had been fully performed by the homestead claimant, the right and fee would immediately inure to the minor children and might be sold for their use at any time within two years, and the purchaser, on the payment of the remaining fees, would become entitled to a patent, pp. 317, 318.

The giving of notice of intention to move for a new trial amounts to a waiver of the right to notice of filing of the findings, p. 322.

Approved in Thorne v. Finn, 69 Cal. 254; Gray v. Winder, 77 Cal. 527, where it was held that when a party acts as if he had formal notice of a decision, such acts constitute a waiver of such formal notice; Forni v.

Yoell, 99 Cal. 178; and Burlock v. Shupe, 5 Utah, 433, holding, however, that the asking of a stay of proceedings to prepare notice of intention to move for a new trial would not be a waiver of the statutory right to have written notice of the decision of the court before filing notice of intention.

An order extending the time to prepare and file motion for a new trial extends the time to prepare and file notice of motion for a new trial, p. 321.

Affirmed in Burton v. Todd, 68 Cal. 488.

A defendant in a motion for a new trial may file amendments to the statement without waiving his right to object that the statement was not filed in time, by a preface that he does so without prejudice to his right to object in this particular, p. 322.

Quitclaim Deeds.—A quitclaim deed passes whatever interest the seller has in the land at the time of its execution, and the prior recording of such deed will give it a preference over a deed of bargain and sale previously executed, but which was subsequently recorded, p. 344.

Affirmed in Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 343. A quitclaim deed is sufficient to enable the grantee to maintain ejectment if his grantor could have done so: Rego v. Van Pelt, 65 Cal. 256. Rule of the leading case seems to be doubted in Allison v. Thomas, 72 Cal. 564, 1 Am. St. Rep. 90, where it was said to be contrary to the decisions elsewhere. But in *Nidever v. The rule was discussed in Hastings v. Brooker, 98 Ind. 159, but the court did not decide the point. However, in Davidson v. Coon, 125 Ind. 503, and in Smith v. McClain, 146 Ind. 84, the rule of the leading case was approved and followed. Leading case was also approved in Schott v.

Dosh, 49 Neb. 193; 59 Am. St. Rep. 536; Wilhelm v. Wilken, 149 N. Y. 452; 52 Am. St. Rep. 746; and in Cutler v. James, 64 Wis. 178, 54 Am. Rep. 606. There is, however, a great diversity of opinion in other jurisdictions as to the rule of the leading case. In Gress v. Evans, 1 Dak. Ter. 384, the point was discussed, but not decided. But in Parker v. Randolph, 5 S. Dak. 558, a contrary doctrine was upheld, Corson, J., dissenting and approving the leading case. The question was raised but not decided in Hentig v. Redden, 35 Kan. 475. And in Johnson v. Williams, 37 Kan. 182, 1 Am. St. Rep. 246, the doctrine of the leading case was limited, the court holding a purchaser under a quitclaim deed not to be a bona fide purchaser as to outstanding equities and interests discoverable by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Rule of the leading case doubted in America Mort. Co. v. Hutchinson, 19 Oreg. 347. Cited in 25 Am. Dec. 164, 165, note.

43 Cal. 344-352. PEOPLE v. WILLIAMS.

Insanity produced by intoxication does not destroy responsibility for crime, if the accused, when sane, voluntarily made himself intoxicated, p. 352.

Approved in People v. Ferris, 55 Cal. 592; People v. Jones, 63 Cal. 169; and in State v. Thompson, 12 Nev. 151. Cited in People v. Fellows, 122 Cal. 239, and People v. Methever, 132 Cal. 332, noted under People v. Lewis, 36 Cal. 531.

In deliberating, there need be no appreciable time between the intention to kill and the act of killing, p. 351.

Approved in Miller v. State, 54 Ala. 157; People v. Jamarillo, 57 Cal. 114, holding that there need be no appreciable space of time between the intention to kill and the act of killing; State v. Pritchard, 15 Nev. 80; and People v. Calton, 5 Utah, 459. Cited, also, in 18 Am. Dec. 783, note.

In a case of homicide, when the jury are to pass upon the question of premeditation for the purpose of fixing the degree of the crime, drunkenness may be taken into consideration solely for the purpose of passing on the fact of premeditation, p. 352.

Cited in People v. Blake, 65 Cal. 278, holding evidence of protracted intemperance admissible on the question of intent, in a prosecution for forgery. Applied in People v. Franklin, 70 Cal. 643, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder. Approved in People v. Vincent, 95 Cal. 428; Aszman v. State, 123 Ind. 357; State v. Zorn, 22 Oreg. 601, where it was said that the fact of intoxication is to be submitted to the jury for the purpose of enabling them to determine the intent of the accused in committing the act; State v. Robinson, 20 W. Va. 733, 738; 43 Am. Rep. 804, 808; and Hopt v. People, 104 U. S. 634. Savary v. State, 63 Neb. 172. Cited also, in 87 Am. Dec. 102, note; and 40 Am. Rep. 566, 567, note.

Defendant's counsel is not entitled to make his argument on the case made out by the prosecution when it closes, but must wait until the evidence is concluded, p. 349.

Approved in People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 348, 349, holding that counsel for defendant must confine himself to a statement of the facts, the effect thereof, and his conclusions therefrom, without any argument upon the evidence introduced by the prosecution.

An instruction should be refused, if there is no evidence on which it could be founded, p. 351.

Approved in People v. Bourke, 66 Cal. 456.

43 Cal. 353-356. ROBINSON v. BUTTE COUNTY.

Mandamus.—When the legislature makes it the duty of the supervisors to provide by taxation a sufficient amount to meet the accruing interest on county bonds and also to create a redemption fund, the supervisors may be compelled to do so by mandamus if they refuse, p. 356.

Mandamus will lie to compel the levy and collection of a tax for the payment of a municipal debt: People v. Getzendauer, 137 Ill. 260.

43 Cal. 356-358. AUTENREITH v. HESSENAUER.

Writ of Assistance.—A party who forecloses a mortgage, given by one partner, and obtains a sheriff's deed for an undivided interest in partnership property, without making the other partner a party to the action, is not entitled to a writ of assistance to be placed in possession, as against a receiver of the partnership appointed by the court, p. 358.

43 Cal. 359-364. GREY v. TUBBS.

Equity will treat time as the essence of contract when from the agreement it clearly appears that the parties so intended; and if it appears that the parties have in fact contracted that if the purchaser makes default in the payments as agreed upon he shall not be entitled to a conveyance and shall lose the benefit of his purchase, and it also appears that the purchaser is without excuse for his delay, equity will not relieve him from the consequences of his default, p. 364.

Cited and followed in Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 320, 321, 18 Am. St. Rep. 190, 191. Glock v. Howard etc. Co., 123 Cal. 9, 69 Am. St. Rep. 24, discussing right of respective parties on vendee's default, and denying him right to recover installments theretofore made; Williams v. Long, 139 Cal. 189, holding time of the essence under facts stated; Peterson v. Davis, 63 Kan. 673, sustaining ejectment against vendee in possession after his default under such contract. No particular form of stipulation is necessary to make time the essence of contract, but any clause will have the effect which clearly and absolutely provides that the contract is to be void if the fulfillment is not within the prescribed time; Martin v.

Morgan, 87 Cal. 207, 208; 22 Am. St. Rep. 242. Rule applied in Woodruff v. Semi-tropic L. & W. Co., 87 Cal. 280, to a case where vendor was in default owing to delay or neglect to convey. Referred to in Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 450; 22 Am. St. Rep. 262. A stipulation that time should be of the essence of contract is applicable only to the agreement on the part of the purchaser to pay the purchase money, and is intended for the benefit of the vendor alone, who may elect either to rescind or enforce the contract, and the purchaser cannot work a rescission by a default on his part: Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 494. Approved in Bennett v. Hyde, 92 Cal. 133, a similar case; and Alexander v. Jackson, 92 Cal. 526, holding that to entitle a person in default to relief, it must appear that he has promptly and in good faith offered to fulfill his contract, and neither infancy or ignorance of his rights is a sufficient excuse. Although it is unnecessary in order to make time the essence of contract that it should be declared to be so in the words of the statute (section 1492 of the Civil Code), yet the intent to make it the essence of contract must be clearly, unequivocally, and unmistakably shown by an express declaration: Miller v. Cox, 96 Cal. 344. Time is usually regarded as of the essence of contract where the character of the property renders it liable to fluctuations in value, and this is especially true of mining transactions: Settle v. Winters, 2 Idaho, 209. Approved in Missouri River F. S. & G. R. R. Co. v. Brickley, 21 Kan. 291. Cited, also, in 50 Am. Dec. 509, extended note; 50 Am. Dec. 677, extended note; 68 Am. Dec. 87, note; and 27 Am. St. Rep. 166, note.

Contracts.—Courts of equity have not the power to make contracts for the parties, nor alter those which have been deliberately made, p. 364.

Equity can only enforce the performance of a contract as made by the parties themselves; it has no power to make a contract for them: Magee v. McManus, 70 Cal. 558. Equity cannot make or alter a contract of the parties and then execute it: Rison v. Newberry, 90 Va. 521.

43 Cal. 365-369. CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY v. PLACER COUNTY. S. C. 32 Cal. 582; 34 Cal. 352.

Certiorari.—The writ will only lie where an inferior tribunal, board, or officer exercising judicial functions has exceeded its jurisdiction, and there is no appeal nor any plain, speedy, or adequate remedy, p. 367.

The leading case is cited with approval in the following decisions: Certiorari will not lie to review the proceedings of the board of supervisors in allowing an illegal claim: Andrews v. Pratt, 44 Cal. 318. It cannot be used as a writ for the correction of mistakes, either in law or in fact: C. P. R. R. Co. v. Placer Co., 46 Cal. 670. Cited in P. M. S. S. Co. v. Board of Supervisors, 50 Cal. 283, to the point that the board of supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization, does not exceed its jurisdiction by refusing to accede to an application to reduce the assessed value of property. Legislative acts cannot be reviewed by certiorari:

Spring Valley W. W. v. Bryant, 52 Cal. 137. Action of board of supervisors in rejecting a bid for county printing is not judicial and cannot be reviewed by the writ; Townsend v. Copeland, 56 Cal. 615. If a court has jurisdiction, an erroneous order or decree of the court cannot be corrected by the writ of prohibition: Wiggin v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 402. Writ will not lie to review an order for a street improvement: Quinchard v. Board of Trustees, 113 Cal. 668. If one in possession of the office of city alderman seeks only a review of the proceedings taken by the board of alderman disturbing him in the enjoyment of it, certiorari will lie: Aldermen v. Darrow, 13 Colo. 465; 16 Am. St. Rep. 217. Approved, also, in Moline, Wilburn & Stoddard Co. v. Curtis, 38 Neb. 532; and in Phillips v. Welch, 12 Nev. 169. See, also, extended notes, 12 Am. Dec. 536; and 23 Am. St. Rep. 108.

Jurisdiction.—Erroneous views entertained, or evidence erroneously admitted, do not make a case of want of jurisdiction, p. 368.

That errors of fact or law cannot be reviewed by this writ is approved by the following cases: C. P. R. R. Co. v. Placer Co., 46 Cal. 670; Farmer's etc. Bank v. Board, 97 Cal. 327; White v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 64, 65.

Construction of Statute.—The words in section 446 of the Practice Act "has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board," et cetera, presents substantially the same idea as the words "has regularly pursued the authority of such tribunal, board," et cetera, in section 462 of the act, p. 367.

This construction has been followed in Farmer's etc. Bank v. Board, 97 Cal. 326; Quinchard v. Board of Trustees, 113 Cal. 668; and Phillips v. Welch, 12 Nev. 175.

43 Cal. 369-371. FEELEY v. SHIRLEY.

Appeal.—A ruling of the court striking out a portion of the complaint or answer cannot be reviewed on appeal unless made a part of the record by a statement or bill of exceptions, p. 370.

Approved in Spence v. Scott, 97 Cal. 182; and in Graham v. Linehan, 1 Idaho, 781. Cited in Hawley v. Kocher, 123 Cal. 79, noted under Morris v. Angle, 42 Cal. 240.

Pleadings.—If a complaint avers that the defendant wrongfully broke down plaintiff's flume, and the answer denies that the plaintiff, wrongfully or otherwise, broke down the flume, the answer admits the breaking down of the flume and only denies its wrongful character, p. 369.

Referred to and applied in a somewhat similar case: Thomas v. State, 51 Ark. 139. The averment by a defendant that he did not "make and furnish" is by implication an admission that he did furnish: Thomas v. State, 54 Ark. 587.

43 Cal. 371-377. SMITH v. O'HARA.

Appropriation of Water.—If the first appropriator of water takes only a part of the water of a stream, another may afterward appropriate the residue, p. 375.

Cited in Southside Imp. Co. v. Burson, 147 Cal. 407, where non-riparian owner appropriates limited quantity of water for irrigation subsequent appropriator may take whole of surplus though former afterwards needs surplus; Edgar v. Stevenson, 70 Cal. 290, where an injunction restraining a defendant from using surplus water during extraordinary high water was refused. The rule, however, is not applicable in a case where water discharged from a canal is appropriated without the owner's consent: Ball v. Kehl, 95 Cal. 614. Cited in a case where riparian rights were in issue, and holding that if the upper proprietor only uses a portion of the water, the proprietor below may have the benefit of that surplus: Mumpower v. City of Bristol, 90 Va. 155; 44 Am. St. Rep. 905. Cited, also, in extended note in 42 Am. Dec. 282.

There is no difference in principle between appropriation measured by time, and those measured in volume, p. 376.

Cited in Cache etc. Co. v. Water etc. Co., 25 Colo. 167, 71 Am. St. Rep. 136, sustaining appropriation for definite periods; Mattis v. Hosmer, 37 Or. 530, noted under Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 34. Where an appropriator has limited his use of water for irrigation to certain days of the week, the water not used is subject to appropriation by another: Santa Paula Water Works v. Peralta, 113 Cal. 44. If a plaintiff only appropriated the water during certain days of the week, or during a certain number of days in a month, then the defendants would be entitled to appropriate such surplus during the remaining days; Barnes v. Sabron, 10 Nev. 245.

Sale of Ditch and Water Right cannot be proved by parol but must be evidenced by a deed, p. 376.

Approved in Hayes v. Fine, 91 Cal. 398; Burnham v. Freeman, 11 Colo. 606; and Child v. Whitman, 7 Colo. App. 119.

One entering into the possession of a ditch and water right under a verbal sale does not succeed to the rights of the seller so as to claim the benefit of the seller's prior appropriation, but must date his appropriation from the time he enters into possession, p. 377.

Cited and applied in Fabian v. Collins, 3 Mont. 228. The rule was held inapplicable where a ditch was conveyed with a possessory interest in land as an incident of such possessory interest; Hindman v. Risor, 21 Oreg. 119. A transfer of the possessory right to land by parol carries with it the water so appropriated: Low v. Schaffer, 24 Oreg. 242, citing the leading case to the point that the verbal sale and transfer of his water right by a prior appropriator operates ipso facto as an abandonment thereof. Leading case approved in Union Mill & Mining Co. v. Dangberg, 81 Fed. Rep. 104. Cited in Salina etc. Co. v. Salina etc. Co., 7 Utah, 460, discussing water rights as between successive appropriators.

Denied.—The rule of the leading case was denied in McDodd v. Lannen, 19 Mont. 86.

Sheriff's Fees.—Where a sheriff advertises property for sale under execution, the judgment debtor cannot deprive the sheriff of his fees allowed in the case of a sale, by paying the full amount of the judgment to the judgment creditor, p. 380.

Cited in dissenting opinion of Watson, J., in Jackson v. Siglin, 10 Oreg. 100. Approved in Jurgens v. Hauser, 19 Mont. 187, holding that a sheriff is entitled to his commission on the purchase price of land sold by him under foreclosure when the mortgagee buys in the premises.

When goods are wrongfully taken and converted, the owner may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for their value, p. 382.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies for pasturage where defendants' cattle were wrongfully on plaintiff's land: De la Guerra v. Newhall, 55 Cal. 23. Approved in Lehmann v. Schmidt, 87 Cal. 20, holding that if a bailee refuses, upon demand, to deliver the property to the bailor, without setting up any lien thereon, he waives his right to claim a lien after suit brought to recover the value of the property. Cited in Monroe v. Cannon, 24 Mont. 320, noted under Fratt v. Clark, 12 Cal. 89; Crown Cycle Co. v. Brown, 39 Or. 289, where sale of goods under contract giving specified time in which to pay is fraudulently procured by purchaser, seller may waive tort and sue for value of goods without waiting for vendee to convert them into cash; Livingston v. Lovgren, 27 Wash. 109, purchaser of logs on which there is lien, within thirty days in which claimant may file lien notice, must see that purchase money is appropriated to satisfaction of lien, or he is liable upon an implied contract to lien claimant, up to full value of logs.

Service of Summons.—In making service of summons, and in the return of such service, the provisions of the statute must be and must be shown to have been substantially observed and followed by the officer; otherwise the proceedings cannot be supported upon a direct appeal taken, p. 389.

An affidavit which fails to show service upon the appellant, and is the only proof of service in the record, is insufficient to sustain a judgment upon a direct appeal therefrom: Linott v. Rowland, 119 Cal. 453. If the summons had been served by any party empowered to act, the affidavit thereon must show that he was one of the persons described in the statutes: Black v. Clendenin, 3 Mont. 47. Upon an appeal from a judgment by default, the record must affirmatively show jurisdiction of the defendant, either by his appearance or by a proper service of summons, and no presumption can be indulged in that there was some other and different kind of service made from that appearing in the record: Lonkey v. Keyes D. M. Co., 21 Nev. 320.

Practice—Arbitration.—A submission to arbitration is invalid unless: 1. The parties by their stipulation authorize the clerk to enter the note of submission in the register; and 2. That the note of submission is in fact entered by the clerk, p. 395.

Approved in Kettleman v. Treadway, 65 Cal. 505.

43 Cal. 395-397. DAVANAY v. EGGENHOFF.

Pleadings—Promissory Note.—A complaint on a promissory note that fails to allege that the note remains "due and unpaid," does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, p. 397.

An allegation that the defendant has refused and still refuses to pay and that there is now due the sum, etc., is insufficient: Scroufe v. Clay, 71 Cal. 124.

Rule Limited.—In Wise v. Hogan, 77 Cal. 188, it was held that the rule was firmly settled that an averment of nonpayment is necessary to the sufficiency of a complaint for money due on contract, but is not applicable in an action against an administrator, where the complaint alleges nonpayment by the deceased, and presentation and rejection by the administrator; nonpayment by the administrator should be presumed from the alleged fact of his rejection of the claim. Leading case followed in Barney v. Vigoreaux, 92 Cal. 632, and Hurley v. Ryan, 119 Cal. 72. Rule of the leading case admitted to be correct in Hershfield & Bro. v. Aiken, 3 Mont. 449, but the court further held that such a defect would be cured by answering over and going to trial on the merits. Cited and followed in Vogel v. Walker, 3 Utah, 229. Cited, also, in 61 Am. Dec. 61, extended note.

General Citations.—Cited in Tomlinson v. Ayres, 117 Cal. 571, to the point that an allegation that "there is now due," is not an allegation of "nonpayment."

Pleadings.—If an unverified complaint on a promissory note avers that it has not been paid, a general denial in the answer puts in issue the fact of payment, p. 397.

In an action to recover money due, the defendant, under the general denial, may prove payment, or that the plaintiff had transferred the demand to another person: Wetmore v. San Francisco, 44 Cal. 300. Cited and followed in Bank of Shasta v. Boyd, 99 Cal. 606. Distinguished in Alden v. Carpenter, 7 Colo. 91, on the ground that in Colorado there is no such a "thing" as a general denial. Again distinguished on the same and other grounds in Watson v. Lemen, 9 Colo. 203. Approved in Weissman v. Russell, 10 Oreg. 75.

Idem.—If, in an action on a promissory note, the pleadings are verified, a denial on information and belief that the note had not been paid, is insufficient, p. 397.

Constitutional Law.—The state revenue laws are not unconstitutional for want of uniformity where the legislature has prescribed different modes for the enforcement of the payment of delinquent taxes in the several counties, pp. 433, 434.

Followed in San Francisco v. S. V. W. W., 54 Cal. 574, where a special act of the legislature providing for the collection of taxes assessed, levied, and delinquent in San Francisco, was declared constitutional, rule changed by new constitution, article IV, section 5: Ex parte Burke, 59 Cal. 8, but the change in the constitution was held not to apply to past legislation. It is within the power of the legislature to pass local or special laws regulating the compensation of county officers; State v. Fogus, 19 Nev. 253. Cited in McGill v. State, 34 Ohio St. 241, holding that an act of the legislature prescribing a different mode of summoning jurors in one county from that prescribed for the remaining counties, to be constitutional: State v. Shearer, 46 Ohio St. 282, deciding that the formation of a school district from territory within the limits of a township by special act of the legislature, is constitutional.

Idem.—Creation of Revenue Districts.—The constitution does not prohibit the creation of more than one revenue district in a county, nor the election of assessors and collectors in each district, p. 435.

The rule of the leading case explained, as being founded on a provision of the California constitution in Hutchinson v. Ozark Land Co., 57 Ark. 558, 38 Am. St. Rep. 280, in which a contrary rule was maintained. Approved in Rosenborough v. Boardman, 67 Cal. 118. Referred to and the principle followed in Gilson v. Board of Commissioners, 128 Ind. 72.

Taxation.—The state has authority to tax the property of railroads lying within its limits, p. 431.

Measure of Damages.—Evidence as to the cost of new buildings to replace those destroyed is admissible, as furnishing data for an approximate estimate of the value of the old buildings, p. 438.

It is a general rule that for permanent injuries to real or personal property, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the depreciation in value caused by the injury: Williams v. Missouri Furnace Co., 13 Mo. App. 73. Where buildings are destroyed, the proper measure of damages is the value of the buildings: White v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 1 S. Dak. 329.

Evidence—Motion to Strike Out.—A motion to strike out evidence should not be allowed in either civil or criminal cases, where evidence is permitted to be given without objection in the first instance and then a motion to strike out made, on grounds readily available when the evidence was offered, p. 446.

Leading case approved in People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 542, where it was said that a party is not permitted to remain silent when evidence is offered, with the privilege of accepting it if favorable, and afterward moving to strike it out if unfavorable: People v. Salorse, 62 Cal. 145, holding that an objection to the admission of evidence cannot be made for the first time in the supreme court; Wright v. Seymour, 69 Cal. 128; People v. Samario, 84 Cal. 485; People v. Nelson, 85 Cal. 426.

Doctrine Limited.—The rule of the leading case does not apply where the answer of the witness sought to be stricken out is not responsive to the question addressed to him: People v. Dixon, 94 Cal. 258. Leading case cited and followed in Wheelock v. Godfrey, 100 Cal. 588; and In re Wax, 106 Cal. 347, holding that the withdrawal of an objection deprives the contestant of the right to object afterward by moving to strike out. See, also, 6 Am. Confession.—A voluntary confession made to an officer having the prisoner in custody, is admissible if not induced by improper means, p. 446.

Statements made by a person accused of crime, together with his demeanor at the time of arrest, are always open to inquiry when not made under duress, or induced by menace, or promises of immunity; State v. Phelps, 5 S. Dak. 490. The admission of confessions made in the defendant's presence implicating him in a homicide which were not denied by him, is not cause for reversal when the jury were instructed as to dangerous and unsatisfactory character of such evidence: *Green v. New Trial.—If the court has passed on a motion for a new trial made in due form upon a settled statement, the order is conclusive on the court making it, and the court cannot afterward vacate the order and decide again on the motion, p. 454.

Cited and followed in People v. Center, 61 Cal. 194; O. F. Sav. Bank v. Deuprey, 66 Cal. 170, but the rule is otherwise when the order of the court was prematurely or inadvertently made; Dorland v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 486, holding that the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes but one motion for a new trial, and the order thereunder is final so far as the superior court is concerned; Lang v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 493, deciding that where a motion for a new trial was stricken off the calendar, that such action of the court was equivalent to a denial of the motion, and that the court could not afterward set its ruling aside and grant a rehearing; and Carpenter v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 597, holding that the rule is not affected by the fact that terms of court are abolished. Whitbeck v. Montana etc. Ry. Co., 21 Mont. 107, 108, applying rule to appealable order granting judgment on pleadings. In Lake v. Bender, 18 Nev. 374, the leading case was distinguished on the ground that there was not an intimation in the statutes of Nevada that the power of the trial court is not coextensive with that of the appellate court in the matter of granting new trials. But the leading case is approved in Crosby v. North Bonanza M. Co., 23 Nev. 76. Also, cited and approved in Burnham v. Spokane Mercantile Co., 18 Wash. 211, 212.

Remedy.—The proper and only redress is an appeal to the supreme court, p. 454.

Approved in People v. Center, 61 Cal. 194; Goyhinech v. Goyhinech, 80 Cal. 409, deciding that where a judgment or order is itself appealable, the appeal must be taken from such order or judgment, and not from a subsequent order refusing to set it aside; and Crosby v. North Bonanza M. Co., 23 Nev. 76.

43 Cal. 455-458. EX PARTE MURRAY.

Habeas Corpus.—Upon habeas corpus, if the court whose judgment is assailed be one of competent jurisdiction to render a final judgment, the appellate court will only inquire if the judgment as rendered be upon its face certain and definite in terms, so that it may be known what punishment the prisoner is to suffer, p. 457.

The rule of the leading case is approved by the cases citing it. The sentence of the court is sufficient which shows the offense of which the defendant had been convicted, and the penalty imposed: Ex parte Raye, 63 Cal. 492. Where the judgment in the record shows sentence for petit larceny, second offense, it is good: Ex parte Young Ah Gow, 73 Cal. 442. A judgment is sufficient as stating the general offense "murder," although the degree of the murder is not given: People v. McNulty, 93 Cal. 444. A judgment is sufficient which recites "that whereas, the said Geo. Stephen, having been duly convicted in this court of the crime of establishing and carrying on a saloon, and there selling and giving away malt liquors without a license," et cetera; Ex parte Stephen, 114 Cal. 283. All that is necessary is that the judgment shall sufficiently express that which is adjudged; it need contain no recital of the facts upon which it is based: People v. Kelly, 120 Cal. 273. A judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction, valid upon its face, is an unanswerable return to a writ of habeas corpus, issued for the release of a person imprisoned by virtue of such judgment: Smith v. Hess, 91 Ind. 429. If a magistrate be an officer de facto, his judgments will be as unquestionable in collateral proceedings by habeas corpus as if he were a magistrate de jure: Parks, Petr. for Writ of Habeas Corpus, 3 Mont. 432. A person held in custody under a regular commitment of a justice of the peace, will not be discharged on habeas corpus, unless it appears that the jurisdiction of the justice has been exceeded, or the commitment issued without authority of any judgment, order, a decree of any court: Ex parte Winston, 9 Nev. 75.

Jurisdiction of Police Court—Collateral Attack.—The police court of San Francisco is not of inferior jurisdiction in the sense that upon mere collateral inquiry nothing is to be intended in support of its judgment, when rendered in a particular case, included by general definition in that class of criminal cases over which jurisdiction has been conferred upon it by law, p. 458.

Overruled.—Mere dictum: Ex parte Kearney, 55 Cal. 214, 216, holding that police court of San Francisco is of inferior jurisdiction, and the evidence of its proceedings must affirmatively show jurisdiction of the person of the defendant and over the subject matter.

43 Cal. 458-467. VASSAULT v. EDWARDS.

Specific Performance.—A contract will not be specifically enforced unless it is mutual, p. 464.

The general rule of the leading case approved in the cases citing it. A contract calling for the exercise of personal skill cannot be specifically enforced: Sturgis v. Galindo, 59 Cal. 31; 43 Am. Rep. 239; and Lattin v.

Hazard, 91 Cal. 91. The rule as to the inability of courts to compel specific performance of a contract for "personal services" is not applicable where the personal services have been fully or substantially performed: King v. Gildersleeve, 79 Cal. 510. An acknowledged executory contract of a married woman for the sale of her separate real estate is not enforceable against her, and cannot be specifically enforced by her against the vendee: Ranbury v. Arnold, 9 Cal. 608. But an original lack of mutuality in the right to specific performance will not preclude the enforcement of the contract, where this want has been removed at the time the action is brought; Sayward v. Houghton, 119 Cal. 548. Cited in Claypool v. Board of School Commissioners, 132 Ind. 271, in which the rule is discussed, especially as regards exceptions thereto. Optional contracts are almost uniformly enforced after the one who has had the privilege of accepting them has exercised his privilege in such a mode as to bind himself by the contract. From that moment it becomes mutual: 5 Am. St. Rep. 113, extended note. For other citations under this rule see cases collected under syllabi four and five.

An executory contract for the sale of real estate, signed by the vendor alone satisfies the requirements of the statute of frauds, p. 464.

Rule approved in the citations following: McDonald v. Huff, 77 Cal. 282; Scott v. Glenn, 87 Cal. 225; Cavanaugh v. Casselman, 88 Cal. 549, 551; Nason v. Lingle, 143 Cal. 367, but holding rule as to mutuality of remedy inapplicable under facts stated; McPherson v. Fargo, 10 S. Dak. 616, 66 Am. St. Rep. 727, holding vendee bound under such contract when he accepts and records it, even without his signature; Meux v. Hogue, 91 Cal. 447, holding that although it is unnecessary for the vendor of real property to subscribe the agreement for its sale, yet where the agreement is made through agents acting under verbal authority, subject to the approval of the owner, it is necessary that the vendor should know its contents and approve and ratify it before it becomes binding on the other party: Scott v. Glenn, 98 Cal. 171, deciding that the signature of vendor to the contract, taken in connection with a delivery thereof to the vendee, and a partial payment thereunder, binds both parties: Peevey v. Houghton, 72 Miss. 924; 48 Am. St. Rep. 594; and Ide v. Leisler, 10 Mont. 15; 24 Am. St. Rep. 22. See, also, 7 Am. Dec. 290, note; and 5 Am. St. Rep. 113, note.

In an action to enforce an agreement required by the statute of frauds to be in writing, an averment that the agreement was made is sufficient, without alleging that it was reduced to writing and signed, p. 463.

The citations show this to be a settled rule of pleading. Where, under the statute, an agreement is required to be in writing, such agreement, if in other respects properly pleaded, will be presumed to have been in writing for the purpose of testing the sufficiency of the pleadings: Reagan v. Justice's Court, 75 Cal. 255.

Exception.—An exception to the rule arises in cases where the contract must necessarily be in writing to confer jurisdiction: Reagan v. Justice's Court, 75 Cal. 255. Leading case approved in Emerson v. Bergin, 76 Cal. 202; Broder v. Conklin, 77 Cal. 336, holding that a defendant relying upon the defense of the statute of frauds must plead it; and Bradford Investment Co. v. Joost, 117 Cal. 207, expressly affirming the rule. Cited, also, in 16 Am. Dec. 149, note; and 86 Am. Dec. 685, note.

Specific Performance.—If under an executory contract for the sale of land, the time for completion of the purchase is extended, an acceptance by the vendee of the vendor's offer within a reasonable time makes a binding contract of sale, which may be specifically enforced, p. 464.

Cited and a similar holding made in Ide v. Leisler, 10 Mont. 14; 24 Am. St. Rep. 21; Spires v. Urbahn, 124 Cal. 111, as reviewing Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 404, granting specific performance in such cases though mutuality did not exist originally. Approved in Johnston v. Trippe, 33 Fed. Rep. 536.

An executory contract of sale, when its terms are accepted and acted upon by the vendee, becomes a binding contract of sale, p. 464.

Approved in Gordon v. Darnell, 5 Colo. 305; Byers v. Denver C. R. Co., 13 Colo. 556; and Weaver v. Burr, 31 W. Va. 775, dissenting opinion of Snyder, J.

Where time is of the essence of the contract, the court has no power to extend it, p. 463.

Acknowledgment of Married Woman.—If the certificate of acknowledgment of the deed of a married woman for her separate property does not state that she was examined by the notary without the hearing of her husband, and that she was made acquainted with the contents of the instrument, it is radically defective and void as to her, p. 272.

The general rule that the acknowledgment of a married woman is an essential part of the execution of a deed by her, and that to make the acknowledgment valid the provisions of the statute must be strictly complied with, is approved by the following cases: Leonis v. Lazzarovich, 55 Cal. 58, holding that a court of equity cannot reform a certificate of acknowledgment; Hand v. Hand, 68 Cal. 140; Bollinger v. Manning, 79 Cal. 11; Wambole v. Foote, 2 Dak. Ter. 23, holding that the private examination of a married woman is personal, and is a matter in which she cannot be represented by another; and A. S. & L. Assn. v. Burghardt, 19 Mont. 326, 61 Am. St. Rep. 508, holding that where a mortgage of a homestead was void unless executed by the husband and wife, the acknowledgment was an essential part of the execution by the wife.

Abandonment of Land.—An attempted sale of land which fails because of a defect in the deed is not an abandonment. There cannot be an abandonment to a particular person or for a consideration, p. 476.

Abandonment is a matter of intention, and there is no such thing as an abandonment to a particular person or for a consideration; Middle Creek D. Co. v. Henry, 15 Mont. 577, an action to determine water rights. Cited, also, in 40 Am. Dec. 465, note; and 51 Am. Rep. 460, note.

General Citations.—Cited in the same case, after, 73 Cal. 337, to the point that on the death of the husband, the wife and children became tenants in common in the common property. Same case, 73 Cal. 339, where the court referred to the general supposition of the court in the case before, that an unacknowledged lease for a term of years by a married woman was valid; but on consideration the court held it created only a tenancy at will. Same case, 73 Cal. 344, the court apparently referring to the holding of the case before, that actual possession of land was necessary to entitle a party to the benefits of the Van Ness Ordinance.

Profane Swearing.—A municipal legislative body if empowered by the legislature to prohibit or suppress practices against good morals or public decency, may by ordinance, punish the uttering of profane language, whether uttered frequently or only once by the same person, p. 480.

So an ordinance establishing fire limits in San Francisco is valid: McCloskey v. Kreling, 76 Cal. 512. Cited, also, in 34 Am. Dec. 642, note.

Ross*, 67 Cal. 602. Where a statement was settled and certified according to law, without any objection taken, or right to object thereafter reserved, any irregularity in the proceeding upon the motion was waived: Savings and Loan Society v. Moore, 68 Cal. 158. Approved in Schiefferly v. Tapia, 68 Cal. 185, where an objection that a notice of intention to move for a new trial was not filed in time was deemed waived; Simpson v. Budd, 91 Cal. 491, where the court say that, "it has been assumed if not directly decided, that the time for giving notice of motion for a new trial, as well as for every other step to be taken in relation thereto, may be waived or extended by consent."

Attorneys—Substitution of.—The proceedings in a cause on behalf of the parties thereto must be conducted by their respective attorneys until their authority is revoked, or other attorneys substituted, p. 491.

But in Shirley v. Burch, 16 Oreg. 8, it was held that a notice of appeal is sufficient, although signed by attorneys who were not the attorneys of the appellants below, and no substitution had been made in the manner provided by the Civil Code. Cited, also, in 76 Am. Dec. 256, note.

Evidence.—A defendant is not injured by the admission of parol evidence to establish title to real estate, when written testimony is also introduced to prove the same title, and the parol testimony does not add to or contradict it, p. 489.

Rep. 382, holding that an act giving sub-contractors a lien on the building and land for the amount of their claim for services or materials, without regard to the amount still due the principal contractor and limited only by the original contract price to be paid by the owner, is not unconstitutional; Griffith v. Maxwell, 20 Wash. 412, as to provision for attorney's fees in such law.

Mechanic's Lien.—If a person claiming a mechanic's lien signs the verification attached to the claim this is a sufficient signing of the claim, p. 521.

Cited in Deatherage v. Woods, 37 Kan. 62, holding that the signing of the verification by one member of the firm is sufficient; and in Pain v. Isaacs, 10 Wash. 175, deciding that the statute does not require the claims to be signed at all, if it appears in the statement who the claimants are; but the court apparently rely upon the opinion of Crockett, J., dissenting in part, p. 522, rather than upon the opinion of the court.

43 Cal. 557-560. PEOPLE v. GIBBONS.

Preliminary Examination of Prisoner.—A justice of the peace has no authority to administer an oath to a prisoner, upon his preliminary examination, nor to hear or receive testimony from him in that proceeding, p. 559.

Rule changed by code.—Under the code a person accused of crime may become a witness for or against himself at a preliminary examination, and his testimony may be used in evidence against him on his subsequent trial: People v. Kelly, 47 Cal. 125. The rule laid down in People v. Kelly, supra, approved in State v. Glass, 50 Wis. 222; 38 Am. Rep. 347.

43 Cal. 560-564. PEOPLE v. BURT.

Repeal by Implication.—Where a subsequent act is repugnant to a prior one, the last operates, without any repealing clause, as a repeal of the first, p. 564.

Approved in People v. Sargent, 44 Cal. 432, holding that an act authorizing the levy of a tax for school purposes not to exceed fifty cents on the hundred dollars, is in conflict with and repealed by a subsequent act providing that the levy shall not exceed thirty-five cents; In the Matter of Yick Wo, 68 Cal. 304, deciding that, in order for a subsequent act to repeal the former, it should appear that it was extended to take the place of or repeal the former, or that the two acts are so inconsistent that force and effect cannot be given both; Ex parte Henshaw, 73 Cal. 506, dissenting opinion of Thornton, J., and Busby v. Riley, 6 S. Dak. 405. Referred to in Barden v. Wells, 14 Mont. 464, but distinguished on the ground that the statutes in question were not inconsistent. Cited, also, in 14 Am. Dec. 210, note.

If an act is properly enrolled and authenticated, and is deposited with the secretary of state, the courts will not look into the journals of the legislature to see whether or how the bill is passed, p. 564.

Cited in County v. Colgan, 132 Cal. 268, 269, noted under Sherman v. Story, 30 Cal. 266; Narregang v. Brown Co., 14 S. Dak. 364, journals of two houses of legislature are not competent to impeach validity of statute enrolled and authenticated by proper officers. Rule approved in Board of Commissioners v. Burford, 93 Ind. 385; Ex parte Wren, 63 Miss. 533, 56 Am. Rep. 830, where it was held that the journals of the legislature are not admissible in evidence to show that a statute does not contain amendments which were adopted; State v. Jones, 6 Wash. 476; and Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 675, holding that it is not competent to show from the journal of either house of Congress that an act duly authenticated, approved, and deposited did not pass in the precise form in which it was signed by the presiding officers of the two houses and signed by the president. But in Chicot County v. Davies, 40 Ark. 210, a different rule was laid down, and it was held that not only the enrolled bill, but the legislative journals and records and files of the office of the secretary of state, may be looked to in ascertaining whether the act was duly passed. Cited, also, in 51 Am. Dec. 618, note; 85 Am. Dec. 357, note; and 47 Am. St. Rep. 818, extended note.

43 Cal. 564-569. GORDON v. SWAN.

Contract—Option.—Where a person is given the privilege of prospecting a mine with the option of purchasing the same at a fixed price, he does not become liable for the purchase money or refusing to consummate the sale, p. 568.

Rule held inapplicable in Wilcoxson v. Stitt, 65 Cal. 597, 52 Am. Rep. 311, deciding that under a contract for the sale of land in which the vendor agrees to convey upon payment, and which provides that if the vendee shall fail to make such payment, he shall forfeit all right to the land, and the vendor shall be released from all obligations to convey, the vendor has the option to avoid or enforce the contract.

43 Cal. 569-573. BORLAND v. LEWIS.

Forfeiture of Swamp Lands.—A failure to pay interest annually, and to pay the principal in five years, works a forfeiture under the Act of 1855, and the state may resell, p. 573.

So if a franchise to construct a street railroad is granted by the legislature, with a condition that it shall be forfeited if the track is not laid within a specified time, a failure to lay the track within such specified time works a forfeiture: O. R. R. Co. v. O. B. & F. V. R. R. Co., 45 Cal. 377; 13 Am. Rep. 188. It is the settled law of this state that when a forfeiture is declared by statute, the title to the thing immediately vests in the state, upon the happening of the event or the commission of the offense for which the forfeiture is declared and such forfeiture need not be established judicially: Upham v. Hosking, 62 Cal. 258. But in the absence of a statutory provision or municipal ordinance declaring a forfeiture for a failure to complete a sidetrack within a reasonable time, the right of the company to the use of the streets can be terminated only by a judgment of forfeiture in an action commenced directly for that purpose and cannot be considered in an action of ejectment: Arcata v. Arcata & M. R. R. Co., 92 Cal. 646. Cited and approved in State v. Emmert, 19 Kan. 548, holding that a purchaser of school lands who fails to pay interest or principal when due loses all interest in the land. Distinguished in California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 126 Fed. 44, validity of grant of franchise by city not collaterally attackable by private party in equity on ground of irregularity in exercise of power by city, nor because of failure of grantee to perform conditions imposed.

43 Cal. 573-576. DONAHUE v. GALLAVAN.

Nonsuit—Appeal.—An error in granting a nonsuit is an error of law, and, if excepted to and specified as such, may be reviewed without any specifications of evidence, p. 576.

Rule approved in Schroeder v. Schmidt, 74 Cal. 460, holding that error in granting a nonsuit cannot be reviewed on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the decision; Hammond v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 527; 20 Am. St. Rep. 240; Warner v. Darrow, 91 Cal. 311, expressly affirming the leading case; Toulouse v. Pare, 103 Cal. 252; and Emerson v. Eldorado Ditch Co., 18 Mont. 257. Referred to in Brown v. Warren, 16 Nev. 232. General principle approved in Sanford v. Duluth & Dakota Elevator Co., 2 N. Dak. 10; and Sioux Banking Co. v. Kendall, 6 S. Dak. 545.

Constructive Possession.—One who has actual possession of a part of tract of land under a deed conveying the whole has constructive possession of the whole tract, p. 575.

Approved in Watt v. Wright, 66 Cal. 208, holding that where a party enters under color of title upon an open tract of grazing land and pastures sheep upon it during the pasturing season—the tract being unoccupied during the rest of the year—he has sufficient possession under the statute of limitations. Cited, also, in 85 Am. Dec. 125, note.

43 Cal. 577-580. SHARP v. BAIRD.

Attachment.—In order to create a lien, the requisite acts prescribed by the statute must be performed by the officer and must appear on such officer's return, p. 580.

Approved in Watt v. Wright, 66 Cal. 208, holding that where land is not occupied, a failure of the officer to post upon the land a copy of the description of the land in connection with a copy of the writ of attachment, and of the notice that the land had been attached, is fatal and no lien is created; Schwartz v. Cowell, 71 Cal. 306; Brusie v. Gates, 80 Cal. 467, holding a general return by a constable, that he attached certain described real estate, is not sufficient to show a valid levy; Rudolph v. Saunders, 111 Cal. 235, where the rule was applied to an attachment of personal property; and Graham v. Reno, 5 Colo. App. 334; Ames v. Parrott, 61 Neb. 852, noted under Main v. Tappiner, 43 Cal. 206. Referred to in First National Bank v. Jasper, 71 Iowa, 488. Rule questioned in Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28 Kan. 835. The court expressly withdrew their dissent in Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 29 Kan. 515. Rule of the leading case denied in Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 42 Kan. 194, 195, 201. Cited, also, in 79 Am. Dec. 174, note.

Idem.—Sheriff's Deed takes effect by relation from the date of attachment, pp. 578, 579.

Followed in Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 174. Cited in Holter etc. Co. v. Ontario etc. Co., 24 Mont. 193, holding levy of attachment not vitiated by failure to file transcript of judgment thereafter.

43 Cal. 581-586. LORD v. HOUGH.

Husband and Wife.—Husband cannot make a voluntary conveyance of any portion of the community property, with the intent to deprive the wife of her claims, in anticipation of divorce, any more than he could make a fraudulent disposition in anticipation of her widowhood, p. 585.

Wife cannot maintain an action while the marriage bond exists to set aside a transfer of the common property, made by the husband for the purpose of defrauding her: Greiner v. Greiner, 58 Cal. 120, distinguishing the leading case on the ground that the marriage bond had ceased. Morrison, J., dissented in 58 Cal. 123, relying upon the leading case. A wife deserted by her husband may sue to avoid transfers made by her husband of his separate property, with a design to defeat her right to maintenance: Murray v. Murray, 115 Cal. 273; 56 Am.

St. Rep. 101, referring to the leading case. A conveyance of real estate made by a husband during coverture for the purpose of defeating the wife's marital rights are fraudulent and void as against her: Walker v. Walker, 66 N. H. 392; 49 Am. St. Rep. 617. Cited, also, in 89 Am. Dec. 220, note.

A voluntary disposition of a portion of the community property, reasonable in reference to the whole amount, may be made by the husband, in the absence of a fraudulent intent, p. 585.

Deed of gift of a portion of the community property is not void per se: Corker v. Corker, 95 Cal. 309. Cited, also, in 73 Am. Dec. 537, note; 89 Am. Dec. 205, note; and 24 Am. Dec. 492, note.

Pendency of a suit for divorce does not of itself interrupt the husband's power of disposition of the community property, p. 585.

Approved in Ray v. Ray, 1 Idaho, 580. Cited in Sun Ins. Co. v. White, 123 Cal. 200, sustaining bona fide mortgage by husband pending divorce suit.

43 Cal. 590-596. LICK v. AUSTIN.

Double Taxation.—The mortgagor cannot complain of double taxation if the land subject to the mortgage is taxed, and the debt secured by the mortgage is also taxed, p. 594.

Denied.—If a debt for money lent, which is secured by mortgage, is taxed and the mortgaged property is also taxed, it is a double taxation, and a violation of the constitution: Sav. and Loan Society v. Austin, 46 Cal. 483, 485 (by Crockett, J., Niles, J., concurring).

Taxation.—Solvent debt secured by mortgage is property for the purpose of taxation within the meaning of the constitution, p. 594.

Approved in Sav. and Loan Society v. Austin, 46 Cal. 492, and Lamar v. Palmer, 18 Fla. 150, holding that promissory notes and other credits were property, and as property liable to be taxed, and further deciding that a tax upon notes secured by mortgage upon land, the land mortgaged also being taxed, does not present a case of double taxation. Referred to in Attorney General v. Supervisors, 71 Mich. 22; and State v. Carson Savings Bank, 17 Nev. 156, holding that taxation of note secured by mortgage and of the land mortgaged is not double taxation. Cited, also, in 74 Am. Dec. 93, note.

Res Adjudicata.—An action merely commenced, and then dismissed without trial, determines nothing and concludes no one, p. 602.

A dismissal of an election contest before citation is served upon the defendant, and before any appearance has been made in the action, does not operate as a retraxit, and is no bar to the institution of another action: Lord v. Dunster, 79 Cal. 489. Dismissal of an action by leave of the court, without the consent of the opposite party, and which was expressly entered as "without prejudice to the commencement of another action," is not a bar to a subsequent suit: Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 668.

A Mortgage is Merged in the decree of foreclosure, and a party who enters under the decree cannot be regarded as a mortgagee in possession, p. 603.

Followed in Black v. Gerichten, 58 Cal. 57, holding that a judgment docketed for a deficiency after a sale of the mortgaged premises, is not a lien on the premises sold, if purchased by any person other than the mortgage debtor.

Foreclosure of Mortgage instituted against a mortgagor alone, cannot affect the title of a vendee of the mortgagor vesting between the delivery of mortgage and commencement of foreclosure suit, p. 601.

The foreclosure of a prior mortgage lien upon real property, without making a subsequent judgment lien creditor a party, in nowise affects the rights of the latter: De Lashmutt v. Sellwood, 10 Oreg. 326.

Estoppel.—Where one person holds the legal title to land claimed by another, but, believing that the other had the superior title, surrendered his possession thereto, such withdrawal, in the absence of fraud or deception, will not estop him from setting up his title later, p. 602.

Referred to in State to the use of State v. Berning, 74 Mo. 96, holding that an administrator is not estopped from reclaiming notes illegally pledged by him for his own purposes to a person having notice of their true ownership. Cited, also, in 38 Am. Rep. 316, note.

Cited in Gridley v. Dhorn, 57 Cal. 79, 42 Am. 43 Cal. 617-625. SCHMITT v. GIOVANARI.

Mexican Grant.—A decree confirming a Mexican grant vests the legal title in the confirmees and their assigns, and not in the assigns of their grantor, p. 623.

Followed in Hartley v. Brown, 46 Cal. 204, holding that if the confirmation of a Mexican grant is made to the children of the grantee, they have the legal title, and they and their assigns will prevail in ejectment against one claiming title under a sale made by the administrator of the grantee, when no equitable defense is set up, and Hartley v. Brown, 51 Cal. 467, to the same effect. Cited in Bihler v. Platt, 52 Cal. 552, where the principle was adhered to.

Decree of confirmation which declared the confirmation should be without prejudice to the legal representatives of the original grantee, and should inure to the benefit of any person who owned the land by any title derived from the original grantee, gives a perfect title to a purchaser from the confirmee, who bought from him before he presented his petition for confirmation, p. 625.

Recoupment of Damages.—Joint and separate debts cannot be set off against each other, p. 635.

Flavel*, 12 Saw. 465; 31 Fed. Rep. 392.

Cited in Fealey v. Fealey, 104 Cal. 360, 43 Am. St. Rep. 115, holding that an order setting apart a homestead to the widow of a decedent, no homestead having been declared during the lifetime of deceased, operates to vest in the widow a title to the land set apart out of the community property.

Title by Sheriff's Sale—Evidence to Contradict Record.—In action to impeach the title to property acquired by an innocent purchaser at judicial sale, the plaintiff cannot contradict the record by proof that there was in fact no service of summons, or that the judgment was obtained by fraud, pp. 651, 652.

Approved in McCauley v. Fulton, 44 Cal. 361, deciding that upon collateral attack recitals in the judgment of service upon the defendants are conclusive of the question of jurisdiction of the person when rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction. Affirmed in Jones v. Gillis, 45 Cal. 543, and Stokes v. Geddes, 46 Cal. 19. Distinguished in Martin v. Parsons, 49 Cal. 98, and holding that while a court of equity will not vacate a judgment obtained by the wrongful act of a party without service of summons, still it will interfere to prevent the party thus obtaining it from using it as an instrument of injustice. Cited in dissenting opinion of Crockett, J., Mayo v. Haynie, 50 Cal. 75. Proof of the execution of a deed, and of the judgment and execution are sufficient for recovery in ejectment against the debtor: Kelley v. Desmond, 63 Cal. 519. Referred to in Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal. 400. Domestic judgment of a superior court must be presumed to have been rendered with jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, when offered in evidence in another action, although there is no proof of service of summons, and although the judgment itself is silent concerning jurisdiction over the defendant.
